Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If they were given to the gentleman he could.

Mr. HOOK. Certainly; but that is the duty of the energetic minority leader. I presume that from the quotations of these great Republican leaders he will be firmly convinced of the success of this and be fair and accept the report that the committee will give to him.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman in opening his argument objected to our going to the country. What is wrong about actual knowledge from the country about any program?

Mr. HOOK. Let me ask the gentleman in reply if he has been convinced from the report of his committee, a committee that went to the country, that the triple A is a success.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No; I could not say that. The committee has not submitted a report for it has not finished its work.

I feel the gentleman is entirely out of order at this early date to criticize a committee which is making a genuine effort to get information to solve, what the gentleman from Michigan I am sure realizes, is one of the most important problems in this country—the revitalization of agriculture. The gentleman does not for one minute contend agriculture does not need any consideration, does he?

Mr. HOOK. I certainly do not. I voted for parity payments. Where did the gentleman stand on that?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is quite all right, but is the gentleman satisfied to stand with the situation as it is?

Mr. HOOK. I am satisfied that the farmer is in better condition under this farm program than any program that has ever been presented to this Congress, and it is a permanent program which, if followed, will bring the farmer out of the ditch that he was in when this administration tackled his problem.

It is a permanent program and if put into effect will bring the farmers out of the ditch all over the country.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That does not answer the question. I am getting back to the committee. The gentleman is not opposed to this committee going to the farmers and getting information in the hope it may do something to help agriculture?

Mr. HOOK. It would not do me any good anyhow. I did not have anything to do with the appointing of the members and I would not have any chance to oppose them.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But the gentleman does not find any fault with seeking information, does he?

Mr. HOOK. I do not find fault with the committee. I find fault with the fact the distinguished minority leader, before he had the facts, said that the farm program was a demonstrated failure. Why did he say it was a demonstrated failure before he had the facts?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The farmers of the country believe that.

Mr. HOOK. Oh, no! With 85 percent of the farmers of this Nation cooperating, does the gentleman think they believe in it?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The statistics in reference to farm income and farm expenses will demonstrate that what I say is true.

Mr. HOOK. The farm income has doubled in the last few years.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The statistics do not show that.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I am particularly interested in the fact that the consumers of this Nation are protected against the speculators and the high prices that are the result of speculation. The consumers of this Nation, through this program, can be assured of a stable low price for consumer goods. Generally throughout the Nation this program has been accepted. In Michigan for several years the farm leaders and those interested in the political aspect tried to break down the program, but finally had to accept it, and are now using it for their own political advantage by keeping the facts from the farmers and leading them to believe that they, as Republican leaders, are responsible for the fine agricultural program that now exists because of the Federal A. A. A. I trust the farmers will realize who their friends are and act accordingly. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman going to comment on what has happened here right now?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. That is what I intended to do.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I know the gentleman is a very fair Member of the House and I do not like to anticipate what he might say, but I do not think it is quite fair, if we have a colloquy in the House, to have a Member extend his remarks at this point. I am willing that the gentleman get some time and state it right on the floor at the present moment.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I see the justice of the proposal stated by the minority leader and I withdraw my request.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech of the Honorable Louis Johnson, Assistant Secretary of War, on the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans, delivered at the city of New Orleans, La.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Brooks]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, and at the conclusion of any previous orders heretofore made, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Brooks]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a number of tables of statistics.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address made by me before the Columbia Historical Society of Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to the order heretofore made, adjourned until Monday, January 22, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

6194. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Ester Krops and sundry other individuals, petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to the Dies committee; to the Committee on Rules.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JANUARY 19, 1940

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Holy Father, who hast led Thy children in all the ages with the Fire and Cloud: Preserve us from all faithless fears, and grant that no clouds of our mortality may hide from us the light of that love which is immortal. Thou hast said in Thy Holy Word, "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you"; and now we commit to the gracious keeping of Thy never-failing care and love for this life and the life to come all who are near and dear unto us, knowing that Thou wilt do for them and for those who keep love's holy vigil more than we can pray for. Companion with us, blessed Lord, through life's uncertain days, that when the evening comes and all our strivings cease we may know the sweetness and the calm wherewith Thou givest Thy beloved sleep till the waking of the dawn.

"One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er;
I am nearer home today
Than I ever have been before.

"Nearer my Father's house,
Where the many mansions be;
Nearer the great white throne,
Nearer the crystal sea.

"Nearer the bounds of life,
Where we lay our burdens down;
Nearer leaving the cross;
Nearer gaining the crown.

"But lying darkly between,
Winding adown through the night,
Is the silent, unknown stream
That leads at last to the light.

"Father, be near when my feet
Are slipping o'er the brink.
For it may be I am nearer home,
Nearer now than I think."

In the dear Saviour's name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 18, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 7922. An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 419. Joint resolution to extend for 3 additional months the time during which articles imported free of duty for exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition or the New York World's Fair may be sold or abandoned.

SPECIAL ATTORNEYS, ETC., DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Attorney General, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report showing the special assistants employed during the period from July 1, 1939, to January 1, 1940, under the appropriation "Compensation of special attorneys, etc., Department of Justice," which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LAWS AND ORDINANCES OF MUNICIPAL COUNCILS, VIRGIN ISLANDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate three letters from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of laws and ordinances enacted or adopted by the Municipal Councils of St. Croix and St. Thomas and St. John, V. I.; also transmitting a complete set of all such laws and ordinances enacted by the municipal councils above referred to, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

CONTRACTS FOR SCIENTIFIC EQUIPMENT, MARITIME COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the United States Maritime Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the contracts or subcontracts for scientific equipment used for communication and navigation executed by the Commission during the calendar year 1939, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from the Council of the Boston Branch, Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice, Boston, Mass., signed by Elbridge F. Stoneham, secretary, praying for the enactment of pending antilynching legislation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of Rev. Rembert Gilman Smith, D. D., of Tulsa, Okla., praying for the holding of open hearings before the committees of the Senate in connection with the consideration of nominations, especially nominations to the Supreme Court of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from J. D. Battle, executive secretary, National Coal Association, Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 2420) relating to certain inspections and investigations in coal mines for the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions, accidents, and occupational diseases therein, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOLT presented letters in the nature of petitions from sundry citizens of Chester, Hendricks, Colliers, Clarksburg, Williamson, Fairview, Morgantown, Salem, Weston, Hundred, Shinnston, Clendenin, Grafton, New Martinsville, and Kenova, all in the State of West Virginia, praying for the enactment of Senate bill 517, to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages over the radio, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented a resolution adopted by the City Council and mayor of Cambridge, Mass., favoring repeal of the mandatory provisions relating to 30-day furlough after 18 months' employment on the W. P. A., or amendment of the law so as to restore to employment immediately on expiration of the 30-day furlough all persons who have been re-certified and are eligible for reemployment, and also the prompt appropriation of necessary funds for relief, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 194) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make a study of a tract of forest land situated in Lincoln County, State of Oregon, reported it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MINTON:

S. 3157. A bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cannelton, Perry County, Ind.; to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 3158. A bill granting a pension to Allie Friend Allen; and

S. 3159. A bill granting a pension to Flora Deutschman Whitson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

S. 3160. A bill to amend section 1 (b) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. DAVIS:

S. 3161. A bill relating to disability and death benefits for Reserve officers of the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bill and joint resolution were each read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 7922. An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

H. J. Res. 419. Joint resolution to extend for 3 additional months the time during which articles imported free of duty for exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition or the New York World's Fair may be sold or abandoned; to the Committee on Finance.

ARTICLE BY SENATOR BURKE ON DEFENDERS OF AMERICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT

[Mr. BURKE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article written by him, entitled "Militant Defenders of Our Form of Government," published in the January issue of the American Czech magazine, which appears in the Appendix.]

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

[Mr. TRUMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Mrs. Charles S. Demaree, of the Missouri League of Women Voters, on the subject Trade Agreements—Your Affair and Mine, and an editorial in the Kansas City Times of January 15, 1940, under the caption "Misleading Import Figures," which appear in the Appendix.]

ORDER TO DISPENSE WITH THE CALL OF THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is closed. The calendar, under rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, unless there are Senators who desire to be recognized or to insert matters in the RECORD, I shall move that the Senate adjourn.

RESOLUTIONS INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, Calendar No. 1121, Senate Resolution 174, which was submitted by me at a previous session of the Senate, and which provides for an investigation of negotiations by American citizens with the Mexican Government concerning certain oil sales, has long since been abandoned. I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is another resolution following the one referred to by the Senator from West Virginia which was submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. Ought they not both to go the same route?

Mr. NEELY. I think that would be an appropriate course.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from New Hampshire is present. In view of the fact that, on request of the Senator from West Virginia, a resolution which he submitted with reference to investigating certain oil situations in Mexico has been indefinitely postponed, because it has been abandoned and was reported adversely, I wondered whether the next resolution on the calendar, which was submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire, might not take the same route.

Mr. BRIDGES. That would be acceptable to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then, Mr. President, I make the request that Calendar No. 1122, Senate Resolution 177, be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is indefinitely postponed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Jessie Searle to be postmaster at Redrock, Okla., which had been passed over at previous executive sessions.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that that nomination again be passed over, and as to the other nominations of postmasters on the calendar I ask unanimous consent that they be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, with the exception noted, the post-office nominations on the calendar are confirmed en bloc. That completes the calendar.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn until tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Saturday, January 20, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE

SATURDAY, JANUARY 20, 1940

The Chaplain, Rev. Z^cBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and eternal God, whose mercies cannot be numbered: We thank Thee for him, our fine companion in this fellowship, who determined not merely to live but to know, and from whose intrepid soul multitudes have drawn courage for the struggles of life. And now for him time has ebbed away back to the deep whence it flowed, and, as death has folded its dim mysteries over the tired body, do Thou receive him into those holy habitations, where with Thee he may go from strength to strength in that life of perfect service.

For her, his beloved companion of the years, we ask Thy tenderest comfort, with the assurance that, though today seems to have naught but crosses in it, parting and desolation, longing and praying in the sleepless dark, nevertheless there is Thy promise shining on every tear, the grace of Christ on every cross, the eternal hope on every sacrifice, the love that triumphs over death, a song that never can be silenced, and the joy that cannot die. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 19, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR WILLIAM E. BORAH

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, last night at 8:45 p. m. remorseless events conspired unkindly to take from us our beloved friend and colleague Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH.

Further words from me at this time could take away nothing from the profound sense of futility which the Nation feels today. Later I shall speak at length upon the life and services of our late beloved colleague. At this time I offer resolutions for which I ask immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 220) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH, late a Senator from the State of Idaho.

Resolved, That a committee of 10 Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator, to be held in the Senate Chamber on Monday, January 22, 1940, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., and that the Senate attend the same.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives, transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased, and invite the House of Representatives to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of the Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps (through the Secretary of State), the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will name the committee of 10 Senators at a later time.

The VICE PRESIDENT subsequently, under the second resolving clause, appointed the following Senators to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator: Mr. CLARK of Idaho, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. NYE, Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. WHITE, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. BURKE, Mr. MINTON, and Mr. LODGE.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the funeral services of the late Senator BORAH on Monday next the Senate, as a further mark of respect to his memory, shall stand adjourned until Tuesday, January 23, 1940, at 12 o'clock m.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect and reverence to the memory of our departed colleague, I move that the Senate do now adjourn until 12:15 p. m. on Monday next.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 22, 1940, at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 22, 1940

The Senate met at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open and all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid: Cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy holy spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee and worthily magnify Thy holy name. Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

ATTENDANCE OF A SENATOR

ELLISON D. SMITH, a Senator from the State of South Carolina, appeared in his seat today.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—THE LATE SENATOR BORAH

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, communicated to the Senate the resolutions of the House adopted as a tribute to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH, late a Senator from the State of Idaho.

The message announced that the House of Representatives accepted the invitation of the Senate to attend the funeral services of the late Senator BORAH in the Senate Chamber today, and that the Speaker of the House had appointed a committee of 10 Members to act in conjunction with the committee of the Senate heretofore appointed by the Vice President to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR BORAH

The casket containing the body of the deceased Senator had been previously brought into the Senate Chamber and placed in the area in front of the desk, surrounded by many floral tributes. A spray of red roses had been placed on the desk lately occupied by Senator BORAH.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is now in session, pursuant to the resolution previously adopted, to attend the funeral of the late Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH. The invited guests of the Senate will be escorted to the places assigned them.

The committee appointed by the Vice President, on the part of the Senate, to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator, consisting of Mr. CLARK of Idaho, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. NYE, Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. WHITE, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. BURKE, Mr. MINTON, and Mr. LODGE, were seated to the right of the Vice President.

The committee appointed by the Speaker of the House to attend the funeral of the deceased Senator, consisting of Mr. BOEHNE, Mr. HILL, Mr. LEMKE, Mr. MURDOCK of Utah, Mr. WHITE of Idaho, Mr. HULL, Mr. ARNOLD, Mr. CASE of South Dakota, Mr. DWORSHAK, and Mr. THORKELSON, entered the Chamber and took the seats assigned to them.

The Members of the House of Representatives, preceded by the Sergeant at Arms and the Speaker, entered the Senate Chamber. The Speaker was escorted to a seat on the right of the Vice President, and Members of the House were given the seats provided for them.

The members of the Diplomatic Corps entered the Chamber and were seated to the left of the Vice President's desk.

The Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, with Mr. Justice Willis Van Devanter, retired, and Mr. Justice George Sutherland, retired, accompanied by the Marshal, entered the Chamber and were seated in the area to the left of the Vice President's desk.

The Acting Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard entered the Chamber and were seated in the area to the left of the Vice President's desk.

Hon. William E. Lee, appointed by Hon. C. A. Bottolfson, Governor of the State of Idaho, to represent him at the funeral of the deceased Senator, was escorted to the seat provided for him.

Mrs. Borah and relatives and friends of the deceased Senator were seated in the main lobby of the Senate to the left of the Vice President.

Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate, and Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., Chaplain of the House of Representatives, took their places at the Secretary's desk.

The President of the United States, accompanied by his military and naval aides, and the members of his Cabinet, preceded by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, entered the Chamber, and were seated in the area in front and to the right of the Vice President's desk.

Mrs. Henriette Bagger Plum, of the city of Washington, sang Lead, Kindly Light:

"Lead, Kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom,

Lead Thou me on!

The night is dark, and I am far from home—

Lead Thou me on!

Keep Thou my feet; I do not ask to see

The distant scene—one step enough for me.

"I was not ever thus, nor prayed that Thou

Shouldst lead me on.

I loved to choose and see my path; but now

Lead Thou me on!

I loved the garish day, and, spite of fears,

Pride ruled my will; remember not past years.

"So long Thy power hath blessed me, sure it still Will lead me on,
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till
The night is gone;
And with the morn those angel faces smile
Which I have loved long since, and lost a while."

Amen.

The Chaplain of the House of Representatives recited from the ritual of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as follows:

I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth on Me, though he die, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth on Me shall never die.

For we know that if the earthly house of our tabernacle be dissolved, we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens.

And I saw no temple therein. For the Lord God the Almighty and the Lamb are the temple thereof. And the city hath no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine upon it. For the glory of God did lighten it; and the lamp thereof is the Lamb.

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; He leadeth me beside the still waters.

He restoreth my soul; He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil. For Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me.

Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever Thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God. For a thousand years in Thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night. Thou carriest them away as with a flood; they are as a sleep; in the morning they are like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth. So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days. Let Thy work appear unto Thy servants and Thy glory unto their children. And let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us; and establish Thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish Thou it.

*"Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea,*

*"But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep Turns again home.*

*"Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark;*

*"For though from out our bourne of Time and Peace
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar."*

Amen and amen.

The Chaplain of the Senate proceeded with the service, as follows:

Here beginneth the fourteenth chapter of the Gospel according to St. John:

Jesus said:

Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In My Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know. Thomas saith unto Him, Lord, we know not whither Thou goest; and how can we know the way? Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by Me.

I now read a portion of the eighth chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans:

As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God.

We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose.

What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?

Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?

Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

*"O Love that wilt not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in Thee;
I give Thee back the life I owe,
That in Thine ocean depths its flow
May richer, fuller be.*

*"O Light that followest all my way,
I yield my flickering torch to Thee;
My heart restores its borrowed ray,
That in Thy sunshine's blaze its day
May brighter, fairer be.*

*"O Joy that seekest me through pain,
I cannot close my heart to Thee;
I trace the rainbow through the rain,
And feel the promise is not vain
That morn shall tearless be.*

*"O Cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to fly from Thee,
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red Life that shall endless be."*

Amen.

Mrs. Henriette Bagger Plum sang three verses from Abide With Me:

"Abide with me! Fast falls the eventide;
The darkness deepens: Lord, with me abide!
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O abide with me!

"I fear no foe with Thee at hand to bless:
Ills have no weight, and tears no bitterness.
Where is death's sting, where, grave, thy victory?
I triumph still, if Thou abide with me.

"Hold Thou Thy cross before my closing eyes;
Shine through the gloom, and point me to the skies:
Heaven's morning breaks, and earth's vain shadows flee:
In life and death, O Lord, abide with me!"

Amen.

The Chaplain of the Senate offered the following prayer:
*Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name.
Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us.
And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.*
Amen.

O merciful God and Heavenly Father, who hast taught us in Thy Holy Word that Thou dost not willingly afflict or grieve the children of men: Look with Thy loving, tender pity upon the sorrows of this dear one, for whom especially our prayers are offered. May she know that underneath are Thine everlasting arms to protect and to shield her. Grant unto her, dear Lord, by Thine own indwelling, surcease from sorrow, by the knowledge of the eternity and the holiness of Thy love. Comfort her with the blessing from the tender Son of God, who at the tomb of Lazarus wept, so that men said of Him, "Behold how He loved him!" May the spirit of the Father and the Son comfort and sustain her.

Grant that we who share in this sacrament of sorrow may rededicate our lives at this, the altar of our country, in perfect consecrated service to Thee, our God, and to the Nation which we love. We ask it in the name of Him who died and rose again for us, Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

O Lord, Jesus Christ, who by Thy death didst take away the sting of death, grant unto us Thy servants so to follow in faith where Thou hast led the way that we may at length fall asleep peacefully in Thee and awake after Thy likeness through Thy mercy, who livest with the Father and the Holy Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

Almighty God, with whom do live the spirits of those who depart hence in the Lord, and with whom the souls of the faithful, after they are delivered from the burden of the flesh, are in joy and felicity, we yield Thee hearty and humble thanks for the noble example of this, our late companion and beloved friend, who now rests from his labors; and grant that we, with all those who are departed in the true faith of Thy holy name, may have our perfect consummation and bliss in Thine eternal and everlasting glory. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, in whose embrace all creatures live in whatsoever world or condition they be, we beseech Thee for him, Thine own dear child, whose name and dwelling place and every need Thou knowest. Lord, vouchsafe him light and rest, peace and refreshment, joy and consolation in paradise, in the companionship of saints and loved ones, in the presence of Christ, in the ample folds of Thy great love. Grant that his life, so wonderful here, so full of love and tenderness, may yet unfold itself in Thy sight and find sweet employment in the spacious fields of eternity.

If in aught we can minister to his peace, be pleased of Thy love to let this be; and so keep us from every act which may deprive us of the sight of him as soon as our trial time is over or mar the fullness of our joy when the end of the day hath come.

Pardon, O gracious Lord and Father, whatever is amiss in this our prayer, and let Thy will be done, for our will is blind and erring, but Thine is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think; and we only ask in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ our most blessed Lord and Saviour. Amen.

And now, Lord, support us all the day long of this troublous life until the shadows lengthen and the evening comes and the busy world is hushed and the fever of life is over and our work is done. Then in Thy mercy grant us a safe lodging, holy rest, and peace at the last. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chaplain of the Senate pronounced the benediction, as follows:

And may the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep your hearts and minds in the knowledge and the love of God and his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, and the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit be upon you and all who are near and dear unto you, both here and yonder, and grant to them and to you the eternal blessing of God's peace. Amen.

At 1 o'clock p. m., the funeral ceremonies having been concluded, the committee of arrangements of the two Houses and the invited guests retired from the Chamber.

Later in the afternoon, following the adjournment of the Senate, the body of Senator BORAH was taken to the Union Station to be conveyed to Boise, Idaho, for interment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the order previously made by the Senate, and as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator from Idaho, the Senate now stands adjourned until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 22, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou in whose presence our souls take delight, on whom in affliction we call, clear our vision that we may see Thy face behind the darkest providence. Our souls wait in the solemnity of these moments. We pray for the patience of unanswered prayer and for the heart to wait until Thy perfect will shall be known. As today we walk toward Emmaus in sadness and loneliness, help us to see the empty sepulcher and the vision of our glorified Lord beyond the cross.

The laborer's task is over; the battles of the years are past; the human barque, once brave and strong, no longer bears the buffetings of wrenching strains. As our days glide swiftly by, grant that the needy and the suffering may gather strength because of his heroic strife. Forever enfolded in the gracious arms of our blessed Saviour, may the loving companion of the years find rest and peace in these hours of her day and darkness. In the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 18, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 220

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
January 20, 1940.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH, late a Senator from the State of Idaho.

Resolved, That a committee of 10 Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator, to be held in the Senate Chamber on Monday, January 22, 1940, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., and that the Senate attend the same.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives, transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased, and invite the House of Representatives to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber, and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the Members of the Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps (through the Secretary of State), the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn until 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., Monday, January 22, 1940.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 2953. An act authorizing States owning lands or interests therein acquired from the United States to include the same in certain agreements for the conservation of oil and gas resources.

S. J. Res. 153. Joint resolution to approve the action of the Secretary of the Interior in deferring the collection of certain irrigation charges against lands under the Blackfeet Indian irrigation project.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1335. An act relating to the filing of affidavits of prejudice in the District Court for the District of Columbia; and

S. 1919. An act to provide for the acquisition by the United States of the estate of Patrick Henry in Charlotte County, Va., known as Red Hill.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 321

Resolved, That the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities is authorized to continue the investigation begun under authority of House Resolution 282 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and continued under House Resolution 26 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as that conferred upon it by said House Resolution 282 of the Seventy-fifth Congress and shall report to the House as soon as practicable, but not later than January 3, 1942, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations for necessary legislation.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, after "3", strike out "1942" and insert in lieu thereof "1941."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, under the rules, 1 hour is allowed for debate on the resolution just sent to the desk. There is a general demand for additional time for debate. It is agreeable to a majority of the committee that this additional hour of debate be allowed, and the committee has requested me to submit such a request. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that it may be in order to allow an additional hour of debate on this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain excerpts. These are the remarks I had intended to make this afternoon under the special order previously granted me. I have an estimate from the printer as to the extra cost.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, would the gentleman be willing to amend his request so that he might include a newspaper article which shows that the Treasury Department records reveal that the Dies committee aided in the probe of the Christian Front?

Mr. HOOK. I shall be pleased to include that article, and I so modify my request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask its immediate adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 364

Resolved, That the following Members be, and they are hereby, elected to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House of Representatives, to wit: JAMES E. VAN ZANDT, of Pennsylvania; CARL T. CURTIS, of Nebraska; ALBERT E. AUSTIN, of Connecticut.

The resolution was agreed to.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from committee:

JANUARY 22, 1940.

HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,

Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs to take effect at once.

With kindest regards, I am,
Yours truly,

CARL T. CURTIS.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MAGNUSON (at the request of Mr. LEAVY), for 3 days, on account of official business.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1335. An act relating to the filing of affidavits of prejudice in the District Court for the District of Alaska.

S. 1919. An act to provide for the acquisition by the United States of the estate of Patrick Henry in Charlotte County, Va., known as Red Hill.

THE LATE WILLIAM E. BORAH

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow and a sense of keen personal loss that I announce at this time the passing, on January 19, of the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho, WILLIAM E. BORAH. For 33 years he served with devotion and loyalty the country he loved so intensely. His record and his achievements are known to all Americans.

Mr. Speaker, later I shall speak at length upon the services of this distinguished American. At this time I offer a resolution and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 362

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH, a Senator of the United States from the State of Idaho.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That a committee of 10 Members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as members of the funeral committee, Mr. BOEHNE, Mr. HILL, Mr. LEMKE, Mr. MURDOCK of Utah, Mr. WHITE of Idaho, Mr. HULL, Mr. ARNOLD, Mr. CASE of South Dakota, Mr. DWORSHAK, and Mr. THORKE-SON.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 363

Resolved, That the House of Representatives accepts the invitation of the Senate to attend the funeral services of the late Honorable WILLIAM E. BORAH, to be held in the Senate Chamber Monday, January 22, 1940, at 12:30 o'clock p. m., and that the committee appointed by the Speaker of the House to attend the funeral shall act in conjunction with the committee of the Senate to make the necessary arrangements.

Resolved, That upon the return of the House to its Chamber following the services in the Senate Chamber, the Speaker shall, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator, declare the House adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, the State of Idaho and our country have lost a great leader, a great crusader, and one of the Nation's outstanding authorities on constitutional government. This country had in WILLIAM EDGAR BORAH, Senator from Idaho, a fearless advocate of the fundamental principles embodied in our Constitution and a staunch supporter of democratic government. Idaho and the Nation will long miss Senator BORAH and cannot soon fill the vacancy in the Nation's councils left by his passing.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 363, the Members of the House will now proceed to the Senate Chamber to attend the funeral services of the late Senator BORAH. The Speaker will take his place at the door and the majority and minority leaders and the other Members will follow in order and proceed to the Senate Chamber.

Thereupon, at 12:15 o'clock p. m., the Members of the House proceeded to the Senate Chamber.

At 1:01 o'clock p. m., the Members of the House returned to the House Chamber.

ADJOURNMENT

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 363, the House, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator, will stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to its previous order, adjourned until Tuesday, January 23, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JANUARY 23, 1940

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who in the days of old didst promise the outpouring of Thy spirit upon all flesh: We beseech Thee for a share in Thine own creative vision, that our very thoughts may become the ministers of purity and goodness, of brotherhood and peace. Reveal to us as a Nation, O Father, the vast possibilities and glorious capacities of the children of our beloved country, and grant that there may be nobler fathers and deeper-hearted mothers to aid in the development of a people properly equipped to command the future and to secure an ever-ascending scale of living.

We look not to the angels for new light but to the cradles of the land, where we wait for the consolation of the race. By this new creative spirit, help us to build a social whole so wise, so clean, so sure of God that, like a mighty tide, it will carry mankind up through the gates of the City into Thy very presence. We ask it in the name of Thy dear Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 20, and Monday, January 22, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1335. An act relating to the filing of affidavits of prejudice in the District Court for the District of Alaska; and

S. 1919. An act to provide for the acquisition by the United States of the estate of Patrick Henry in Charlotte County, Va., known as Red Hill.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	Hughes	Russell
Ashurst	Downey	Johnson, Calif.	Schwartz
Bailey	Ellender	Johnson, Colo.	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Frazier	King	Shipstead
Barbour	George	Lee	Slattery

Mr. BARKLEY. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] are members of the committee appointed to attend the funeral in Idaho of the late Senator BORAH, and are, therefore, absent.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is detained on official business for the Special Committee on Civil Liberties.

Mr. McNARY. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] are absent on official business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR BORAH

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate for about 4 minutes at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Oklahoma will proceed.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, today for the first time in one-third of a century, the clerk who called the roll omitted the name of Senator BORAH. It is difficult to think of the United States Senate without him. How often have the Senate pages rushed into the anterooms and whispered to us, "Senator BORAH is speaking." And always we hurried in to hear him. We listened to him; and I am glad that we did, for he was a great man.

But now his eloquent tongue is stilled forever. His clear voice will never again fill this Chamber, but his clear thinking will, down through the years, I am sure, continue to influence this body.

Today his seat is vacant. Later it will be occupied, but it may never be filled, for Senator BORAH was a great man. He lived for America as nobly as others have died for her. He fought valiantly for the causes in which he believed. He walked with kings all right, but he never lost the common touch.

He was courageous but not foolhardy. He was liberal but not radical. He was conservative but not reactionary. He was progressive and yet he was cautious—suspicious of the untried and slow to relinquish the proven.

He debated, but he never quibbled. He was determined but never contentious. He was always courteous. The fairness of his manner often disarmed his opponent. He differed without offending. He disagreed without antagonizing. I never heard him use ridicule or abuse. He never resorted to sarcasm, but relied solely upon the soundness of his arguments. There was little escape from the compelling logic of his conclusions, and the very simplicity of his language was its eloquence.

I well remember the last great speech he made in this Chamber. He spoke on the neutrality bill. You remember it, too. The Senate and the galleries were breathless. His eyes blazed with the light of battle as he denounced war profiteering, and his whole frame shook with emotion as he urged that we not take one step toward war.

No one ever questioned his sincerity and few have ever matched his patriotism.

And now he is gone. He has been a part of the United States Senate so long that we will find ourselves expecting him to come in—but he will not come. We will unconsciously glance toward the desk which he has occupied so long, expecting there to see his benign countenance, only to be reminded of our great loss. We shall miss him—we shall miss him so much that it will be exceedingly difficult to reconcile ourselves to his absence.

We who knew him are fortunate because in the years to come when we read his precepts, they will have a richer meaning because we knew Senator BORAH, the man.

He was kindly and personable. He loved children and they loved him. Last year during the special session, he was accustomed to sit on a bench in a little park which is just in front of the apartment house where we live. Our little girl, Mary Louise, used to play in that park. They became fast friends. The last time I talked to Senator BORAH, he asked to be remembered to his little playmate.

Mr. President, I admired Senator BORAH at long range even before I met him. I admired him more at closer range as merely an acquaintance, but as that acquaintance became more intimate, my admiration warmed into friendship.

Although he had been here over 30 years, he never forgot to encourage a newcomer. His was the first friendly hand laid upon my shoulder when I first became a Member of this body. My seat was the one just next behind his. Many times during those first months, I whispered to him for advice. He always gave it so kindly and so encouragingly that I was drawn to him by the sheer warmth of his great heart.

And now he is gone. He has been called to sit in that celestial gallery to which many of his colleagues before him have already been summoned. But he leaves to us the thrilling inspiration that comes from the great life of a great American.

I thank you.

CONDOLENCES ON DEATH OF SENATOR BORAH

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a radiogram from Hon. Louis S. Zephirin, president of the Senate of Haiti, stating (translation), "The Haitian Senate shares in the grief of the American Senate on the occasion of the death of the lamented Senator BORAH and sends its profound condolences," which was ordered to lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a radiogram from Hon. Jiuji Kasai, of the Imperial Japanese Diet, Tokyo, Japan, expressing deepest sympathy to the American Nation in its bereavement occasioned by the death of Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH, late a Senator from the State of Idaho, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE NAVAL ACADEMY

The VICE PRESIDENT. The act of August 29, 1916, requires the Vice President to appoint annually four Senators on the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy, in addition to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, who is an ex officio member of the Board.

The Chair accordingly appoints the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] as the members of the Board to serve with the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

AMENDMENT OF THE BANKRUPTCY ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6505) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. HUGHES, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. AUSTIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

COST-ASCERTAINMENT REPORT, POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting, pursuant to law, the cost-ascertainment report of the Post Office Department, showing the cost of carrying and handling the several classes of mail matter and of performing the special services for the fiscal year 1939, with appendix, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORT OF CREDIT OPERATIONS, INDIAN OFFICE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of credit operations in connection with Indian affairs under authority of certain acts of Congress, as of June 30, 1939, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

COEUR D'ALENE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS, IDAHO

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation authorizing the restoration to tribal ownership of certain lands upon the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, Idaho, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the General Assembly of Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

House Joint Resolution 16

Urging the removal by Great Britain of the embargo on the importation of tobaccos from the United States

Whereas the embargo now in effect on the importation of tobaccos by Great Britain is causing serious loss to the tobacco growers and manufacturing industries of our country, and in particular in Virginia; and

Whereas it is the earnest desire of the General Assembly of Virginia that such embargoes be removed as quickly as possible: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Delegates of Virginia (the senate concurring), That we call upon the Members of Congress of the United States from Virginia to urge upon the Departments of State and of Agriculture in Washington to do everything in their power to induce Great Britain to remove such embargo at the earliest possible time; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted by the clerk of the house of delegates to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, and to the Representatives in the Congress of the United States from the Commonwealth of Virginia.

January 18, 1940: Agreed to by the house of delegates.

E. GRIFFITH DONSON,

Clerk, House of Delegates.

January 19, 1940: Agreed to by the senate.

E. R. COMBS,

Clerk of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a petition received in the Department of the Interior from the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, consisting of 3 albums containing more than 48,000 signatures of residents of the Philippine Islands, praying that legislation be enacted by the Federal Government to impose an embargo on the shipment of war commodities to Japan, which, with the accompanying petition, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Council of the City of Los Angeles, Calif., favoring the enactment of legislation to extend the operations of the Public Works Administration to January 1, 1941, and also to authorize extension of time on present operating P. W. A. projects to allow the completion thereof by January 1, 1941, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Local No. 46, State, County, and Municipal Workers of America (affiliated with the C. I. O.; department of public assistance), Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the appropriation of adequate funds for the N. Y. A., W. P. A., C. C. C., and other social agencies rather than increased funds for armament, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Local No. 248, U. A. W. A., Allis-Chalmers Workers' Union, C. I. O., West Allis, Wis., protesting against the enactment of certain legislation introduced in the Congress as threatening civil liberties and rights, and favoring the preservation of security and democracy by protecting the Bill of Rights, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the California Association of Port Authorities, protesting against the enactment of legislation asserting Federal title to submerged lands and tidelands based upon principles of national sovereignty, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Liga Pro Democracia, San Juan, P. R., protesting against the making of loans to any foreign country until the adverse economic conditions affecting the people of Puerto Rico are remedied, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. REED presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Wichita (Kans.) Chamber of Commerce, signed by J. Ward Gale, president, and A. N. Booth, general manager, protesting against the enactment of House bill 7372, to promote the conservation of petroleum; to provide for cooperation with the States in preventing the waste of petroleum; to create an Office of Petroleum Conservation; and to amend the act of February 22, 1935, as being opposed to the best interests of the Nation, the States, the consuming public, and the petroleum industry, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution unanimously adopted by employees' representatives at the Maryland plant of the Bethlehem Steel Co., Sparrows Point, Md., protesting against the invasion of Finland by the armies of Soviet Russia and favoring all aid short of war to the Republic of Finland, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Bethesda-Chevy Chase Post, No. 105, the American Legion, Department of Maryland, favoring continuance of the operation of the so-called Dies committee investigating un-American activities and appropriation of the necessary funds therefor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Four County Bankers Association of southeastern Kansas, Coffeyville, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation to exempt bank employees from the operation of the wage-and-hour provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the secretary of the Johnson County Council of Parents and Teachers, representing 1,600 members, of Merriam, Kans., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 517, to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages over the radio, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOLT presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the secretary of the Huntington (W. Va.) Central Labor Union, protesting on behalf of the union against the present method of making reciprocal-trade agreements with foreign nations and favoring more safeguards to protect the interests of American manufacturers and employees, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of H. W. Daniels Unit, No. 29, of the American Legion Auxiliary, Elkins, W. Va., favoring continuance of the operation of the so-called Dies committee investigating un-American activities, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented letters in the nature of petitions from sundry citizens of Fairmont, West Union, Glenville, St. Albans, Marlinton, Catawba, Ceredo, Bluefield, Parkersburg, Martinsburg, Rowlesburg, Charleston, and Uffington, all in the State of West Virginia, praying for the enactment of Senate bill 517, to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages over the radio, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1162) thereon.

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7342) to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1164) thereon.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2346) for the relief of Beryl M. McHam, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1165) thereon.

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 199) amending Public Resolution No. 112, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and Public Resolution No. 48, of the Seventy-sixth Congress, reported it without amendment.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON ARRANGEMENTS FOR INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT-ELECT—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32) authorizing the appointment of a joint committee to make arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States in 1941—submitted by Mr. NEELY on the 4th instant—reported it without amendment.

IMPORTATION OF ARTICLES FREE OF DUTY FOR SAN FRANCISCO AND NEW YORK EXPOSITIONS

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Finance I report back favorably without amendment House Joint Resolution 419 to extend, for 3 additional months, the time during which articles imported free of duty for exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition or the New York World's Fair, may be sold or abandoned, and I submit a report, No. 1163, thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution. I may say that under the existing law all exhibits from foreign nations at both the San Francisco and the New York World's Fair were entered free of duty, of course, for a limited period of time. That period of time expires on the 29th day of this month, and the joint resolution merely extends the time so that it will not be necessary to return these exhibits or to sell them or to destroy them.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me ask the able Senator whether a favorable report was made by the Committee on Finance?

Mr. GEORGE. The report of the committee is favorable. The resolution passed the House without opposition. The Finance Committee has reported it favorably, and I am presenting it on behalf of the chairman of the committee, who is not at the moment present.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is asking for immediate consideration?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the House joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 419) to extend, for 3 additional months, the time during which articles imported free of duty for exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition or the New York World's Fair, may be sold or abandoned, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the importation of articles free from tariff or customs duty for the purpose of exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition to be held at San Francisco, Calif., in 1939, and for other purposes", approved May 18, 1937, as amended, is amended by striking out the words "within 3 months" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words "within 6 months."

SEC. 2. That the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the New York World's Fair 1939, New York City, N. Y., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes", approved August 16, 1937, as amended, is amended by striking out the words "within 3 months" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words "within 6 months."

WHAT DEMOCRACY MEANS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BRIDGES

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] at the Westminster College political forum, Fulton, Mo., January 16, 1940.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the Senator whether that is the speech in which the Senator from New Hampshire made a personal assault on the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN]?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, if I may answer that question, the Senator from New Hampshire made no personal assault on the junior Senator from Missouri. The speech referred to is one made by the Senator from New Hampshire at the Westminster College political forum, at Fulton, Mo.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment, Mr. President. Has the Senator from New Hampshire concluded?

Mr. BRIDGES. I have.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator from South Dakota bear with me further?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have before me a newspaper report of the speech made by the Senator from New Hampshire. The Senator from New Hampshire is in the newspapers a great deal. It says:

United States Senator STYLES BRIDGES, of New Hampshire, who was the guest of the Republican State and city committees here yesterday, told party leaders any aspirant of their choice whom they might send to the Senate next fall would be better than Senator HARRY S. TRUMAN, of Independence, Democratic incumbent and candidate for reelection.

Then the article proceeds to say:

"Well, anybody you send," BRIDGES replied, "would be better than TRUMAN."

The remark was greeted by laughter and applause.

Mr. President, I can understand the "laughter" part but I cannot understand the "applause" part.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, may I explain that to the Senator?

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to know whether the Senator said that, and whether he means to stand by it or repudiate it? I understand that privately he has repudiated it, but I think he ought to keep his newspaper statements and his private statements in harmony.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, to begin with, in answer to the Senator's question, the speech which the Senator from South Dakota offered for reprint in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was a speech made at Fulton, Mo., at the Westminster College political forum, which is nonpartisan. The president of the college is a gentleman by the name of Dr. McClure, whom I respect highly and who is doing a good job in starting such a forum.

There is nothing objectionable in the speech to anyone who believes in the American form of government, as I do.

In answer to the second part of the question, referring to the newspaper clipping which the Senator read, which says: "BRIDGES belittles TRUMAN's record." I have seen the clipping. The heading in the newspaper is as the Senator has quoted it. But if the Senator will read down he will get a better understanding of what was said. The newspaper quotes me as saying that anyone would be better in the Senate than Mr. TRUMAN. In the first place, let me say that I do not see that I have to explain my actions or statements to the Senator from Texas or anyone else. I am not responsible to him.

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, the Senator has not gotten his speech in the RECORD, either.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me tell the Senator that if he objects to my speech being placed in the RECORD I assure him that he will not get one of his in the RECORD.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas never asks to put his speeches in the RECORD. He makes them on the floor. The Senator from New Hampshire does not have to answer the question whether or not he said that.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should be glad to, but I say that I am not answering it because the Senator from Texas thinks he can bulldoze me.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no; the Senator has none of that quality of "doze" or "bull" either.

Mr. BRIDGES. Nevertheless, in answer to the question, I will say that I was told by a certain gentleman who happened to be the State chairman at a private Republican luncheon at Fulton, Mo., that I might like to know they were going to have a Republican governor in Missouri next year, which rather pleased me. He then said, "We think DEWEY SHORT is rather lonesome down in the House of Representatives, so we are going to send some other Republican Congressmen to give DEWEY SHORT a little company in the House." That pleased me. And then he said, "And we think you may be a little lonesome, you and your Republican colleagues down there in the United States Senate, and so we propose to send a Republican to the United States Senate in place of the present incumbent, Mr. TRUMAN," or words to that effect. And my reply to him was to the effect—and I still stand by it—that any Republican that they might send is better than any Democrat they can send from Missouri.

Mr. President, I am partisan enough so I would make that statement. But, so far as making any attack on the junior Senator from Missouri personally or his character or integrity is concerned, I did not do it, and I think if the Senator will read the article he will find my statement to be true. So far as concerns the statement that any Republican would be better than the present junior Senator from Missouri, or any other Democrat, I did make the statement, and I stand by it. And this would apply in Texas as well as Missouri or any other State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me say that of course the newspaper did not quote the Senator from New Hampshire as mentioning anything about Republicans. It says:

Well, anybody you send would be better than TRUMAN.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me answer that. What took place was at a private Republican luncheon and, naturally, I was talking about Republicans at the time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, it was private, but it got in the newspaper and, I suppose, with the acquiescence at least of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. Of course, and I as a rule do not object to what they put in the newspapers.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was aware that the Senator was not reporter-shy or newspaper-shy, but I think the Senator from New Hampshire does the junior Senator from Missouri a very grave injustice. I will not object to having the speech placed in the RECORD, because I think it will help the Democratic Party and the Democratic cause. Therefore I will not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and appears in the Appendix.

PROPOSED JAPANESE EMBARGO

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I again ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments.

Tomorrow marks the date when the commercial relationship which we have had with Japan for so many years will cease, because of the abrogation of our treaty.

At the present time this problem of commercial relationships with Japan is both vital and controversial. It is apparent from even a casual study of the mail that both individuals and groups are taking a firm stand in opposition to a renewal of our commercial relationship with Japan.

All America feels for China. Just as we are sympathetic toward Finland, so our sympathies go out to China because of the Japanese invasion of her land, and the wrongs done.

Because of our sympathies for China and our reactions to the wrongs done the Chinese people, we Americans immediately have certain reactions. We have, since the World War, some of the phobia engendered thereby still lodging in our veins; and whenever injury is done—no matter where—we react in a way that would have us go to the rescue. Therefore, a good many folks want to have an embargo imposed by the United States on the shipment of all war material and implements of war to Japan.

Because it is always desirable that a change in our foreign policy be examined very closely, and because there are so many excellent minds here that can make a genuine contribution on this problem, I should like today to present a few questions relative to the proposed embargo.

First, what would be the consequences to China, Japan, America, of such an embargo? Would it not mean that America would be taking sides? Would it not amount to a slap in the face to a friendly nation, and what would follow? Would not the undeclared war become a declared war by Japan on China? Is not the present war an undeclared war because of our so-called neutrality law? If we imposed an embargo, would not Japan declare war on China, blockade Chinese ports, shut out all imports, and would it not apply martial law wherever Japanese armies were, and would not Japan see to it that all foreigners were excluded from China? Would we not see that all foreign settlements were taken over by Japan?

Would such a state of affairs help China? Would it help our friendly relations with Japan? Would it help America? Would not the results be that certain of our industries and commerce would be seriously jeopardized and penalized? Would such action lead to and be in the interest of peace?

Is it not up to us to think with other men's minds, and to see with other people's eyes, to feel with other people's passions, and try to understand other people's problems? Down deep in the soul of us there are identities greater than our differences.

I am posing another question: Will we do nothing, then? Are we to sit back and fold our hands and carry on as usual, and disregard conditions in the east? Or are we to intervene? Or is there another course to follow? Can we not help both China and Japan in this situation, and thus make a constructive contribution to future peace in the east, and the peace of the world?

I like the article in the Christian Century written by A. L. Warnshuis. He says:

I am persuaded that our only effective aid must come not by war, economic or otherwise, but by persuasion through the offer of creative, reconstructive cooperation.

Such cooperative proposals, he says, can be determined only by consultation; but he does make some suggestions which I believe are worthy of the consideration of this body.

First, should we give recognition to the fact that Japan has a place in the world and should we extend to the Japanese the same immigration laws which govern all other peoples who desire to come to America? Would not this be righting a wrong, or is there some other and more satisfactory answer to this issue of immigration?

It pays to put the ointment of friendship and understanding on the wounds of nations the same as in the case of wounds we have inflicted on individuals.

Second, should we negotiate a new commercial treaty based upon a reaffirmation of the principles of the Nine Power Treaty and modifying the terms of the treaty of 1911 as may be required by the circumstances which have developed in the last three decades?

The normal flow of commerce to nations is like the normal flow of the blood within our veins and arteries, and in the field of commerce we must restate and put into practice those rules which speak of fair dealing, understanding, and fair play.

Third, should we give to Japan access on equitable terms to raw materials we control, and should Japan be given an opportunity in the markets of the world to have a square deal—the full right to fair competition?

The world is growing smaller each day, and we have tried a lot of selfish and outmoded ways. The situation calls now for Christian statesmanship. I know it sounds superficial to some folks, but it is not. What I am suggesting is fundamental. It is doing unto other nations as we would be done by.

Fourth, should we offer financial assistance in the reconstruction and readjustment of Japan's economic system after the war?

At first this thought did not appeal to me, but as I reflected on it, I realized that if by this very method the war in the East could be stopped, and Japanese securities on the American market once more made to be worth par, and friendship reestablished, we would be not only pouring oil on the troubled waters, but in investing our money we would get real returns for our idle money, which now brings in nothing.

Fifth, should we not, around the table—Japan and America—work out a reduction in their expenditures on naval armaments?

I am for that. Just yesterday I received in my mail letters and resolutions calling to my attention the fact that America inside her boundaries could very readily use the money that is being spent on a naval program, for ships, and so forth, which become obsolete in a few years. With the money spent on one $50,000,000 battleship many people could be put to work building highways and homes. Yes; we can afford to adopt the round-table method, to which Stanley Jones refers as having been used among the conflicting religious sects in India. Let us use that method to iron out our international hatreds, armament races, and so forth.

Should we not, before we talk about this Nation giving assistance to China and becoming partisan, agree first to give consideration to other proposals Japan might wish to make?

None of these matters, it will be noted, will interfere with individuals or groups giving help or relief to the suffering people of China, or in offering to do that which is necessary in the reconstruction and reorganization which must follow after the war.

We all know that Japan is in this war because she feels she must dominate the East, and does not want another strong nation in the East. Why does Japan feel that way? Because as she looks at her little islands she realizes she must have raw materials, she must have a place to sell her goods. She feels that she may be shut off from the markets of the world. She wants to be treated on a par with other great nations of the world. She needs more material wealth. She must have greater income to sustain her Navy, or she must have no need for that Navy.

If the plans suggested here were followed out, she would be treated as other nations are treated. The markets of the world would be opened to her. She would not have to conquer nations to get raw material. She would find a friendly hand reaching out to her, offering her financial assistance. She would agree willingly then to reduce her expenditures on naval armament, and she could use that money, even as America could, to develop her country, contribute to the social welfare of her people, and bring up the standard of living, and she would not then insist that China become a part of her domain. We know that China will continue to fight against a division of her territory.

But, to get back to the embargo proposition. Let us be frank. Will it provide any positive help? Is it not in fact a measure of doubtful assistance to China? Will it arouse antagonism on the part of Japan?

We are called upon to abandon that type of foreign relations. We are called upon as a people to act with understanding, wisely, generously, and constructively, giving aid.

By keeping out of war, we will make a contribution to the welfare of the world. By understanding, we are told, the house is built, and, verily, by understanding and wise and friendly relations with other nations, we can make an added contribution to the peace of the world. So doing, we will be casting bread upon the waters, which will return to us a thousandfold.

Mr. President, if we do not follow this course, we may find ourselves in a crisis in the East, how severe, how threatening, no one knows. If we follow this course, we do not agree to Japan's right to take over China. If we follow this course, we may cause a rift in the thought that only through conquest can a nation be built up. If we follow this course it may mark the dawn of a new day. The world is looking for something. At home we have been experimenting with many untried, unworkable schemes.

Why not try the only thing that will work? Why not in our international affairs try a few of the ideas about which we so glibly talk, and which we generally practice in our relationships with one another?

In view of the unsettled conditions elsewhere in the world, trying this course might not only postpone the crisis, it might prevent the crisis ever appearing in the east.

Furthermore, it might do away with talk of a two-ocean Navy. We could not construct such a Navy, even if we desired to, within 5 or 10 years. Perhaps some such plan as has been suggested here might prevent a great naval race. It might also ease the situation in relation to the Philippines and the possessions in the east belonging to the Netherlands and other European nations.

Then do we want a congressional embargo? If we put such a thing into effect, Japan would be forced to make reprisals. This does not mean that we have to follow the suggestions made in order to supply Japan with substantial quantities of arms, munitions, and raw materials out of which arms are made. This traffic can be reduced without resorting to a congressional embargo. America needs much of this material. If any legislation is passed, let it be passed solely with an eye on America's needs, rather than as an open challenge to Japan. But let us get into action, and by action I do not mean war; I mean that we should take steps to open up the gates which will lead to reason and understanding.

Mr. President, what I have stated in the last part of this talk is based largely on the assumption that if we take certain steps we may find that Japan is ready and willing to meet us halfway. I realize that if I am mistaken in this assumption we may find that we will have to become, as someone has said, more realistic in our approach to this problem. Our position in the Far East, of course, is different from our position in Europe. We are one of the nine signatories to the Nine Power Treaty, and we have taken a position which runs contra to the Japanese position; we say that treaty cannot be modified except with the consent of the signatories thereto. Japan has taken the position that, because conditions have changed, she, as one of the signatories, can change that treaty. To this, of course, we do not agree.

If Japan is willing to proceed on the basis which I have outlined, we certainly should be willing to do all or most of the things I am suggesting.

Perhaps the time is fast approaching when Japan will be ready to modify her position, which in plain language is that whatever she does in China is nobody's business but her own. Perhaps if a friendly hand is outstretched we may find that that friendship will be reciprocated.

From nothing I have said would I have implied that I feel that our officials have been remiss in their attitude toward Japan. I think in that respect our Government has, with dignity and judgment, pursued its course in the Far East and protected the rights of this Nation and its citizens in that sphere of action. Japan now has been at war in China for over 2 years. Her own people are not in unity in respect to the Chinese policy. My only hope in making these few remarks is that they might make a contribution toward bringing about a clearer understanding among our people of the problems we have to meet in the east and the course we should take in meeting such problems.

Before we take any definite action in relation to an embargo we should think the problem through. We are not a people that indulges in mere bluffing or empty gestures. We want to be at peace with the entire world and on friendly terms with every nation, and we hope that other nations will be willing to meet us in that spirit.

Mr. President, what has been suggested here is machinery for making peace. Peace is one of the noblest words in our language, a word that suggests the greatest challenge to the race. We should not be afraid of achievement. Peace deals with the individual, the community, the State, the Nation, the world. It deals with the life in the village, in factories, diplomacies, boards of trade. Mr. President, we have ever been talking about creating machinery for making war.

What I have suggested is the open door which leads to where we will create machinery that makes for peace.

DISPLAY OF AIRPLANES, ETC., AT BOLLING FIELD

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, as a member of the Military Affairs Committee, I am requested to invite the attention of the Senate to the War Department and Army Air Corps exhibit at Bolling Field, and particularly to advise the Members of the Senate that special hours have been set aside for Members of Congress to view this exhibit, from 11 to 1 o'clock tomorrow. I myself have viewed this exhibit. I think it is very much worth while. I think every Member of Congress should, if possible, see the airplanes, new airplane engines, and so forth, which are on view. This remarkable exhibit is displayed in two large hangars, which are well heated. I am sure Members of Congress will be well rewarded for going there. They can view the exhibit in complete comfort. The War Department and Army Air Corps are very anxious that each Member of the Senate be notified to come there between 11 and 1 o'clock tomorrow if possible.

ORDER DISPENSING WITH CALL OF CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The calendar, under rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SUPPLEMENTAL MILITARY AND NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, House bill 7805, the supplemental appropriation bill for the Military and Naval Establishments was reported earlier in the day. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado for the immediate consideration of House bill 7805?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the bill has not yet reached the calendar.

Mr. ADAMS. It was reported a few moments ago. By reason of the incidents of the past few days, there has been delay in reporting the bill to the Senate, but copies of it have been available.

Mr. McNARY. With very few exceptions, I have always taken the position that a bill should go to the calendar and lie over for a day in order that Members of the Senate may have an opportunity to study the various items and provisions of the bill as well as the report on the bill. An exception might very readily be made in this instance. I understand that the House has reduced the amount of the appropriation under the Budget estimate, and also that the Senate committee has further reduced the proposed appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There will be objections to some of the reductions, and there will be some arguments in support of the objections.

Mr. McNARY. That would necessarily follow, of course. Mr. President, I have no objection to the immediate consideration of the bill so far as the rules of the Senate are concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, inasmuch as I cannot remain in the Chamber all day, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of an amendment which simply permits the continuance of Col. Philip D. Fleming as Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division in the Department of Labor without loss of or prejudice to his status as a commissioned officer on the active list of the United States Army.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I may add that the committee had this matter before it, and the chairman was authorized to offer this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the able Senator from Virginia explained the matter a few moments ago. I have no objection to the immediate consideration of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 14, after line 25, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 1222 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 576), Philip B. Fleming, a commissioned officer on the active list, United States Army, is authorized to hold the office of Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division in the Department of Labor without loss or prejudice to his status as a commissioned officer on the active list of the United States Army, and if appointed to such civil office he shall receive, in addition to his pay and allowances as such commissioned officer, an amount equal to the difference between such pay and allowances as such commissioned officer and the salary prescribed by law for such civil office.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, is it proposed by the amendment merely to give Colonel Fleming the pay of a commissioned officer?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is proposed to give him the pay he would draw as Director of this Division if he were not an Army officer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—War Department—Field exercises", on page 4, line 10, after the numerals "1940", to strike out "$18,000,000" and insert "$15,000,000", so as to read:

For an additional amount for the conduct of special field exercises, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1940, $15,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 1941.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 15, after the word "small", to strike out "units" and insert "units; for rental of land or purchase of options to rent land without reference to section 3648 of the Revised Statutes; for the use or repair of private property", and on page 5, line 1, after the name "Secretary of War", to insert a comma and "or by such officer as he may designate", so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That this appropriation may be used for troop movements and travel of personnel of the Regular Army in connection with field exercises, including special combat training for small units; for rental of land or purchase of options to rent land without reference to section 3648 of the Revised Statutes; for the use or repair of private property; and settlement of claims (not exceeding $500 in any one case) for damages to or loss of private property resulting from such exercises heretofore or hereafter accrued, when payment thereof will be accepted by the owners of the property in full satisfaction of such damages, and when each claim is substantiated in such manner as the Secretary of War may prescribe by regulation and is approved by the Secretary of War, or by such officer as he may designate, such action thereon to be conclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Quartermaster Corps", on page 6, line 21, before the word "such", to strike out "$22,962,564" and insert "$21,962,564", so as to read:

Army transportation: For an additional amount for Army transportation, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1940, $21,962,564, such sum to be available for packing, crating, and transportation of authorized baggage and household effects of retired personnel when ordered to active duty and upon relief therefrom, and for the purchase (not exceeding $2,000,000) of passenger-carrying vehicles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Acquisition of land", on page 7, line 21, after the figures "$150,000" and the semicolon, to strike out "and for the acquisition of approximately 800 acres in Puerto Rico for the establishment of a general depot and cantonment area and the enlargement of Camp Buchanan, as authorized in the acts of July 2, 1917, and April 11, 1918 (50 U. S. C. 171), $200,000", and on page 8, line 2, after the words "in all", to strike out "$550,000" and insert "$350,000", so as to read:

For the acquisition of approximately 200,000 acres as a bombing area for use in connection with McChord Field, Wash., $200,000; for the acquisition of approximately 48,000 acres as a bombing area in connection with Hamilton Field, Calif., $150,000; in all, $350,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I wish to be heard on this amendment.

The provision proposed to be stricken out authorizes the purchase of additional land adjoining Fort Buchanan, 7 miles south of San Juan, P. R., for the purpose of a munitions depot and a place for barracks and storage of artillery and aircraft ammunition.

The House bill authorized an appropriation of $320,000 for the purchase of 800 acres adjoining Fort Buchanan, which, as I say, is only 7 miles south of San Juan, P. R. The necessity for the addition of that post is due to the fact that the forces in Puerto Rico have been increased from a little more than 800 to 2,400, and will no doubt be double that number before the completion of improvements to the fortifications in Puerto Rico.

For 300 years the Spaniards knew that Puerto Rico was the key to the Caribbean Sea. It has taken us about 40 years to find that out. Puerto Rico is one of the main outposts and defenses of the Panama Canal. We are establishing in Puerto Rico a large air depot and are proposing to maintain there about half a division for the defense of the island. It is necessary to have storage space for ammunition to make our arms effective.

Puerto Rico is a very small island. I think it is only 80 miles by 40 miles, and only 40 percent of it is fit for cultivation. The part of it that is in cultivation is mostly in sugar plantations. The land has been completely surveyed by the military authorities. The assessed valuations have been gone into, and a value of $400 an acre has been placed on the land, because most of it is sugar land. Forty-nine percent of it is now in pasture, but most of the 49 percent could be used for raising sugar.

I am told that the income from sugar lands runs from $150 to $500 an acre. The original purchase of this post was made by trading land which the United States Government owned in the city of San Juan to the Government of Puerto Rico for the 271 acres which are now Fort Buchanan. I think it is absolutely essential that the proposed depot be constructed now. At the present time the ammunition is stored outside under tarpaulins, which is dangerous. If the ammunition should by any chance be exploded it would completely wipe the camp off the map, and no doubt would do serious injury to the people of San Juan. The proposed location was chosen because it is close to transportation of all sorts, by railroad, water, and air. It will be necessary to place an airport on a portion of this land for the landing of army planes.

The appropriation provided by the House was $200,000, although $320,000 had been recommended. I believe the appropriation ought to be left in the bill. The whole 800 acres cannot be purchased for $200,000, but a start can be made toward storing the bombs and ammunition in a safe place and putting up the barracks and other buildings which are necessary to house the soldiers who have recently been sent to Puerto Rico, and who are now living in tents.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am somewhat familiar with Puerto Rico. As a member of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs I have visited it on a number of occasions. Will the Senator advise the Senate on just what part of the island the desired depot is to be erected?

Mr. TRUMAN. The air depot is at the northwest corner of the island of Puerto Rico. The quartermaster munitions depot is 7 miles south of the city of San Juan. The quartermaster depot is the one I am talking about.

Mr. KING. Is there any necessity for placing the station or depot for munitions on the shore? Of course, as the Senator knows, the island is very small—less than 3,000 square miles. It seems to me it would be more advantageous to put the depot inland.

Mr. TRUMAN. It must be accessible to transportation. It must be accessible for the use of the forces which have to have the ammunition. Let me read what the commanding general has to say.

Mr. KING. Any part of the island is accessible.

Mr. TRUMAN. It might be accessible, but the land would not be any cheaper. Sugar land on the island of Puerto Rico costs just as much at one place as at another.

Mr. KING. There is considerable land on the island of Puerto Rico that is not sugar land.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is true, but it would not be useful or available for the purpose contemplated. The land must be level enough to put buildings on; it must be level enough to put an air landing field on; it must be level enough to be approached by busses and trucks, because that is the only way they can get the ammunition to the points where it may be needed.

Let me read a telegram from the commanding general of the Army forces in Puerto Rico, which is not a part of the regular hearings. This telegram is in reply to a telegram to me.

Land suitable for general depot cannot be secured at a lesser cost because there is no cheaper accessible land. Sites nearer to San Juan and in urban area would be much more costly. Suitable sites farther away from San Juan would not be cheaper because of intensive sugar cultivation and, furthermore, would not be suitable for general depot. Painstaking reconnaissance has resulted in the selection of area recommended as best both tactically and economically. No percentage of land is waste land. There is practically no waste land on northern coastal plain except scattered swamps. Forty-nine percent of tract is pasture land. Thirty-seven percent is in cultivation for sugar. Fourteen percent is sugar land not now in cultivation. Prevailing valuation per acre of pasture land in vicinity is $350. Pasture valuation appears high but if not used as dairy pasture would be suitable for sugar cultivation. Prevailing valuation per acre of sugar land is from $300 to $500. Annual production of sugarcane per acre in Puerto Rico varies from $150 to $500. Estimated annual production of sugarcane per acre in tract to be acquired is $250. Sugarcane on this tract is now ripening and will probably be cut in January and February. Estimated average price per acre of $400 was arrived at after thorough search of assessor's records, investigation of like purchases, and contact with officials and civilians with real-estate experience. It will be of great advantage to acquire this land within next 2 months because immediately after sugarcane is cut only small adjustment is necessary for value of seed cane left in ground. As crop grows value increases rapidly. The installation of ammunition storage and general depot is vital. In my best judgment the acquisition of this tract of land at a price not to exceed $320,000 is sound and will result in both immediate and long-term economy to the Government.

It is true that the installation of this depot is absolutely vital to the defense plan the Army now has under consideration for Puerto Rico, Panama, and the Panama Canal.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Neither have I now nor in the committee have I had an objection or desire to stop the military development on the island. The one question, however, I should like to be satisfied about is the relation of the value of the land proposed to be purchased to its assessed valuation for taxation purposes.

Mr. TRUMAN. The land is assessed at 100-percent value in Puerto Rico, and the assessed value of the land in question, I am informed, is $400 an acre.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. As the Senator knows, the population of Puerto Rico is great, measured by the lands available for use. As I have stated, there are only a few thousand square miles of territory and a population of a million seven or eight hundred thousand.

Mr. TRUMAN. The population is 1,834,000.

Mr. KING. The population is increasing rapidly. It has increased nearly 100 percent under American occupation. The area susceptible of cultivation for sugar purposes is not very great, and it seems to me that, if possible, there should be no invasion of the sugar lands, because to that extent it would deprive the population of opportunity for labor and would increase the burden of cost upon the Government. Already there are, as I am advised, nearly 600,000 persons on relief in the island of Puerto Rico, and the number is increasing, because of legislation which deprived of employment a large number of persons engaged in the needlework industry and drove that industry to other countries and deprived the island of about $25,000,000 of annual revenue from the export of needlework commodities. There is limited opportunity for employment for the people, and it would seem unwise to deprive them of a rather large area of sugar lands which would give opportunity for work and bring to the island several million dollars annually.

Mr. TRUMAN. This proposal will not deprive anybody of anything that would add to the sustenance of the population; in fact, if this purchase should be made there would be more people put to work in Puerto Rico than at any time during the last 10 years.

Mr. KING. But it would deprive them of the opportunity of producing sugar to a certain extent.

Mr. TRUMAN. They are deprived to some extent of the opportunity of producing sugar by our quota law, anyway.

Mr. KING. We can amend that law if we care to do so. As I have indicated, the area of cane land in Puerto Rico that is susceptible of the cultivation of sugar is limited, and sugar is about the only commodity that can be raised. The coffee plantations have been largely destroyed by hurricanes and otherwise, and Puerto Rico cannot compete with Cuba or Florida in the production of citrus fruits. I am not in favor of a policy that would further reduce the area that is susceptible of cultivation.

Mr. TRUMAN. There is no other available place where this depot may be located economically and practically so as to be of use to the War Department.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I merely wish to make the comment that, in view of the very serious deprivation of the right of the State of Florida to produce sugar, for which it is so peculiarly adapted, it makes me very happy if any of the competing sugar land in Puerto Rico or any of the other offshore areas which are getting such a generous share of the quota that is consumed in the United States may be devoted to such useful purposes as the defense of the Caribbean area. I hope it will be possible for our military and naval authorities to buy more and more sugar land in Cuba, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and in the Philippines. I commend our Government for this policy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield further?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should be glad to have the Senator from Florida join with me in the view which I have expressed many times in favor of increasing the production of sugar in the United States, so that our domestic needs may be largely supplied by domestic production.

Mr. TRUMAN. More Puerto Ricans will be put on relief when that is done; but that has no bearing on this subject at all.

I have just been to Puerto Rico; I flew down there and examined this site and I think I know how necessary it is for the national defense system. With the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], chairman of the committee, we made a complete survey of this site of the air depot and of various other sites in Puerto Rico for a defense depot. I think it would be a disaster not to go through with this program at the present time. The sum of $200,000 will not buy this whole tract, but I think that the item of $200,000 ought to be left in this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the trouble with this situation was that the committee did not have sufficient facts on which to base a favorable report on this item. The principal facts adduced were those in the House hearings on pages 73, 74, and 75. They are brief and I want to give the Senate those facts just as they were testified to by witnesses.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. TRUMAN. I wish to say that the witness was not very well informed on this subject; in fact, he did not know as much about it as I did.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; he was not very well informed, and for that reason it was thought by the committee, as the main appropriation bill will be here within 60 days, at the outside, or will be before our committee within 60 days, that we would have a chance to get all the facts, including those in the possession of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Oklahoma, who have been there, and reach a just conclusion about the matter.

The Senator says that the House did not reach a just conclusion because they appropriated only $200,000. Now if we should go ahead and agree to the House provision of $200,000, and it was afterward found that a better place could be had for this particular activity than the particular site referred to, then we would be in a peculiar situation, indeed.

I read from the testimony:

Mr. WOODRUM. You have an item—

The question was addressed to Colonel Gregory—

Mr. WOODRUM. You have an item, "Acquisition of land, Puerto Rico," $320,000. Tell us about that.

Colonel GREGORY. In Puerto Rico it is desired to acquire 800 acres of land for the establishment of a general depot and cantonment area and the enlargement of Camp Buchanan.

Which has recently been established there.

That is near the present Camp Buchanan. There will be several thousand troops in Puerto Rico and there is no depot there at all to supply these people.

Mr. LUDLOW. How much is it proposed to spend for that purpose?

Colonel GREGORY. $320,000; 800 acres at $400 an acre. It is about 15 miles out from the city of San Juan.

Mr. DITTER. Is this an item of land purchase, too?

Colonel GREGORY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DITTER. Has that ever been presented to the regular subcommittee?

Colonel GREGORY. It has not been, because this Puerto Rican department is a newly organized unit, since the committee last met.

Mr. LUDLOW. How does that compare with real-estate prices down there?

Colonel VALLIANT. Some of that consists of sugarcane land that will run from $350 to $500 or more an acre. We have set an average price of $400 for it; $400 for 800 acres.

Mr. TABER. For the benefit of these sugar people who do not pay any taxes. What is this to be used for?

Colonel VALLIANT. This is to be used for a general depot.

Mr. WOODRUM. Is there not any cheaper land than land costing $400 an acre? That price would represent the price of suburban Washington real estate.

Mr. LUDLOW. Is that near the town?

Colonel VALLIANT. It is about 15 miles beyond San Juan.

Mr. TRUMAN. It is just 7 miles from San Juan by the road.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am reading the testimony of the colonel who was in charge of the matter. I am much obliged for the correction if the colonel made a mistake. He says, however:

It is about 15 miles beyond San Juan.

Mr. DITTER. How many owners are there of this land that you contemplate purchasing?

Colonel VALLIANT. About 10; 11 altogether.

Mr. DITTER. For how many acres?

Colonel VALLIANT. Eight hundred acres.

I call the particular attention of the Senate to this part of the testimony:

Mr. CANNON. What purpose is that land being put to at the present time?

Colonel VALLIANT. Largely sugarcane. Some are pasture and some of it is apparently waste land.

Four hundred dollars an acre for either pasture or waste land! I am interpolating now. In my judgment, that is a somewhat high price for it.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. TRUMAN. It sounds terrible, but it is not so terrible in Puerto Rico. The reason why that land is used for pasture is because there is no other place for dairy cows for milk for the kiddies in the town, and that is what the land is set aside for. If the land were not used for that purpose, every foot of it would be in sugarcane.

Mr. McKELLAR. Where will the "poor kiddies" of the town get milk if this land is used for Army purposes?

Mr. TRUMAN. More sugar land will be put into pasture. That will help Florida and Utah.

Mr. McKELLAR. It may help Florida and Utah, but I am afraid it will hurt the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. TRUMAN. Let me say to the Senator that the land purchased for an airport in Hawaii cost nearly twice as much as this land does, and it was sugar land as this is.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that; but the purchase of land in Hawaii may have been made in much the same way that this purchase is proposed to be made, and I want to read the testimony to show how it is proposed to be made.

Mr. CANNON. What purpose is that land being put to at the present time?

Colonel VALLIANT. Largely sugar cane. Some are pasture and some of it is apparently waste land.

Mr. LUDLOW. Do you propose to pay $400 an acre for that waste land, too?

Colonel VALLIANT. No, sir. It will average out $400 an acre for the whole 800 acres.

Mr. LUDLOW. There must be some that you are paying $1,000 an acre for, in that case.

Colonel VALLIANT. You can only get good land, that is, irrigated and adaptable for sugar raising in Puerto Rico, by paying a very high price per acre.

When I think of the wonderful lands in the State of Iowa, for instance—lands as rich and as productive as I have ever seen or known in my life—or lands in the Mississippi Delta, with which I am very well acquainted, and compare the price proposed to be paid for this land with the $100 to $150 an acre paid for the very choicest lands both in Iowa and in Mississippi, I wonder if $400 an acre is a proper price to pay for waste land.

Mr. TRUMAN and Mr. CLARK of Missouri addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield first to the junior Senator from Missouri. Then I will yield to his colleague.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if he is going to put the defenses of the Panama Canal in Iowa or in the Mississippi Delta?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. TRUMAN. Then that comparison has no bearing on the case.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has a right to his opinion, but I am not now bothering about that feature of the matter. I am undertaking to show the facts about this proposed contract.

I now yield to the senior Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, as the Senator read the testimony I was wondering if he had not possibly been reminded of the statement of a great citizen of Missouri, Mark Twain, who said that the first time he went to Niagara Falls the hack fares were so much higher than the Falls that he completely lost sight of the Falls. [Laughter.] It seems to me that if we are paying for locating an airport the sort of prices that would be paid in Belgium, in the most intensively farmed area in the world, there must be something wrong in the selection of the airport.

Mr. TRUMAN. It is a quartermaster depot.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That makes it all the worse.

Mr. TRUMAN. The comparison with Belgium is exactly pertinent. It is the same sort of land.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me read the testimony of Colonel Valliant:

Mr. LUDLOW. As the chairman has indicated, you cannot get $200 an acre for land that is 8 or 9 miles out of town, in some of our great American cities. Why do you think the land is so high down there?

Colonel VALLIANT. On account of transportation; the availability of the railroad to it, the highways leading to it, and the fact that it is close in toward the city, where the new commanding general down there desires to have it. This also is to be used as an auxiliary storage depot for bombs.

Incidentally, the fact was brought out before our committee that the actual negotiations for this land were carried on by the Department by long-distance telephone or by radio, I have forgotten which; I think by radio. I myself used to deal in land occasionally, and my experience is that it is a very wise thing to look at land before buying it by either telephone, radio, or otherwise.

Mr. TRUMAN. This land was not negotiated for by radio. The negotiations were carried on by the Army officers on the ground, as directed by the War Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. I continue reading from the testimony before the House committee:

Mr. WOODRUM. What sort of a survey or statement of this have you got? Have you anything to show that there is no other land available for this purpose? I do not remember this committee authorizing any purchase of land at that sort of price for those purposes, unless it was pretty clearly demonstrated that it could not be gotten for less money.

In addition, I am told that when the question of the establishment of this air base at Puerto Rico was before the committee they were informed that they would not need to purchase any land in Puerto Rico. What about that? Is that correct or not?

Colonel VALLIANT. I have never heard such a statement as that made, sir, and with the lack of availability of United States Government-owned land in Puerto Rico, I do not think such a statement could have been made with great authority back of it.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is a great deal of money to pay for that kind of land, it seems to me.

Let me digress long enough to say that when I asked one of the officers of the Army—I think Colonel Browne—when he was before our committee as a witness, or when he came before the committee afterward, how much of the area proposed to be acquired was pasture land and how much was sugar land and how much was waste land, he stated that 20 percent of the 800 acres was waste land. By that I understood him to mean mountain crags or very steep hills which are really waste land. Twenty percent of the 800 acres would be 160 acres of that character. Of the remainder, 49 percent was sugar land and 51 percent was pasture land for cows for the use of the "kiddies" in San Juan, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] stated a moment or two ago.

But in answer to Mr. WOODRUM's question, Colonel Valliant said:

There are a number of mountain ranges in Puerto Rico and the part that is flat and low is fairly well developed throughout the island, particularly if we have to run on some land that is being used for sugarcane production.

Mr. JOHNSON. Can you not find some spot down there a little distance from the city that would be much cheaper than that?

Colonel VALLIANT. I cannot answer that.

To paraphrase the testimony:

"Can you not, in the interest of our Government, find some land down there that is just as good for this purpose?"

"I cannot answer that."

That was one of the answers that made the committee feel that we ought to postpone this purchase for 60 days, until we could have the facts before us and act properly upon the matter.

Mr. JOHNSON. You referred a moment ago to the fact that the general in charge desired this location. Is it not his desire, that is, to control altogether, is it?

Colonel VALLIANT. When we consider the fact that we have to make it accessible both by railroad and by highway, it may not be possible—

"It may not be possible." He said he had not examined the site, but—it may not be possible to find other sites that would suit the requirements of the commanding general.

I should like to investigate that. I do not think we ought to buy sites necessarily because they would suit the commanding general. I would always have a very high respect for his opinion, of course, but I think we should have more information before we buy 800 acres at $400 an acre, over half of it either waste land or pasture land, which we all know from experience can be bought for a great deal less than $400 an acre. I think we ought to have more facts before us before we do this merely to please the commanding general.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TRUMAN. I tried to place the facts before the committee, but the committee did not have time to listen to me yesterday. I know the facts, because I have been on the ground, and have seen the situation. A survey was made by the military authorities in the interest of national defense. There is no other location that will meet the necessities as does the one recommended. I have been over every foot of the land. The Government already owns 271 and a fraction acres at this site. The idea is to place the contemplated ammunition depot where it will be of use for national defense. I doubt whether the officer from whose testimony the Senator is reading has ever been in Puerto Rico. It was not possible to send for the commanding general and bring him before the committee, unless the committee was willing to spend considerable money for that purpose. If the committee had asked me or the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], we would have given them all the facts they wanted.

Mr. McKELLAR. We did not know that. We did not know the two Senators had been on the ground, and we did not have their testimony. We can have the advantage of their testimony when the regular bill comes before the committee.

Mr. TRUMAN. By that time the new sugar crop will be in, and the land will cost just twice as much as it would now.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would not want the land to cost $800 an acre, I am very frank to say.

Mr. TRUMAN. In addition to that consideration, there are now several million dollars' worth of ammunition lying out in the weather.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was the Senator shown any site except the one in question?

Mr. TRUMAN. No; there is no other site available for the purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator was told that?

Mr. TRUMAN. The Senator made a complete survey of the whole north side of the island, both from the air and on foot.

Mr. McKELLAR. I asked the Senator whether he was shown any other site, and I understood him to say that he had not been. But that question can be brought up later.

I read further from the testimony:

Mr. JOHNSON. How much land is involved in the camp?

Colonel VALLIANT. Camp Buchanan consists of about one-hundred-and-eighty-odd acres that we acquired from the people of Puerto Rico 10 or 12 years ago.

Mr. JOHNSON. What did you pay for it?

Colonel VALLIANT. We exchanged it for some land that we owned up in San Juan.

Mr. LUDLOW. How far did you say this was from San Juan?

Colonel VALLIANT. About 15 miles.

Mr. LUDLOW. What sort of land is the intervening territory? Is it settled? How is it populated?

Colonel VALLIANT. I have driven by this site; that was in July, and it is not densely populated, any more than the rest of the island is. The building of the suburbs appears to be in the opposite direction.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I should like to know what evidence was presented to the committee which caused the committee to eliminate the House item from the bill. Was it because there was no justification, or not sufficient justification, for the item?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, at the proper time I shall give the Senate the benefit of my observations, and the reasons why I am committed to a restoration of this item. If the Senator would suspend and let me make my statement now, he might not have any objection to restoring the item.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like very much to finish presenting the testimony on which the House acted. The House itself could not have been very greatly impressed with the testimony, because it gave $200,000, when it was asked for $320,000, to pay for the 800 acres. Suppose we allowed $200,000; who knows what kind of land we would get? We might get the waste land, we might get the dairy land, or we might get a little sugarcane land.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the land desired is immediately adjacent to what is now known as Fort Buchanan. It is the only land available that is adjacent to it. It is either that or nothing. If they have to go somewhere else for a location for the depot and landing field, they must move Fort Buchanan, and the land in question will be subject to other disposition. The site now sought is immediately adjacent, and it is the only suitable site for this purpose. There is no other land available, because there are hills and mountains on every side.

Mr. McKELLAR. I read further:

Mr. JOHNSON. What did they raise on this land down there?

Colonel VALLIANT. They are raising sugarcane.

Mr. JOHNSON. On all of the land?

Colonel VALLIANT. No. Some of it is used for pasture land.

Mr. CANNON. And you say some of it is waste land?

Colonel VALLIANT. Some of it appears to be waste land.

Mr. JOHNSON. How much of it is waste land?

Colonel VALLIANT. A rough estimate would be perhaps 20 percent.

Mr. JOHNSON. How much is pasture land?

Colonel VALLIANT. The pasture land might be 30 percent.

A print was furnished our committee later which showed that 49 percent of the remainder was sugar land, and, as I recall, 51 percent was dairy land or pasture land.

Mr. JOHNSON. And the rest of it is what?

Colonel VALLIANT. Sugarcane.

Mr. LUDLOW. What would be the highest price per acre for the best land under this evaluation? You say some of it is waste land. That would bring the average down. What would be the highest price that you would pay per acre?

Colonel VALLIANT. The highest estimate seems to be $700 per acre.

Mr. WOODRUM. How many acres of that are there?

Colonel VALLIANT. There are 15½ acres of that.

Seven times fifteen makes $105,000, so that $107,000 or $108,000 would go for the 15-acre tract which is the most urgent.

Mr. LUDLOW. Why would that land be worth $700 an acre; because it is in the production of sugarcane?

Colonel VALLIANT. Sugar raises the price considerably.

Mr. CANNON. How much do they make on an acre of sugarcane down there?

We are asked to buy land, and one of the members of the House committee asked how much they were making on sugar land in that vicinity, and this is the answer of the witness:

I do not know, sir; I am sorry, I cannot answer that.

It struck me, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and it struck a majority of the members of our committee, that a man who is testifying as an expert for the Government, who is buying the land, who does not even know what the owner made on it last year, does not know very much about the land, and that we ought to have the opinion of experts who do know.

Mr. CANNON. You do not know the value of the product of an acre of sugarcane?

Colonel VALLIANT. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. LUDLOW. What use would this land be put to?

Colonel VALLIANT. This will be a storage depot for general supplies, quartermaster supplies, and also storage of bombs.

Mr. LUDLOW. Would all of the 800 acres be required for that?

Colonel VALLIANT. There would have to be some protective area for the storage of bombs, you see. We would need the whole 800 acres.

Mr. President, that is the testimony which came before the committee, and upon that testimony we thought that it would not do any harm for this matter to go over 60 days, until we could have complete testimony. When the bill reached the full committee we learned for the first time that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] had been to Puerto Rico and had looked at the land in question, and were very favorably impressed with it. We were also informed at that time that this was the only site to which they were taken and the only site they saw, and that the commanding general wanted the land purchased for reasons which do not appear in the testimony.

Under these circumstances, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I would not like to have the Government buy this land without more testimony being produced concerning it. I should like to know at what value it is assessed. We have not even the rate assessment on the land.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator, what is the average price of this 800 acres?

Mr. McKELLAR. Four hundred dollars an acre, with 49 acres of it in sugarcane, 160 acres in waste land; that is, land which can not be used for any purpose, and the remainder of it in pasture land.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to call his attention to the accurate figures, 38 percent is in sugar, 17 percent has been in sugar and is available for sugar, and 49 percent is now in pasture. There is very little waste land. I do not suppose there are over 10 acres of waste land in the whole tract.

Mr. McKELLAR. This witness testified 20 percent of it was waste land.

Mr. TRUMAN. I went over the tract, and I am stating the facts as I saw the land.

Mr. McKELLAR. What kind of land is the waste land?

Mr. TRUMAN. It is hills, behind which the authorities desire to put the ammunition depot, so that if it explodes it will not blow up the city of San Juan.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it near enough to San Juan so that the city might be blown up? I think it would be very unwise for us to store bombs and other ammunition and material so close to the city that if an enemy, or a person bent on mischief, should come by and blow up the depot, it would blow up the city, or have that tendency.

Mr. TRUMAN. The vast majority of the ammunition is being stored in warehouses in San Juan, at a cost of $3,000 a month to the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is very unfortunate, and the ammunition should not have been carried there until arrangements had been made to take care of it, it seems to me.

There is another point. I am not a military expert, but it seems to me that to put valuable military stores, and especially things which may blow up, close to the sea or on an island is rather a dangerous military venture. But, of course, I am not a military expert and cannot be certain in my opinion.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I wonder if the price asked is about the average price of land in that section.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. Ever since I have been on the Committee on Appropriations, which has been more than 20 years, anyway, I think we have had yearly appeals from the people of Puerto Rico for relief, it being stated that fiscal or financial or economic conditions in Puerto Rico were in exceedingly bad shape. When I went to Iowa some years ago I was told that the very best land there could be bought for $250 an acre, and it was as fine land as a crow ever flew over, and knowing about the Mississippi Delta lands, where $208 an acre is an enormous price for the choicest lands, it struck me with a good deal of surprise that we should pay $400 an acre for land, a part of which was sugar land, a part waste land absolutely, and a part pasture land.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the emergency appears in the appropriation, because this purchase is to be made by virtue of an act of July 2, 1917.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think probably some sort of emergency has existed in Puerto Rico for some time. But the Senator put his finger on another question, and the lack of answer to it struck me with some force. I asked the witnesses from whom this land is to be purchased. I thought the people on the island were poor, but if they own land which is worth $400 an acre there cannot be such great poverty, and perhaps our next appropriation for relief in Puerto Rico may be very much less. I hope to heaven it will be. I do not want to see any people suffer, but if all the lands on the island are worth, on an average, $400 an acre, it seems to me we could well reduce our relief appropriation during the present session of Congress.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat let me ask him whether he obtained an answer to the question as to who owned this land.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is not a word about that in the record, except that it is owned by 11 different persons.

BRITISH CENSORSHIP OF AMERICAN MAIL

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I rise at this time to register a complaint against Great Britain's censorship of our mail. I rise to call for a more friendly, a more neighborly, a more sympathetic attitude toward our country. While my objection is principally lodged against the unreasonable delay caused to our mail, it is likewise emphatically registered against the stopping of our ships and taking them off the safe neutral sea lanes and into the troubled, mine-infested, and submarine-infested areas of Europe.

Mr. President, under the Hague Convention, which was entered into by the nations of the world for the purpose of considering the treatment by the various nations of each other's mail, a definite attitude was taken and a definite convention or treaty was entered into which relates to the treatment of mail under present-day conditions.

Great Britain, along with the United States, joined and participated in that convention. The mails of neutral nations have always been treated with the utmost care and given expeditious treatment under the most severe and adverse circumstances.

There can be nothing gained by any country that interferes with the proper or expeditious dispatch of our mail. I read an editorial recently in the New York Times commenting on that particular question, which I believe should be read into the Record at this point.

I quote from the editorial—

Entirely apart from the question of technical rights under international law is the question of the wisdom of the British policy. It is not easy to see what the British Government stands to gain by interfering with United States mails that would compensate for the serious risk it may run of alienating American sympathy. The British note—

And this refers to a reply made to our State Department, which has already registered emphatic protest against the British treatment of our mails—

The British note stresses the "money orders, cheques, drafts, notes, and other negotiable instruments which may pass as the equivalent of money" to be found in the correspondence. But these, in general, merely effect a transfer of claims within Germany; they are useless to Germany as a whole except insofar as they can be used for the purchase of actual foreign commodities. To the extent that the British blockade can prevent the actual physical commodities from entering, mere money transfers become irrelevant. An even more important consideration is that any worth-while sum can be transferred to Germany by wireless without the use of the mails.

Mr. President, I cannot see, nor could that editorial writer see, nor for that matter can our State Department visualize the benefit resulting from the censorship of the mails of the United States.

Mr. President, we have no objection to the removal of mails from British ships, particularly mails that originate in or are destined to the United Kingdom. We have no objection to the censorship of mails that must normally and naturally pass through the British Empire in transit. But we emphatically object to the removal of mail from American, or for that matter, from other neutral ships, when such mail is addressed to other neutral countries. We object to Great Britain censoring and delaying such mail sent under those circumstances from our country.

The State Department readily admits the right of the British Government to censor mails, as I said a moment ago, originating or destined to the United Kingdom. They probably have the right, a right which the State Department readily admits, to take the mail off our clipper planes and to open that mail, to censor it, to detain it until their work is completed, but, Mr. President, in view of the fact that our people pay an extra charge for the expeditious delivery of the mail commonly referred to as air mail, it is a hardship on our people to have that mail delayed.

It certainly is not a friendly act, a neighborly act, on the part of a neutral nation to do that. It is a hardship on the air line corporation, because it loses in volume of business. When one considers the cost of the examination, and the futility of the examination, it occurs to me that Great Britain should at this time show a more sympathetic consideration for the articles of the Hague Convention, particularly as they relate to mail.

Mr. President, on December 27, 1939, this Government protested in a note to the British Government the censorship of American mail.

This note marked one of a series of protests against British interference with neutral rights. Other notes included the protest against the British Order in Council for the seizure of goods of German origin, wherever they may be destined; the one in which the United States is associated with the other American republics against violation of the safety zone drawn around the Western Hemisphere by the Panama Conference; and informal representations against long delay in detention of American ships for purpose of such search as is permitted by international law.

On January 17, last week, the British Government replied at length to our protest and quite definitely declined to make any changes in its present practices of delaying, opening, and censoring private mail destined to neutral countries from the United States.

Now let us see just what our protest amounted to—for this is a tremendously serious matter.

We said in our note to Great Britain that the State Department has been advised that British authorities have removed from British ships and from American and other neutral ships American mails addressed to neutral countries. We said that we had evidence that the British Government had opened and censored sealed-letter mail sent from this country. The State Department cited a few specific instances of this censorship and said that:

On October 10 the British authorities took from the steamship Black Gull 293 sacks of American mail addressed to Rotterdam and 10 sacks addressed to Antwerp. On October 12 Downs (a British contraband control port) removed from the Zandam (a Netherlands liner) 77 sacks of parcel post, 33 sacks of registered mail, and 156 sacks of ordinary mail addressed to the Netherlands, as well as 65 sacks of ordinary mail addressed to Belgium, 4 to Luxemburg, 3 to Danzig, and 259 to Germany. On October 12 authorities at Weymouth removed from the Black Tern 94 sacks of American mail addressed to Rotterdam, 81 to Antwerp, and 184 to Germany. On October 24 authorities at Kirkwall removed from the Astrid-Thorden 468 bags of mail from New York to Gothenburg (Sweden) and 18 bags from New York to Helsinki.

The note went on to state that many additional individual instances of British censorship have come to the State Department's attention.

These four specific instances which were mentioned in detail bring the total to more than 1,700 sacks of American private mail which definitely have been opened and censored by British authorities.

This Government's note went on to indicate clearly our position with respect to this objectionable practice. The note declared:

This Government readily admits the right of the British Government to censor private mails originating in or destined to the United Kingdom or private mails which normally pass through the United Kingdom for transmission to their final destination. It cannot admit the right of the British authorities to interfere with American mails on American or other neutral ships on the high seas, nor can it admit the right of the British Government to censor mail on ships which have involuntarily entered British ports.

Mr. President, we recently adopted a neutrality policy which indicated our desire to remain aloof from involvement in the war; a neutrality policy which prevented our ships from entering the troubled waters of Europe. There are in the record a number of instances in which British ships hailed American ships on the high seas, outside the war zones of Europe, and brought them either to British ports or other European ports in the proscribed area. That is in violation of the policy of our neutrality act. That is seizing mails on neutral ships bound for neutral countries, and is in no wise related to the present European conflict. Surely it is not a friendly act, nor is it to be expected in this instance. I have no objection, of course, to the investigation of American cargoes under international law; but I do believe an exception should be made of mails emanating from this country, which do not touch on territory belonging to the British Empire, and mails destined to neutral countries. We readily realize that holding up American ships involuntarily brought into belligerent ports for as much as 1, 2, or even 3 weeks, is a hardship to the mailer, a financial burden to the shipper, and embarrassing treatment to our country. As I said a moment ago, such procedure will in no wise aid in the determination of the war. It will not pay the cost that is necessary for the continuation of a policy of that kind.

The note from our State Department continued by pointing out that the Eleventh Hague Convention recognizes that postal correspondence of neutrals or belligerents is inviolable on the high seas. It added that:

The United States Government regards as particularly objectionable the practice of taking mails from vessels which ply directly between American and neutral European ports and which through some form of duress, are induced to call at designated British control bases. This is believed to be a clear violation of the immunity provided by the Hague Convention.

Our Government asked in that note that it receive early assurances that this practice of censorship on the part of the British Government be discontinued.

On January 20, the British Government replied at some length and summed up its position by stating that it finds itself unable to share the views of the United States Government that its action in examining neutral mail in British or neutral shipping is contrary to its obligations under international law.

The British note seeks to defend its present practice by pointing out that contraband may be contained in letter mail. While that might seem a little incredible to the average person, the British note asserts that currency, checks, securities, industrial diamonds, and the like may quite easily be passed into hostile hands by way of a letter envelope of limited size, weight, and bulk. The note reminds us that in May 1916 our Government told Great Britain that—

The Government of the United States is inclined to the opinion that the class of mail matter which includes stocks, bonds, coupons, and similar securities is to be regarded as of the same nature as merchandise or other articles of property and subject to the same exercise of belligerent rights. Money orders, checks, drafts, notes, and other negotiable instruments which may pass as the equivalent of money are, it is considered, also to be classed as merchandise.

However, let me say, Mr. President, that the delegates assembled at the Hague Convention, which had to deal with mail, and mail only, had full knowledge of what contraband in wartime means; and with that thought in mind they separated and segregated private and public mail from what might otherwise be considered contraband cargo in time of war.

The British Government likewise states that—

Quite apart from transmission of contraband the possibility must be taken into account of the use of the letter post by Germans to transmit military intelligence, to promote sabotage, and to carry on other hostile acts. It is in accordance with international law for belligerents to prevent intelligence reaching the enemy which might assist them in hostile operations.

I may say in passing that, in my judgment, we have the most efficient and the most perfect postal investigating and inspecting system in the world. We have made every effort, and have gone to great lengths in trying to prevent injury to any country insofar as our mailings are concerned. Surely we deserve more friendly consideration; and I most emphatically support the State Department in its appeal for justice to the American mailer and to the American shipper.

The British note remarks that private mails were completely destroyed when several British ships were sunk since the beginning of the present war. These English ships carried neutral mail, but the indiscriminate sinking of the vessels without regard to the safety of the neutral correspondence abroad was not made a subject of protest by our Government to the German Government, it is revealed. At least, the note states that the British Government has had no word that we protested to the German Government in those instances.

After defending its right to censor American mail, the British note goes on rather gallantly to state:

In contrast to this reckless and indiscriminate destruction of neutral property, the examination conducted by His Majesty's Government of the mails which are under discussion does not involve innocent mail being either confiscated or destroyed. In accordance with the terms of the Hague Convention, mail found in ships which have been diverted to British ports is forwarded to its destination as soon as possible after its innocent nature is established. In no case is genuine correspondence from the United States seized or confiscated by His Majesty's Government.

In addition to this exchange of notes with the British Government, I am informed that our Government has likewise lodged a similar protest against similar censorship by the French Government. Not so much publicity, however, has been accorded that protest; and I am not aware whether or not the French Government has responded or what the nature of its response may be.

Mr. President, we have ascertained from reliable sources that American ships passing through the Straits of Gibraltar are involuntarily haled into a belligerent port, either the port which is located there or a port a great distance from there. The distant port I have in mind is the port of Marseilles. American ships were detained while their cargoes were examined, for as long as 2 or 3 weeks, while ships of other neutral nations were detained on an average of only 4 or 5 days. More than that, the captain of one of the American ships readily agreed to an investigation, and even censorship of his cargo, if the British authorities would allow that ship to pass on to Naples, its destination. But that privilege was not accorded the American ship. It was detained at the port of Gibraltar, and the delay was very costly and very embarrassing.

Censorship by the British Government of the private mail of American citizens—especially if that mail is addressed to another neutral country—appeals to me to be an exceedingly serious matter. I think our Government should continue to challenge the right of the British Government to intercept, examine, and delay American mails on the high seas or mails which are involuntarily taken into British ports.

It has been represented in the press that our State Department officials are keenly disappointed in the attitude taken by the British Government in response to our formal protest against interference with mail addressed to foreign countries by private American citizens. The State Department takes the position that inspection and censorship of United States letter mail is a violation of the Hague Convention which, quite specifically, guarantees the inviolability of mail on the high seas sent by neutrals or belligerents. It is held that interception, delay, and possibly confiscation of United States mail on the part of the British Government is in violation of the guarantees set up in the Hague Convention. In this connection, I consider that our State Department is on very solid ground. Its attitude will be favorably reflected in the judgment of all American citizens.

We are not in this war and we do not intend to be involved in its military operations. Our every effort is devoted to the cause of peace and to military noninvolvement. In the existing Neutrality Act, I consider that we put a great deal of our pride in our pocket in order to guarantee ourselves a more than reasonable chance to remain aloof from Europe and its conflicts. We withdrew our ships, our money, and our nationals from the danger zones of the war abroad. We went away out on an economic limb, so to speak, to sacrifice profitable trade and commerce. We made financial sacrifices and we waived many of our traditional rights to the freedom of the seas in order that we might provide for our country the greatest possible measure of security against entanglement in the European quarrel.

After making all of these concessions, we rightfully felt that we had gone about as far as our dignity and economy would permit us to go. Now, however, we discover that unwelcome interference and humiliating indignity are being visited upon us in the form of unrestricted censorship of the mails of our private citizens.

We have, of course, a real pride in the United States Postal System. It represents an ultimate achievement in service and efficiency. We have come to place absolute reliance in the inviolability of a sealed and posted letter. Mr. President, for 18 years I was associated with the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and for 8 years I was chairman of that committee. So, I am intensely concerned with our mails, and for that reason and because of my knowledge of the mails, I can realize the detrimental effect and the inefficiency resulting from the British censorship.

Furthermore, it is a shock to our integrity and to our sense of the sacredness and inviolability of the United States mail to realize that we cannot post a letter destined to another neutral country without the fear that it may be intercepted, censored, delayed, and possibly destroyed by a belligerent power. That situation obtains whether we send our mail by boat or by air.

We do not condone our private mails being used for purposes of sabotage, for the purpose of transmitting military intelligence, or for the purpose of assisting one or another of the belligerents in any manner. However, it is an entirely different matter when innocent letter mail is delayed and tampered with. In many cases, it appears never to reach its intended destination.

Let me give an example: A clipper plane left here day before yesterday, Sunday, January 21, with 963 pounds of letter mail aboard. That plane was detained at Bermuda by British authorities. No one knows how long it will be detained for examination and general censorship. Some of it may never reach its intended destination, even though that destination be a neutral country. A clipper plane leaving here on January 18 suffered the loss of 2,508 pounds of mail, also at Bermuda. In this instance, 1,647 pounds of the mail was permitted to continue on its way but 861 pounds were held for an unstated length of time for censorship. No one can predict whether all of that mail will ever reach its proper destination.

But it is true, Mr. President, as everyone who is familiar with the Air Mail Service realizes, that all the benefits of the expeditious dispatch of that mail have been lost by reason of the prolonged detention by the censorship control at Bermuda. We recognize their right in this instance, because that mail has been stopped on territory that belongs to the United Kingdom, but we recognize the fact also that we have accorded our wholehearted cooperation to the British authorities, and we expect in return that they will speedily examine this mail, that they will prevent undue delay, and that they will help us in our effort to continue this particular service as the most expeditious service of mail that we have in this country.

Not long ago the S. S. Washington, an American vessel, was held at Gibraltar by the British authorities for the examination of 426 bags of American private mail. I am informed that all American mail on American boats going by way of Gibraltar is examined and censored. Much of this mail is, of course, intended for Germany, but also much of it is destined for Italy and other neutral countries.

Mr. President, I have in my hands accounts of at least 100 typical complaints made by American citizens against British censorship. I do not intend to bore the Senate with a long recitation of these complaints, but I wish to refer to a few of them as examples of the manner in which this practice is directly affecting our people.

For instance, a man in Dayton, Ohio, asks if the $10 he sent to his brother in Vienna and to his sister in Czechoslovakia will reach them, or will England take the money?

A company in New York City complains that a letter received from Malta is marked "opened by Censor No. 9." The letter fails to contain a check for £50 stated to be enclosed with the letter.

In the instance of mail from Malta, Great Britain has the right to censor it, as Malta is British territory.

A man in Beverly Hills, Calif., writes "Since when does the British Empire decide whether Uncle Sam's mail is to be delivered or not?" He protests the censorship of his mail sent abroad.

A company in Philadelphia complains of tardy delivery of private mail sent to Switzerland, and submits an envelope which has been opened and marked by British censors.

A company in Astoria, Oreg., protests that two letters sent by air mail to Sweden were delayed in delivery by British censorship.

A lady in Bridgeport, Conn., complains with some vehemence that an English censor in Ireland has opened and censored her mail, and she says, "I object to it, and I ask that you stop it."

Another lady in West Barrington, R. I., asks the best way to send $500 to Egypt. Fear of censorship is expressed in her complaint.

A man in Duluth, Minn., states that his private mail destined for Norway was badly delayed and urges that the United States send battleships with mail steamers to show the British that they must respect United States mail.

A man in Reisterstown, Md., says, "I know letter from Hungary was censored and contents removed except canceled stamps sent by the American consul. I ask for return of all matter censored out of my mail."

A man in New York City complains of nonreceipt by the American consul at Vienna of affidavits needed in connection with a visa and which were sent registered.

A lady in Amherst, Mass., asks why letter received from American citizen now in Jamaica should be censored. By whose authority was it done, she demands.

As Jamaica is British territory, British officials had a right to open that mail. But, Mr. President, I am trying to point out in the first place that we adopted a neutrality policy new in the history of international law. That policy indicated the friendly attitude of this country to all the nations of the world. By the adoption of that policy we made a great economic sacrifice in order to remain out of the whirlpool of the European war. We object, Mr. President, to having our ships halted on the high seas and taken into the dangerous waters surrounding the belligerent nations of the Old World. We object also to the confiscation of mail emanating in our country in transit in our ships and destined to be delivered in nations nowise engaged in the war.

We are interested, Mr. President, in allaying the complaints, in minimizing the ill feeling that is being developed in America because of the unjust actions and restrictions which delay the delivery of our mail. We appeal, in support of the contention of our State Department, to the Government of Great Britain. We ask the British authorities, in keeping with the principles of the Hague Convention, to which they have so frequently subscribed in the past, to help us in the delivery of this mail; to help us keep our ships out of the danger zone, and to help us keep down the rising number of complaints which are emanating from our people. We ask, Mr. President, for the friendly, sympathetic, and neighborly cooperation of the belligerent nations, and of the neutral nations, so that our shipping may in no way be affected. We are anxious to remain at peace; we are anxious to treat the nations of the world fairly and justly. We want to keep this war, and everything connected with it, as far away from America as we can; and in our efforts to accomplish that laudable end we bespeak only the friendly consideration of the justifiable complaints registered by our State Department in connection with these recurring incidents.

Mr. President, we know the sad story of the last war, and the difficulties which beset this country in its relations with the belligerent nations before our entry into that war. It is to obviate or to keep down those difficulties, which ultimately involved us in the war, that there has been developed by our State Department the policy contained in the notes to Great Britain and particularly applicable in this instance.

In closing, I again register my complaint against the unjustifiable, involuntary halting of our ships off the peaceful lanes of the ocean and into the belligerent seas, where danger may beset them, and inflame the people of our country. I ask the belligerent powers to be very careful, to be very sympathetic in the treatment of mail originating in America, traversing the seas on American ships, and not destined for belligerent nations. The destruction by a submarine or a mine of an American ship leaving a belligerent port into which it was forced by a naval vessel against the will of the commander of the American ship might develop into a very serious problem. No good of a compensating degree can result from a confiscation of our mail, from the censorship of our mail, or from the delay of our mail.

I call for a strict compliance with the real spirit and letter of the Hague Convention. I call for the sympathetic consideration of the justifiable complaints registered by our State Department. I do it as one who believes in peace, who believes that it is the destiny of our country to remain at peace. I do it as one who wishes to allay, keep down, and diminish any feeling of complaint or opposition against any of the belligerent nations of the world.

Mr. President, I hope the reply to the State Department's last note to the Government of Great Britain will be characterized by a high degree of friendliness, and by an eagerness to cooperate in our efforts to secure the justice which we believe is due to us.

We wish to preserve the privacy of the United States mail. We do not wish the private mail of our citizens to be tampered with, to be delayed, or to be subjected to undue and unmerited censorship. We are taking all possible steps to remove ourselves from even the slightest participation in the current war. We are demonstrating that we mean to be neutral and that we desire to keep our ships and our nationals clear of the conflict in Europe. Our every act has been designed to impress upon belligerents abroad our desire to remain aloof, insofar as it is possible for a nation to do so. Certainly, our acts have been such as to warrant a more cooperative attitude on the part of the British Government with regard to the mail of our citizens.

I heartily concur in the action thus far taken by the Secretary of State. Circumstances demand, and we insist, that our mail go unmolested and uncensored to its neutral destination.

SUPPLEMENTAL MILITARY AND NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the members of the committee having the bill in charge as to the justification for many of the items for which appropriations are asked.

My recollection is that at the last session of Congress we appropriated six or seven hundred million dollars for the Army, and a sum much in excess of that amount for the Navy. We have had no war since that time. Our shores have not been invaded. We do not anticipate any war. The last appropriation bills dealing with the Army and the Navy made, as we believed, not only ample but very, very generous provision for both the Army and the Navy for the ensuing year and for a number of years, to be supplemented, of course, as the years go by, with additional appropriations.

Notwithstanding the appropriation for military purposes of more than a billion and a half dollars, we now have before us a deficiency bill carrying several hundred million dollars. It seems to me that the committees have been derelict—and, of course, I include committees of which I am a member—in approving these large, and in many instances unnecessarily large, deficit appropriations.

A number of years ago Congress attempted to prevent these deficits. They recognized the fact that the Congress carries the purse as well as the sword, and that no expenditures may be made by the Federal Government except such as are authorized by the Congress of the United States. Notwithstanding the law which we passed to prevent such expenditures, however, we are confronted at nearly every session of Congress with demands for very large deficit appropriations.

I invite attention to the provisions of the act of Congress known as section 665 of title 31 of the United States Code, Annotated, entitled "Money and Finance." The heading of the section reads as follows:

Sec. 665. Expenditures in excess of appropriations; voluntary service forbidden; apportionment of appropriations for contingent expenses or other general purposes.

This is the section itself:

No executive department or other Government establishment of the United States shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract or other obligation for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations unless such contract or obligation is authorized by law.

I understand that those in charge of the pending bill concede that contracts have been entered into calling for large expenditures of the public funds, and that those contracts have not been and are not authorized by law.

Continuing the section:

Nor shall any department or any officer of the Government accept voluntary service for the Government or employ personal service in excess of that authorized by law, except in cases of sudden emergency involving the loss of human life or the destruction of property.

And, hastily reading this bill, I have not discovered that these appropriations or contracts come within that provision.

All appropriations made for contingent expenses or other general purposes, except appropriations made in fulfillment of contract obligations expressly authorized by law, or for objects required or authorized by law without reference to the amounts annually appropriated therefor, shall, on or before the beginning of each fiscal year, be so apportioned by monthly or other allotments as to prevent expenditures in one portion of the year which may necessitate deficiency or additional appropriations to complete the service of the fiscal year for which said appropriations are made; and all such apportionments shall be adhered to and shall not be waived or modified except upon the happening of some extraordinary emergency or unusual circumstance which could not be anticipated at the time of making such apportionment, but this provision shall not apply to the contingent appropriations of the Senate or House of Representatives; and in case said apportionments are waived or modified as herein provided, the same shall be waived or modified in writing by the head of such executive department or other Government establishment having control of the expenditure, and the reasons therefor shall be fully set forth in each particular case and communicated to Congress in connection with estimates for any additional appropriations required on account thereof.

None of these provisions has been complied with.

Further reading:

Any person violating any provision of this section shall be summarily removed from office and may also be punished by a fine of not less than $100 or by imprisonment for not less than 1 month.

Mr. President, I stated a moment ago, and I repeat, that many of the Federal agencies, in the face of this statute, which is clear and unambiguous, create deficits, deliberately or otherwise, and they expect that as soon as Congress meets, whether it be shortly thereafter or several months later, Congress will put the stamp of approval upon their expenditures, made without authority of law, legalize them, and pass an appropriation bill to cover the deficiencies which have been created, or to meet contractual obligations which have been entered into in violation of law.

I should like to know what authority exists for this large appropriation bill. Obviously this statute, as I read it, would interdict these expenditures. It seems that Congress, charged with the responsibility of raising revenue and of making appropriations to meet the obligations of the Government, ought to inquire into these violations of the law, and should by its action indicate that it will not approve these unauthorized expenditures. Congress should give notice to the departments that when it makes an appropriation it expects the departments and agencies to live within the terms of the appropriations, and not to run to Congress as soon as it convenes and ask for large appropriations to meet deficiencies.

I know of no condition which has arisen during the last few months, since we made a very large appropriation for the Army and for the Navy, which would warrant a deficiency bill of several hundred million dollars. I presume, however, that before Congress adjourns nearly every department of the Government will be before us asking for large appropriations, not only for the coming year, but to meet deficiencies which have been created during the present fiscal year.

Mr. President, I do not find it in my heart to support some of the provisions of the bill. I hope that the War Department and the Navy Department and other agencies of the Government will conform to the terms of the statute to which I have invited attention.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma obtained the floor.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I wish to make a statement about the subject discussed by the Senator from Utah.

I think it should be stated that the question as to whether or not appropriations were carried in the pending bill for purposes not authorized by law was investigated at some length by the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, and in the Senate by the Committee on Appropriations. The fact is that, in my opinion, there is a question as to only one or two items.

The Senator says that he knows of no emergency requiring the incurring of a deficiency. The emergency was the present war in Europe, and as a result of the existence of that war the President on September 8 issued an Executive order declaring that an extraordinary emergency existed.

The deficiency act from which the Senator has read specifically provides that funds appropriated for a fiscal year shall be apportioned, and that apportionment shall not be waived or modified except upon the happening of some extraordinary emergency or unusual circumstance which could not be anticipated at the time of the making of such apportionment. Whenever there is an emergency which could not be anticipated, the departments are authorized to spend funds without regard to the apportionment.

The fact in this case is that the departments acted in good faith with the Congress, for shortly after the declaration of the emergency, in September, when the Congress met, the Congress was advised of what had been done by the President in signing the Executive order. It was notified certainly through the chairmen of the respective subcommittees having charge of the appropriations, and the Congress took the position that in the extraordinary session its committees would not meet. The majority of the Senate, acting through its steering committee, took that position, and communicated that policy to the chairmen of the other committees. The Senate will recall that no committee met during the extraordinary session even for the purpose of considering nominations. Therefore the Committee on Appropriations did not at that time consider the estimates for appropriations prepared by the Executive.

Strictly in accordance with the deficiency law, as soon as the Congress met in January an estimate of deficiencies was sent to the Congress. As a matter of fact, it was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives early in the fall, and during the fall, while the Congress was in recess, the bill now before us was considered by the Committee on Appropriations.

What happened was a result of waiving the apportionment provisions of the law. The Departments proceeded to spend funds which were appropriated by the Congress for specific purposes. They were instructed, however, not to spend such funds so as to have them exhausted before February, in order to give the Congress ample time to act upon the estimates submitted to the Congress for a deficiency appropriation.

There are special statutes which give to the executive departments the right to create deficiencies for fuel, transportation, clothing, and many other items, once personnel is increased. There is no question as to the authority of the President, under a special statute, whenever he declares an emergency to exist, to increase the personnel of the Army or Navy within the authorized strength. The increases in the Army and Navy and Marine Corps, as a result of the President's order, were within the authorized peace strength of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

I stated there was but one item in question. As a matter of fact, that was the determination of the House. It was an item covering some temporary buildings, hospital buildings, which had been erected. There is a question whether a building, even though it be regarded as a temporary building, was authorized by any of the appropriations. With the exception of that one item, I do not know of any item which was not authorized by law. The difference here is that the money has been spent without regard to apportionment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment. This amendment has to do with the entire policy of the Nation regarding national defense.

We have in this country and in our possessions approximately 200 military establishments. These establishments are located in the several States, save those in the Territories and possessions, which have no representation upon this floor and cannot be heard through their own chosen representatives. So the Senate must constitute itself into a committee to consider itself the agent of these several Territories.

Inasmuch as I shall discuss rather briefly our national-defense program, and inasmuch as I may mention some of the establishments which may be discontinued—which would save this country multiplied millions—I think the Senators who are interested in those establishments should be on the floor. Therefore I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	Hughes	Russell
Ashurst	Downey	Johnson, Calif.	Schwartz
Bailey	Ellender	Johnson, Colo.	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Frazier	King	Shipstead
Barbour	George	Lee	Slattey

Clark, Mo.	Hayden	Pepper	Wagner
Connally	Herring	Radcliffe	Walsh
Danaher	Holman	Reed	Wheeler
Davis	Holt	Reynolds	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the question pending before the Senate relates to an amendment of the Senate committee to the House bill. The House bill proposes to appropriate a few hundred thousand dollars to buy some land adjacent to Fort Buchanan, at San Juan, P. R., for the expansion of that military post. The Senate committee struck out a large part of the House appropriation, and the only reason given is that the committee did not have sufficient information upon which to base an opinion.

Mr. President, if that is to be the policy of the Senate, let me make this observation: I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations. We appropriate money literally by the tens of billions of dollars to be spent at points we know not of and for purposes we never heard of. That statement will not be challenged.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was one of the reasons; but the principal reason was that there was a recommendation of $400 an acre, on an average, for 800 acres of land, 20 percent of which is land that is not useful for anything, and part of which is pasture land. Only about 49 percent of it is sugar land.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall come to that point a little later in my remarks.

Mr. President, if the Congress desires to save money we can save it by being parsimonious with our Military Establishment. We can commence right here in Washington. We can close Fort Myer, across the river, and save some money. We can close the navy yard in the city of Washington and save some money. Going down the Potomac, we can close Quantico and save some money. We can close Langley Field in Virginia and save much money.

The next State to the south is North Carolina. We can close Fort Bragg in North Carolina and save much money.

The next State to the south is South Carolina. We can close Camp Jackson, at Columbia, S. C., and save a large sum of money. We can send home the soldiers who are now there and who do not belong there, and save a substantial amount of money. We can go across to Charleston, S. C., and save much money there by closing several military establishments.

In Georgia we can save some money by closing the activities at Savannah. We now have 16,000 or 17,000 soldiers assembled at Fort Benning. We could send those soldiers home and save a large amount of money. We could sell the land on which Fort Benning is located—a whole county in Georgia—and to that extent we could replenish the Federal Treasury.

Mr. President, I am not asking that these things be done.

Coming down to Florida, we could refuse to buy land at Fort Eglin, in northern Florida. The land is desired for a proving ground to test guns and ammunition. We could save a large amount of money. We could close the establishment at Pensacola. We could stop the improvement of Tampa, and save 6,000 acres for some other beneficial use, and save multiplied millions which it will cost to build there a great air field and a great depot.

In Alabama we could close Maxwell Field, a big air field at Montgomery, and save multiplied millions, because the camp is not yet completed.

Going across to Louisiana, we could close Barksdale Field and thereby save money. If we should close and abolish the military establishments in Texas we could save upward of half a billion dollars.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. We could save more money by moving the rest of the military establishments down to Texas. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am not prepared to discuss that issue at this time, Mr. President; but before long we shall have before us a request to add 2,000,000 acres to the reservation at Fort Bliss in Texas. That may be necessary, but it will be discussed when the issue comes before the Congress.

I could go farther west, to New Mexico and Arizona. In Arizona we found the finest trained soldiers in the entire United States, West Point not excepted.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I merely wish to remark that in case the Senate should act on the suggestions of the Senator from Oklahoma, who has devoted so much time to the study of our military establishments, I entreat the Members of the Senate not to do it until after the next election. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, as we proceed in this session of Congress I wish now to serve notice that I shall not be agreeable to requests made for all these expansion programs. At some points I think we are spending money ridiculously and foolishly; and I shall come to those matters, not this afternoon, but at other times when the issues come before the Senate.

In southern Arizona, at a fort by the name of Huachuca, at the base of the southern edge of the Rocky Mountains, we found something like a thousand or twelve hundred colored soldiers on the reservation, miles away from any city of importance. Those soldiers passed in review before the congressional delegation. During the course of years I have seen reviews in all sections of the country. Of all the reviews I have witnessed, West Point not excluded, the review at Fort Huachuca disclosed the best trained soldiers, from the standpoint of marching, that I have ever seen. So if we want to train soldiers to march we should send them down to Fort Huachuca in southern Arizona.

Mr. President, California is dotted with military establishments. Beginning at San Diego, and even farther south, inland and on the seacoast, California is practically a military camp today. Later we shall come to the various items going to make up the California military establishments; but I shall not discuss them today. However, if we desire to save money, we can decline to approve the expansion program. We can refuse to buy the additional land necessary.

In the early days of air navigation airplanes were small and slow moving. To land an airplane of that character did not require much of a field. Forty acres was ample for some of those small, slow planes. However, today we have planes which will travel 400 miles an hour. At Moffett Field in California we saw planes which we were told were flying in excess of 360 miles an hour. I had no means of measuring the speed, but we were told that, and I believe the information to be correct.

The fast-flying planes of today must land at a speed of about 130 miles an hour. That means that they cannot land within a quarter of a mile, or 1,320 feet. They cannot land in safety on a field half a mile in length. So today, in order to accommodate the fast, large planes, small fields must be expanded. The runways must be made longer; and if the runways cannot be made longer, the fields must be abandoned.

At Crissy Field in San Francisco we saw a concrete example of a field that could not be expanded, and as a result the field had to be abandoned, and it has been abandoned. Crissy Field was built a few feet above San Francisco Bay. One end abuts against a mountain, which is now one end of the Golden Gate Bridge. It is a rocky mountain, and could not be removed. The other end of the field extends out into San Francisco Bay, and just in front of the field are the docks and wharves of the military establishment. The field could not be expanded in that direction. It could not be expanded out into the bay, because ships must come and go, and to make the field sufficiently long would require filling in the bay. So the field could be expanded in no direction, and, being too small for the heavy, fast ships, it had to be abandoned.

When our committee met last summer to consider the War Department bill we were told that France Field, on the Atlantic side of the Panama Canal, was to be abandoned. The field was too small to accommodate the fast, heavy planes. They could not land there. Therefore, the field was of no further use to the military establishments of either the Army or the Navy. However, after the bill was passed, I learned that France Field, on the Atlantic side of the Panama Canal, instead of being abandoned, was to be expanded. Some of the hangars and other facilities built around the field are now to be destroyed. They are to be razed, and the swamp land—for that is what it is—will be filled in, and the field will be expanded. Unless that is done there will be no landing field on the Atlantic side of the Panama Canal.

On the Pacific side the Department is expanding what is known as Allbrook Field. That field was built only a year or two ago. Yet now more money is needed to build the runways longer, so that fast, heavy ships may land on the runways of Allbrook Field. In addition to Allbrook Field in Panama, an entirely new field is now being built in the interior.

To build that field the land must first be cleared. We own the land. We own the Canal Zone, so we do not have to pay $400 an acre for the land. However, Mr. President, when we clear the land, cut down the mountains, and move the land that is now there in the form of mountains over into the valleys and fill up the valleys for runways, the land underneath the new air field will cost thousands upon thousands of dollars per acre.

Yet we have an objection here to buying in Puerto Rico 800 acres, sugar land, in the main, to be added to Fort Buchanan, a fort which we now own. The only objection, so far as I know, is that the land is costing too much. We do not know who owns the land. Personally, I do not know who owns the land and I do not care who owns it. I do care whether or not we pay a reasonable price for the land, but who owns the land is of no concern to me.

The purchase of the land, Mr. President, is an administrative act. If the Congress makes an appropriation to buy land and passes a legislative act, then, if the administrators of that fund pay more than the land is worth, that is malfeasance, I might state, on the part of the administrative branch of the Government, and I am not now ready to make that charge against the War Department or against the Navy Department.

If we want to save money, we should commence here in the city of Washington. In many directions we could curtail expenditures. We could disband our several military establishments, at a saving this year of about $2,000,000,000. If we should do that, we would have no army; we would have no navy; and we would have millions of acres of land which we could sell with which to replenish what some say is an almost bankrupt Treasury. We could discharge the Army personnel of 227,000, or thereabouts, and the Navy personnel of over 200,000, and they could go out in everyday life and find jobs. If they could not find them, we could add to our relief load 500,000 more persons who would become unemployed.

Mr. President, this little item affecting Puerto Rico in this bill serves to bring out the whole question of the policy of the Nation regarding national defense. I ask the question, Does the United States need an army? Does the United States need a navy? Is there any Senator upon the floor ready now to say that the United States needs no army? I pause for a reply. Is there any Senator upon the floor prepared to rise in his place and say that the United States needs no navy? I pause for a reply, and I hear none. Is there a Senator upon this floor prepared now to say that the United States needs no air corps as a part of the national defense? I pause for a reply, and I hear none. So, Mr. President, it must be conceded that we do need an army; that we do need a navy; and that we do need an air corps to be a component part of our national-defense establishment.

Now, the question is what kind of an army do we need; what kind of a navy do we need; and what kind of an air corps do we need?

We concede we must have them. If we are going to have them, where are we going to put them? Shall we place them in the interior of the United States, thus leaving the seacoast wholly unprotected and undefended? Shall we place them on the desert in Utah?

I may state that the distinguished senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is not now present, although I think he knew I was to mention his State. There is in the deserts of Utah an arsenal where there are now being loaded shells and bombs for destructive purposes. Adjacent to that arsenal, where bombs and shells are being loaded with TNT, we are now spending multiplied millions of dollars in building an airport. For what purpose? It is not a commercial airport; there is no town near it; it is on the desert. It is impossible to reach that airport or that arsenal without going through gates, although there are no fences except barbed-wire ones. When one reaches the gates he is searched. The first thing required is that the visitor divest himself of all matches and cigar or cigarette lighters. It is against the law to enter that arsenal reservation with a package of matches or a single match or even a cigarette lighter on one's person. A man goes around with a hat, and the visitor takes out his matches. His pockets are searched carefully and matches and cigarette lighters are taken and put in the hat. Then the visitor can go on the reservation, and when he departs he may have returned to him the matches, if he wishes them, and his cigarette lighter, if he wishes it; but one cannot go to this airport except after such an inspection.

What is this airport for? It embraces thousands of acres of land in the desert near Ogden, Utah. It is not, I repeat, a commercial airport. That desert land grows nothing save an occasional weed when rains infrequently come. That land, on an average, cost $47 an acre although it is worthless for any purpose on earth. That may have been a reasonable cost; that may be the price for which land sells on the desert around Ogden, Utah; I do not know as to that. But, Mr. President, we could save some money by moving that would-be arsenal from Ogden, Utah, to some other place; we could save money by not spending money in developing that airfield close to Ogden, Utah, and the arsenal there. As the military appropriation bills come before the Senate they will contain items all of which I cannot now remember but I will mention one of them.

We are today shipping by freight to Ogden, Utah, cast-iron or steel bombs, the raw bombs, from the places where they are made, the steel factories. Then we are shipping the ingredients, the high explosives, from whatever places they are being made to Ogden, Utah. There the TNT in the crystallized form is melted and mixed with other ingredients and put in the empty cast-iron or steel bombs and shells. After the bombs are filled with TNT or other high explosives, the nose, or the cap, so to speak, is put on the bombs; then the bombs or shells are stored on another desert tract of land in the immediate vicinity. When completed the bombs are not shipped back to some place where they could be used, because there is not a cannon, so far as I know, within a thousand miles of that arsenal. Yet on a large tract of ground someone has had built there—not someone in this administration—115 large concrete igloos, concrete buildings, with rather thick walls, with concrete floors, and covered on top with dirt as a camouflage.

Those igloos for the storing of ammunition on the desert in Utah are a thousand miles or more from the Atlantic coast, a thousand miles or more from the Pacific coast, and, of course, as far from the Gulf of Mexico. These shells and bombs must be shipped to the points at which it is intended to use them, where, unless there should be warfare in the interior of the United States, they must be sent to the western coast or to the eastern coast, or to the Gulf of Mexico coast, or to Hawaii, or the Philippines, or Puerto Rico, or Panama. How are we to transport those shells and bombs from the desert of Utah to the points where they would be used? There are there today, I repeat, 115 large concrete igloos containing hundreds of thousands of bombs and shells, loaded, ready for use, not in Utah, but at some other place, at a training ground, or some place of actual warfare. How are we to transport those shells and bombs to the place where they are to be used? They are no good on the desert. In order to get the bombs and shells where they are to be used, we are building a great airport in Utah so that airplanes may come and get a bomb or two bombs. One plane can carry only two of the larger size bombs, because the bombs weigh over a ton, and the present bombing planes can carry only 2 or 3 tons. So a plane comes in, lands at this airport, takes on two bombs and goes back to the training ground or to the scene of potential warfare. That airfield, in connection with the Ogden arsenal, is costing multiplied millions, and its only purpose, so far as I know, is as a field for planes bringing empty shells to land, and to take back loaded shells.

Mr. President, I do not approve of such means of transportation for such materials.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Does not the series of facts which the Senator gives us indicate that the Appropriations Committees themselves ought to be more careful and exacting in acting upon appropriation bills rather than merely accepting the recommendations which are made to them?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, my answer is, "Yes; a thousand times, yes!"

When I became the chairman—not at my solicitation—of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations dealing with War Department items, what did I do? At the first opportunity I gave 2 months of my time and hundreds of dollars to visiting as many Army posts as I could visit in 2-months' time. I traveled over 20,000 miles, and, with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], and a number of Members of the House, inspected 150 military establishments in continental United States, in Panama, and in Puerto Rico. I cannot give all my time to this one activity, but I am going to bring to the attention of the Senate my information upon this particular point.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has certain military activities in his own State. If we are going to save money, Mr. President, we can save multiplied millions by stopping the military activities in Colorado, which is a thousand miles from possible warfare from either coast, east or west, from Canada or from Mexico. I am not advocating that course; but if the only purpose of the committee is to recommend blindly lopping off a few hundred thousand dollars here and appropriating a few billion dollars there, then I do not go along with the committee.

I am not a member of the deficiency subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, and, unfortunately, I could not be present the other morning when, after very brief hearings, the full committee met and reported this bill. Had I been there at that time, much of what I am now saying would have been said before the committee.

Mr. President, awhile ago I asked the question, Do we need an army? No one is prepared to say "No," so I must conclude that we do need an army. Now, the question is, What kind of an army do we need, and where shall that army be located in peacetime? That is the only question before the Senate.

I am not in favor of building up the largest army in the world. If I had my way about it, I would have a relatively small army. I think the present personnel is ample—227,000 in our Regular Establishment—but, Mr. President, I would not retain and maintain that small army of 227,000 in their present state of inefficiency, unpreparedness, unhoused, unclothed, and without the necessary guns and ordnance.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am interested in what the Senator is saying about the inefficiency and lack of preparation of the Army. I desire to ask someone who knows, and has responsibility for the Army Establishment, why that is true.

Our Army costs us, for each man, about three times as much as any other army in the world costs; yet I saw in the newspapers only a few days ago—probably a month ago—a statement from the Chief of Staff, for whom theretofore I had entertained a rather high opinion, in which he said that the Army of the United States was only 25 percent prepared or efficient.

If that be true, why is it true? We give them the money they ask for. They are supposed to be experts. We have an able general staff. As one who always votes for generous appropriations for the Military Establishment, if those are facts I should like to know where the responsibility lies. Our Army is costing us more money than any other army of the same size costs—three times as much, as I understand, though I may be inaccurate about that—but some member of the Appropriations Committee told me that some time ago, and I know it costs three times as much for each man in the United States Army as the cost in any other army in the world. We have a great Secretary of War and an excellent General Staff. If the Army is not efficient, if it is not properly cared for and not properly fed and not properly equipped, I should like to know what in the name of Tom Hill they are doing with the money.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, as to what the Senator from Texas says, I do not at this time desire to join issue. I will say, however, that we have in the United States slightly higher standards than those found in some other countries.

For illustration, on our tour we landed in 1 of the neighbor nations. We found that that neighbor nation boasts of an army of almost 500 men. I was interested to know what the men received for their services. In that particular country 1 American dollar is worth 5 of their units. That means that 1 unit of currency in that particular country is worth 20 cents.

The laboring people in that country and the soldiers in that country receive from 15 to 40 percent of 20 cents a day. Senators may make the calculation for themselves. If our information is correct, the laboring people of that neighbor country and the soldiers of that neighbor country receive from 3 to 12 cents a day, or approximately that. The standard in America is somewhat higher than that.

Let me offer one other answer to the question of the distinguished junior Senator from Texas. After the World War was concluded, the people of the United States—or, I will say, many of us—had hopes that we would settle and solve our future international problems by diplomacy around a conference table, rather than by war. In 1920 I supported the proposal to establish a world-wide tribunal for the adjustment and settlement of just such problems as I am now referring to; but the country did not approve of that proposal, so the first effort on behalf of this country to find some method of solving our international problems by means other than war failed. I refer to the League of Nations. But the people were against war then; they have been against war every day from that day until this; and they are against war today.

Under President Harding and the then Secretary of State, now Chief Justice Hughes, the so-called Disarmament Conference was suggested. It was held in the city of Washington. It was the second step in the movement for the solution of international controversies by peaceful means, by conferences and diplomacy rather than by war. We led in the first step. We led in the second step. The treaty resulting from the Disarmament Conference was lived up to by the United States. We scrapped certain of our ships. We cut down our Military Establishment, and we hoped in the future to solve all of our international problems by diplomacy rather than by war.

The next administration came on; and under Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Kellogg a third step was taken, with the approval of the people of the United States. The third step was known as the Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact, in which the nations of the world were invited to renounce war as an instrument of national policy, and practically every nation in the world signed that treaty. Thus, the third step was taken under the leadership of the United States. The League of Nations was step No. 1. The Disarmament Conference was step No. 2. The Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact was step No. 3.

All the time the Congress led the people to believe that they did not need to build up a great, strong military establishment. We proposed in the future to lead the world in meeting around the conference table and there to discuss and solve our problems. Only 2 years ago, 20 years after the war had closed, we learned that some of the nations that had joined in some of these movements, instead of living up to those agreements and trying to carry out peace policies by conference rather than by war, had been using the intervening time to build up great military establishments. That was true of Germany; it was true of Italy; it was true of Russia; it was true of Japan. While they were building up their military establishments in secret, the United States was trying to lead its people and the world to the solution of international problems by peaceful means.

When the fact dawned upon this country and upon Congress that certain other nations had been building up their military establishments in secret, Congress began a feverish movement to build up our military establishments. They had been allowed to run down for 20 years. We had spent little money upon our forts. We had spent little money for re-roofing or re-flooring the buildings at our military posts. The roads had deteriorated. We now have ammunition made over 20 years ago. That ammunition is dead, so to speak. It must be reconditioned. We now have the same Army rifles that we had 20 years ago. We now have the same cannon that we had 20 years ago. We now have the same machine guns that we had 20 years ago. Yet in 4 years' time we have tried to supplant our supply of old rifles with modern ones. Four years ago, in 1936, we adopted the modern rifle, the Garand rifle, a semiautomatic weapon which shoots 8 times with one loading, and shoots 30 times a minute.

The old Springfield rifle would shoot but one load at one time. It was necessary to pull back a block, put in a shell, shoot, pull back the block, pull out the first shell, stick in another shell, and shoot again. The Springfield rifle is the only one we now have in any quantity. Four years ago we adopted a modern rifle; and after 4 years' time, to this good hour, but 22,000 of those guns have been manufactured. A Senator suggests that the number is 25,000. I have stated my recollection. The variation is not material. These rifles are being made at the rate of 100 a day, 5 days a week, 500 a week, 2,000 a month, 24,000 a year. How long would it take at that rate, with only 24,000 rifles being made in a year, to arm an army of 1,000,000 men? It would take 4 years to make 100,000 rifles. It would take 40 years to equip an army of 1,000,000 men with these modern rifles. The infantry and the cavalry and the marines must have the best gun in the world, because they will have to meet the best guns in the world.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Will the Senator permit me to make an inquiry? If the condition of our arms is so bad and we have all this dead ammunition, these old guns, and all that sort of thing, then what became of the hundreds of millions of dollars and billions of dollars that we have been appropriating? Our military appropriations over a period of years exceed those of any other nation. What has become of all this money? The American people may be interested in that, and I know the able Senator has the information at his command.

I submit here tables giving the country information as to our military expenditures during the last 50 years.

(Thomas R. Baldwin, Nov. 21, 1939.)

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I shall not divert my remarks at this time to an explanation of what became of all this money, for the one very good reason that I do not know. The Senator from Minnesota has as many facilities for investigating as I have. I think he is on the Military Affairs Committee, though I may be in error. I am not on that committee. I am on the Appropriations Committee. My committee cannot recommend the appropriation of money unless the Senator's committee recommends an authorization. The first step in making an appropriation is an authorization bill, which must come from a legislative committee of the House or the Senate. My committee does not pass on whether or not we need something; that is passed upon by the policy-making committee—that is, in the case now before us, the Committee on Military Affairs. My committee considers a request as it may be authorized by the policy-making body, the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives or the same committee in the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to confirm what I stated awhile ago about the cost of the Army. The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has shown me the kindness of giving me the figures as to what the Military Establishment of the United States costs per man. It cost the United States $3,400 per annum for every soldier in the Army, based on an Army of 220,000, which is considerably larger than the Army we have in peacetimes. I want those figures in the Record to confirm what I said awhile ago.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I to understand from the statement made by the Senator from Texas that our Government spends on each soldier $3,400?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Oh, no.

Mr. CONNALLY. That covers all the military appropriations. It does not spend that much on each man, but counting all the appropriations for military purposes, and then figuring the number of men in the Army, it costs $3,400 a man per annum.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The total number divided by the total personnel gives that quotient. It means that the cost of all equipment, clothing, land, housing, repairs, the cost of ammunition, of cannons, guns, and everything of the kind, goes to make up the total, and dividing the total expense for all kinds of military purposes by the number of personnel in the Army we get the quotient stated by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BYRNES. Does the Senator from Oklahoma know whether in reaching that conclusion the figure used relates to the number of enlisted men in the Regular Army, and has no reference to the National Guard?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I prefer that the Senator from South Carolina direct the inquiry to the Senator from Colorado, who gave the figures. The question is, Does the quotient refer to the Regular Army; or to the Army and the Navy; or the Army, Navy, and the Air Corps; or the Army, Navy, and Marines; or does it include the National Guard of all the States?

Mr. ADAMS. As the Senator has stated, it is the mathematical result of dividing the total of the military appropriations by the number of soldiers in the Army. Of course, it does not mean that that amount is spent on or for each individual soldier. It is merely an effort to give some figure for comparison between the cost of our Army and the cost of other armies. It does not include the National Guard. The figure is merely a pencil notation of the cost of our Military Establishment per individual soldier, not the amount expended upon the individual soldier.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In a moment. We have now about 227,000 men in the Regular Army, if the quota is full; it is not full yet but it is being filled as rapidly as possible. We have almost 250,000 in the Marine Corps and in the Navy. Then taking in the Reserve Corps, the remnant of the officers of the World War, we have something like 135,000. We have a very large number of boys who have completed courses in the C. M. T. C., the R. O. T. C., and other similar organizations, who are entitled to be enrolled in the Military Establishment. They have placed themselves in position to be called if war should come. We have almost a million men who might be classified as being more or less in our Military Establishment. But I am talking only about the Regular Army Military Establishment of 227,000 men.

I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was going to make the same explanation the Senator has made. We have about 227,000 now in the National Guard who are being trained every year.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; I omitted those. They should be added to the number I mentioned.

Mr. McKELLAR. They number about 227,000 and they are very excellent soldiers, I have no doubt. They are being trained under the same appropriation. So that if we consider all the groups who fall in the Army as just enumerated by the Senator from Oklahoma, together with the National Guard, it would reduce the cost of the Army very greatly per unit, so that it would be shown that the cost would not exceed $1,200 a man.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The total sum appropriated for our Military Establishment embraces all branches of the Army, so while I have not seen the concrete figures, it is my judgment that the Senator from Colorado used the total amount of the appropriation and divided that, not by the total personnel of these complements but probably by just the number in the Regular Army, or 227,000. If so, the figures given are not exactly accurate.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him again, but I think it is hardly fair to say that the inclusion of the members of the National Guard, prorated, greatly reduces the figure, for the simple reason that the National Guard draws pay for only a fractional part of the time. The guardsmen camp only 2 or 3 weeks a year, and while their little monthly bills are paid, the amount is infinitesimal compared with what we spend on the Regular Army. It is true that the costs, as I understood the Senator from Colorado, do include the appropriations for the National Guard, but the expenditure for the National Guard is only a fraction of what it would be if the same soldiers were in the Regular Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is, indeed, true, and the expense of the private soldier in the Regular Army accounts for only a fraction of the entire appropriation. But I wish to say that we have found by actual experience that the National Guard, though they do not get the training of the Regular Army, when it comes to fighting, are very excellent soldiers, some of the very best.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to observe that, insofar as the National Guard is concerned, much money is appropriated and spent for the Regular Army equipment which could be used by the National Guard in emergency just as the Regular soldiers could use it in case of emergency. While there is only a small amount appropriated for the actual pay of the guardsman, because he serves for only 2 weeks, at the same time the trucks, and the machine guns, and the ammunition, and all such things, are as necessary for the National Guard army of some 300,000 as they are for the peace-time Regular Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Awhile ago the Senator spoke of the lack of rifles in the Army, among other things. It was testified before our committee that we now have in the neighborhood of 2,500,000 Springfield and Enfield rifles, which served a good purpose, and were considered among the best rifles, and have always been so considered. It is true that a new rifle has been perfected which is considered better, and that the Government is now manufacturing those rifles in one arsenal for its Army, and the number is about the number the Senator mentioned a few minutes ago. On the other hand, in the present war private companies have started the manufacture of these excellent rifles. So I do not think there will be any dearth of rifles in the next war.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me keep the record straight, however; that statement is only partially true. We have let one contract to one of the big rifle companies, the Winchester Arms Co., if I remember correctly, to make 65,000 rifles.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is the only extent to which we have gone out of our own regular arsenal at Springfield, in Massachusetts, to provide the new rifles.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely true; but at the same time there are private companies now making rifles for foreign nations, and those private companies could be utilized in the event of any trouble. I merely wanted to show that we are not without preparation when it comes to rifles.

Another matter is that of ammunition. It is true that a great deal of ammunition becomes old and has to be reconditioned. The Army is looking after that matter, and the officials testified in the hearings that they have a sufficient quantity of ammunition to go along with the rifles.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, we want to keep the record straight as we go along. We are now making in our own arsenal at Springfield, Mass., approximately 100 rifles a day, that is, the Garand rifle, a new, modern rifle, adopted as the standard rifle in 1936. Aside from those rifles, we have let but one contract, and that contract is to the Winchester Arms Co. The contract covers 65,000 rifles, at an expense of about $120 a rifle.

To enable this company to make these rifles it must do what is called "tooling up"; that is, it must procure the machinery with which to make the rifles. Such machinery is very valuable. It takes a year or 14 months for a manufacturing concern to obtain the machinery with which to make the rifles. So, while we let this contract months and months ago, the Winchester Co. has made no rifles. The company has not yet procured any machinery. It will not have machinery for some months. And after it gets the machinery, say in a year or 14 months, it will then begin to make a certain number of rifles, to wit, 65,000. Then, unless this concern gets a new contract, it will have machinery on hand which will be practically worthless. That is the reason why the rifles to be made by the Winchester Co. cost about $120 each, whereas we can make them in our own arsenal, and are making them, for about $80 or $90 a rifle; and as we speed up production and the men become more familiar with the machinery, that expense will be cut down.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. It would seem to me that we should give a continuing contract running over a period of years to this company, or any other company doing this work. Let there be some planning in the matter. That will cut down expenses and save our taxpayers some real money.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will state to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota that it will be my purpose to make a request of the War Department officials that they speed up the production of the improved rifles. We have 225,000 Regular soldiers, the National Guard, and the marines and the men of the Navy, who must use rifles. If they must use rifles, they are entitled to the best rifle the mind of man can invent or perfect or produce.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator in that connection that many Americans will vigorously oppose selling these valuable modern rifles to some foreign government at a dollar apiece. I am sure the Senator will agree with me on that. We invent these weapons of defense for America; let us keep them for our own country.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to ask the Senator if he can tell us whether or not the tools to which he makes reference will become the property of the United States Government?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. DANAHER. The reason for my inquiry, I may add, is that report has it that the very company to which the Senator from Oklahoma has made reference sold all of its previously owned machinery to Russia. I wonder if the Senator knows whether that is so.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am not advised.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. I believe I have a little information concerning the Garand rifle, and that information is to the effect that our Government arsenal is now making Garand rifles at the rate of 200 a day. Our contract with the Winchester Co. is for 65,000 rifles, and the Winchester Co. will complete that contract in approximately 15 months. At the end of the 15 months' period the stocks and dies and necessary machinery will remain the property of the Government for a number of years. During that time the Winchester Co. will have to keep its plant in shape to make more rifles for our Government if the Government so desires.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, still desiring to keep the record straight, let me say that when we inspected the Springfield Arsenal we were shown the plant by the man in charge, Colonel Stewart, and, naturally, our committee members plied the colonel with many questions. I was with the colonel most of the time we were there. I was advised that he was making at that time approximately 100 rifles a day. Upon my return to Washington I dispatched a letter to the colonel asking him to advise me definitely how many rifles he was making a day, and how many he could make a day with his present equipment, and what it would cost to speed up production so as to make 200 a day, or 400 or 500 rifles a day. His reply was that they were not making 200 rifles a day. The number is approximately 100. But Colonel Stewart said that with increased facilities and increased equipment, and the better training of his men—because they are all new in this business—he hopes to speed up production, and he may make as many as 200 a day in the very near future.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me give an item of information that came before the Senate committee. We find that a little conflict exists. On page 60 of the committee hearings General Gasser, who is the Deputy Chief of Staff, said with respect to these rifles:

We are getting them at the rate of 4,000 a month, and we have on hand now about 24,000 or 25,000. * * * By June 1942 we expect to complete those that are now on order, namely, 149,628.

There seems to be some confusion, because Colonel Kutz said:

* * * In the Springfield Armory the production is 200 per day.

In other words, General Gasser said they were receiving 4,000 a month and Colonel Kutz said the production is 200 a day.

The Winchester contract provides that 65,000 shall be completed by June 30, 1942.

I think one other bit of information should go into the Record; that is, with reference to the ordinary rifle. The witnesses before the committee said that the Army possesses 850,000 Springfield and 1,850,000 Enfield rifles. They said that the British Army today is largely using Enfield rifles. In other words, so far as shoulder rifles are concerned, the ordinary kind, there are on hand nearly 2,000,000 rifles.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, it is obvious to anyone that there are no more rifles in the country than have been manufactured. It is obvious that no military establishment has received more rifles than have been manufactured, and when we were at the Springfield Arsenal shortly before the holidays we had the word of Colonel Stewart, who is the commandant, that he had turned out and delivered approximately 22,000 of the new rifles.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think there is any conflict between that statement and the testimony given last week by General Gasser.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There could not be.

Mr. BYRNES. As I understand, the production is 200 in the Springfield Arsenal, and he said, roughly, there were 20,000 on hand as of the 1st of the month, as I recall. The figure as of next month will be 25,000. There is no conflict in the testimony given before the committee.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There is no controversy. The moment these rifles are made they are shipped. There is such a demand for the rifles that they are hardly completed at the plant before they are on their way to their destination. Our committee traveled 10,000 miles looking for these rifles before we found one of them. We covered the southern part of the United States. We went to Panama. We came back to Texas, went to San Diego, went up through California to Oregon, back to Ogden, Utah, back to Salt Lake City, over to Cheyenne, Wyo., and we found at Cheyenne that the rifles had been there, but there were none there then because the officer who had received the rifles had been sent to Camp Jackson, in South Carolina, and the guns were all gone. We went to Denver. We found none of the new rifles there. We went to Fort Riley, Kans., and there we had our first sight of one of these new rifles. At the city of San Francisco is a very beautiful fort, one of the finest in the world. There we asked about these rifles. The commandant said they had seen one of them, which had been sent there and had been on exhibition a couple of days and was then sent on to be placed on exhibition at some other point. So at Fort Riley, Kans., we finally ran down the first one of these new rifles.

Mr. President, further answering the question asked by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, I wish to call his attention to one thing which I found, of which I am sure he will not approve. He mentioned the reconditioning of ammunition. It is true we have millions and millions of rounds of ammunition. We have millions of rounds of shells of the 3-inch variety, the French 75, so-called. We have many millions of rounds of rifle ammunition. It fits into the rifle used in the Spanish-American War—the Krag-Jorgensen. It fits also into the new Springfield rifle, and it fits the more modern Garand rifle. We have millions of rounds of that ammunition. But the 3-inch shells to which I have referred were fabricated for use in the World War. That was more than 20 years ago. Some of these shells are not in very good condition, and since they are not in good condition, because of age, it has been decided to recondition them. They are now located in Hawaii; they are located in Panama; they are located in Puerto Rico. The Senator's committee, of which I am a humble member, makes recommendations each year for the appropriation of millions of dollars for the War Department. Of that money hundreds of thousands of dollars are used for paying freight and expense of transportation.

At this moment we are bringing back the old shells from Hawaii, from Puerto Rico, and from Panama to the United States to be reconditioned. I will not say they were made exactly 20 years ago, but they are old shells and later on were sent to Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and other places. When these shells are reconditioned, the first thing to do is to take off the nose or cap. Then the TNT is taken out. Then the shell is refilled with new TNT and a new nose put on, and the shell is repainted, relabeled, and sent out again.

Those shells must be shipped back from Hawaii, first to San Francisco, and then by freight from San Francisco to Ogden, Utah. The man in charge of the Ogden arsenal told our committee that just before we came there he had paid a freight bill of over $200,000 on one shipment of old shells from Hawaii. Over $200,000 was paid in one item of freight for shipping shells from San Francisco to Ogden, Utah. When the shells got back to Ogden it was a simple process to recondition them.

Mr. President, for the sake of the Record—and that is the only way we can get this matter before the Senate—let me say that in a dictatorship or monarchy the man at the top would run the Army, the Navy, the Air Corps, and everything else, and the public would not know anything about it. Here in the United States, however, we boast of having a democracy. Having a democracy, the people should know and they would like to know the details of all these matters. The reconditioning of shells is a simple process. I am coming to the point I wish to make.

A plant for reconditioning shells can be constructed for as little as $10,000. The plant requires no house. The only thing required is a concrete block which looks like a wedge. On the front side of the concrete block is usually a mountain or a hill, so that if a shell should explode between the concrete block and the mountain no one would be injured.

There are many places in the United States where we can find a mountain or a hill and a place 100 yards from it to build a big concrete block, 10 feet thick at the base, and tapering to a thickness of only a foot at the top.

On the front of the concrete block is a vise. An old shell is put into the vise to hold it steady. Then a wrench is put on the nose of the shell. There is a shaft which runs back through the concrete block, and a man stands behind the concrete block, perfectly safe, because if in turning the shaft to remove the nose of the shell the nose should explode, it would explode against the mountain or hill, and no one would be there to be injured. To date there has been no explosion. The expense of building such a concrete block is very small. The machinery for taking off the nose of the shell is inexpensive.

After the shell has been relieved of its nose, the shell, with no nose on it, is put on an inexpensive rack—a little streetcar track, so to speak—and placed over a small pool of boiling water. The steam coming up from the little pool of boiling water softens the TNT, which, becoming wet with steam and hot water, falls out, leaving the shell empty. It is then ready for reloading.

A plant for the reconditioning of shells can be built anywhere in the world for from $10,000 to $50,000, which is the maximum cost. No house is required. There is no house at Ogden, Utah, or Charleston, S. C., where the same operation is being performed. I believe someone is overlooking a point. At Charleston, S. C.—that fine city in the State of the distinguished junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]—there is a plant of this kind. From San Francisco one shipment of shells was sent to Ogden, at a cost of $200,000.

In South Carolina, a few days before we were at Charleston, on one little shipment of shells from the dock at Charleston across a long toll bridge, through Sullivans Island to Fort Moultrie, more than $8,000 freight was paid. When the work is done and the shells have been refilled and reconditioned, they must be sent back to the dock at Charleston, which involves another $8,000 of freight. Then they must be transported to Puerto Rico, Panama, Hawaii, or some other place where they are to be used.

Mr. President, of course the War Department is like the Congress in that no one man controls the War Department. No one man knows all about the War Department. Each man has his little niche, his little work to perform. Apparently, no one man knew all these things that were being done in the reconditioning of shells. If he had, I cannot conceive of any official of the War Department consenting for a single day to shipping shells from far-away points back to America to be reconditioned and then sending them back again, when a reconditioning plant could be built in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or the Panama Canal Zone at a cost not exceeding $50,000, which would save transportation to the United States and from the United States back to the point where they are to be used.

I commend that suggestion to the distinguished ranking member of the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very much interested in what the Senator has said about saving money. I am not familiar with the details of reconditioning shells. However, I have before me the statement of Colonel Kutz, which states exactly what is being done. It seems to me that reconditioning shells is a sensible thing. Whether or not it could be done more cheaply I do not know. I take it the Senator has examined that question. Perhaps it could be done more cheaply. However, this is what Colonel Kutz said about it:

Colonel Kutz. We maintain continuous surveillance of all lots of ammunition, both in storage and in the hands of troops. There is continuous surveillance of the smokeless-powder propellant and also of the shell filler itself, in order to detect any deterioration so that when a particular lot of powder approaches what is regarded as the end of its normal life, say approximately 20 years, and our surveillance tests indicate advanced deterioration, all lots of ammunition which are loaded with those propellant powders are immediately withdrawn from service, and then they are broken down, and the serviceable components are salvaged and reused in loading new ammunition.

We have renovating plants at four or five of our field service establishments where we currently renovate ammunition. That is now going on. For instance, take our 75-mm. shells. Complete rounds are broken down, and the smokeless powder which has deteriorated to a dangerous degree is taken out, and new rounds are assembled, using new powder.

Senator BYRNES. Let me ask you again about this. The gentlemen who have been investigating these matters are alarmed and some people have taken the position that 20 years being the normal life of powder, and we had a lot of powder on hand at the conclusion of the war, a lot of ordnance supplies, and 20 years now having elapsed, they think that we are continuing to rely upon munitions that are no longer of any value. You make this survey continually, do you not?

Colonel Kutz. Continually; yes, sir.

Senator BYRNES. Then in your training of men in the Coast Artillery work, do you use some of that ammunition at that time?

Colonel Kutz. Yes; and we have naturally adopted the best business practice. We turn over the older stocks first. The funds which you give us for training ammunition each year are put into new stocks. The ammunition which is used, naturally, is drawn from that that has been longest in storage—the oldest ammunition which is available.

Senator BYRNES. When you use that ammunition you then ought to be able to get a pretty good idea as to the condition of your supplies?

Colonel Kutz. Yes, sir.

Senator BYRNES. When you take some of those shells and use them in the artillery and when you try them out in the course of artillery training, you ought to get a pretty good idea as to the condition of the other shells you have not used, but which are of the same age.

Colonel Kutz. Yes, Senator; in addition to the regular current surveillance of all powder lots, we annually fire test lots at the proving ground in some cases we have the troops fire test lots of ammunition which are approaching the end of their service life to determine their actual serviceability for accuracy firing.

Colonel Kutz went on to testify that the appropriations for the renovation of ammunition had recently been increased. The Department has the necessary money to renovate ammunition. So our ammunition is in good condition. Whether or not the reconditioning could be done more cheaply, I do not know. The Senator's plan may be very much better than the one which is being used, but certainly, if Colonel Kutz's statement is correct, we have proper ammunition for our guns. I hope he will consider the Senator's plan, and I hope the reconditioning can be done more cheaply than it is now accomplished.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I did not intend to imply that our ammunition is of a defective character. I am sure it is not. For training purposes it does not make much difference. If a shell will not shoot, it simply will not shoot, and that is all. As hunters, I am sure many Members of the Senate have had the experience of shells failing to fire. It may be that some of our shells will not fire.

Mr. ADAMS. And we have obtained the same results as though they had fired. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The distinguished Senator from Colorado suggests that if the shells had fired, the result would have been the same. That observation may apply to the game sought by hunters; but it certainly should not apply if we had more important game at which to shoot.

Getting down to the particular point, if we are to have an army, its personnel should be placed where it is most needed. Some will contend that the soldiers should be trained in the interior, at small posts scattered throughout the United States. If war should come, the soldiers would be drawn from the small posts and placed in great cantonments for training purposes, so that the Infantry could be trained with the Artillery, and those two branches could be trained with the Air Corps, and all of them could be trained with the Engineering and Chemical Warfare Divisions, and so forth.

I am of the opinion that we should treat our Army today as though we might be called upon to use it tonight or tomorrow. Nations no longer declare war. So far as I know, Italy never declared war on Ethiopia. So far as I know, Japan has not declared war on China. So far as I know, Russia has not declared war on Finland, although I noticed in the public press a statement to the effect that unless the Finns "stop stealing Russian arms," Russia will declare war on Finland. So far as I know, Germany has not declared war against Great Britain and France. I think perhaps Great Britain and France have declared war against Germany, though I am not sure about that.

However, Mr. President, the point is that an army, to be effective, must be ready for instant use. We cannot depend upon a period of time between the outbreak of war and the time when actual hostilities begin. We cannot depend upon 6 months, or 9 months, or a year. In my opinion we must have an army ready to fight tonight if the occasion exists for a fight tonight or tomorrow. If my position be correct, that nations no longer declare war, but are constantly ready for war, the Army ought to be assembled, ready for fighting. Japan is ready for war. Germany is ready for war. Russia is ready for war. Great Britain and France are ready for war. Other great nations are ready for war. We must be ready for war if we have to meet those nations. I hope that time will never come; but if it shall come we will not have 6 months or 9 months or a year to get boys out of the small camps into large cantonments and then build rifles and cannon, recondition ammunition, and train the boys for service. The Army must be ready at once.

So, Mr. President, I want an army so small that we can afford to train the personnel of the Army to the "nth" degree. I want an army so small that we can give it proper clothing and housing, proper rifles, proper cannon, proper planes, and proper ammunition; and, with it all, properly trained, one unit with another. That makes it necessary to have our Army scattered at pivotal points; and, from my point of view, the Panama Canal is the one pivotal point that ranks "ace high" in our national-defense establishment. So long as the Panama Canal is open, the Navy can be transported from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and vice versa; so long as the Panama Canal is open we can get men and supplies from the eastern seaboard to the western seaboard. If the Panama Canal should be closed, then, of course, all that would be stopped. So, from my viewpoint, the Panama Canal deserves first consideration in our national-defense program.

The Panama Canal, from that standpoint, is not being overlooked, though, Mr. President. We have in the Panama Canal Zone now about 17,000 men. We are spending in the Canal Zone, in improving our defense there and our equipment, many million dollars. We have authorized the appropriation of $247,000,000, as I recall the amount, to build a new set of locks in the Panama Canal. We are, on the Atlantic side, expanding the air field, what is known as France Field, at an expense of many million dollars. We are expanding the Allbrook Field on the west side at heavy expense. We are building a new air port away from these fields at terrific expense. We are tearing down hills in Panama and filling valleys to make land sufficiently level on which to build houses to shelter the larger complement that has to be housed there. There is practically no level land in the Panama Canal Zone. There are many swamps, and the swamps, if they are to be used, must be filled in. The land must be obtained either from the ocean or the bay or from the hills to make the land. They are tearing hills down, leveling off the hills, to make level areas on which to build houses with which to shelter the soldiers. At Fort Davis they are now leveling off land so that there may be built houses to accommodate approximately 10,000 additional soldiers, so that, when we get through there, we will have, with the additional complement, soldiers of all kinds of approximately 25,000.

If that is a mistake, we had better find it out now, because the program has not as yet been completed. If it was a mistake to expand France Field, let us decide it is a mistake, and not make the appropriation. If it is a mistake to build the new air field close to Allbrook Field in the interior, let us find it out now, and not spend that money. If it is a mistake to tear down the hills and level the valleys, so as to be able to build houses for the soldiers there, let us find that out now and not send the soldiers there. We cannot send them there unless there are housing facilities for them. In order to have the housing facilities, we must have the land; we must ship the materials with which to build the houses. If that is a mistake, let us decide it to be so now and save that money. If, however, we have to carry out the program of fortifying the Panama Canal Zone, keeping that zone free and open, protected and safe for American ships to go back and forth, then we must maintain soldiers there.

On the west side we have Hawaii, highly developed, highly fortified, as a protection to the west entrance of the Panama Canal Zone. We have in Hawaii our largest fort. We are spending more money in Hawaii for the defense of the west Pacific coast and the defense of the west entrance of the Panama Canal than on other fortifications. If it is important to defend the western side of the Canal, it is important to defend the eastern side of the Panama Canal which faces the Caribbean Sea. If we defend the eastern entrance to the Panama Canal, we must do it on some territory which we own.

What territory do we own on the eastern side away from the entrance from the Panama Canal? Puerto Rico is about the nearest, unless, perchance, it may be the Virgin Islands, but they, I think, are farther away than Puerto Rico. As stated earlier today, the Spaniards 400 years ago decided San Juan was the farthest point from America in Puerto Rico. There is a beautiful bay at San Juan; a superb harbor; a fine climate. There is practically no level land there; the terrain is mountainous; the only level land is in the valleys; and such land is used for sugar cultivation. There is not much of valley land and it is very expensive. However, we must depend upon some of our possessions on which to build our fortifications to protect the eastern side of the Panama Canal Zone. We have decided to do that at San Juan in Puerto Rico. At a point in the northern part of Puerto Rico they are building now an airfield. If it is a mistake to fortify San Juan, let us decide it to be a mistake now; bring out of San Juan the Navy complement. There are dozens of ships in the bay there at this moment. The Navy is dredging the bay and throwing the silt out of the bay into a swamp, thus building up the swamp and making for the Navy their own base and airfield at San Juan. We can save multiplied millions of dollars by stopping the dredging of that bay and throwing that dirt and silt over into the swamp. The water runs off and leaves the silt and after a while they have a field there, an airfield, exactly like we are building in the Potomac River on the outskirts of Washington. They are building at San Juan for the Navy a vast and expensive airfield and it is being built by dredging the lowlands, swamps, and bays.

If that is a mistake, if we are going to get out of San Juan, let us save our money; let us save millions of dollars in the naval appropriation bill by withdrawing the Navy from San Juan. But, Mr. President, if we are going to use San Juan as a base for the Navy, it is a rule in our military defense establishment that where the Navy goes the Army must follow to protect the Navy; otherwise, the Navy ships would have to stay there to protect themselves. So the rule in the Army is that where we have a Navy base, under an unwritten or a written law—I do not know which—the Army is under obligations to protect the Navy base with Army fortifications and Army men. So if we have the Navy at San Juan we must follow with the Army. If we are to have an Army in San Juan we must have some place in which the Army may live. What kind of a place have we there now?

Mr. President, I vouchsafe the statement that, with the exception of two of its members, no Senators have seen the proposed military fortifications of San Juan; and the hearings on this particular item in the Senate committee were practically nil. The House took some testimony on this item, but when the bill came to the Senate, no member of the committee who knew anything about it being present, there was no evidence given. So they saw a place in Puerto Rico where they could save two or three hundred thousand dollars by refusing to appropriate money for the purchase of some land to be added to the Fort Buchanan Reservation on which we must build a place to house soldiers necessary to protect the Navy at that point.

We have at San Juan, Fort Buchanan. That fort is on a tract of land, purchased by the Government, consisting of less than 300 acres. The land is rough. I repeat that there is very little level land in Puerto Rico. Even Fort Buchanan is rough. It is made up of hills, small mountains, and valleys, but most of it is serviceable for Army purposes, because they can use each particular part of the land for some particular purpose. Our committee saw on the 300 acres that we now own there stores, military equipment, and men living in tents. I am not complaining about men living in tents; we saw them at many places where they should not be living in tents; but in Puerto Rico we saw a great number of tents. They were screened; they had wooden floors, and they were all right for that southern climate; but the men are living in tents in Camp Buchanan today. Furthermore, the storehouses there have no shelter. We saw in a valley—and we have photographs to prove what I am going to relate—a row of what are called sound detectors, which are expensive machines with rubber tires, equipped with gigantic horns that can be pointed upward. The detectors have mechanisms something like those on loudspeakers, so that when the horn is pointed upward and is moved around, if an airplane is flying in the vicinity, the horn will gather the sound and bring it down, and the machinery under the horn transmits that sound to the ear of the listener, so that the presence of an airplane miles and miles away can be detected. Yet we saw those machines, costing thousands upon thousands of dollars apiece, standing out in the open.

There was no house there to shelter them; not even a tarpaulin or a tent was over them, and they are left in that condition there today. We saw millions of dollars' worth of supplies necessary to take care of the few thousand soldiers there now, but there was no house for those supplies. They were under tents, under tarpaulins. We saw stack after stack of ammunition being used now for training purposes, but which might be used tomorrow for some purpose other than training, out on the hillsides. It is true there was a wire fence around them but the stacks of ammunition had nothing above them except oiled cloth or cotton cloth called tarpaulin. There is no land at this particular point at which to house a vast establishment.

In the State of Colorado we are building just east of Denver a gigantic airfield and air base. We have taken our men out there and our money, and we have virtually taken down the hills and moved them away. We are building there the finest air field in the world, costing millions upon millions of dollars. We have taken over there an old health resort, and are now using it as a base for the Military Establishment so far as officers are concerned. Then we are building there a gigantic camp. There is one hangar on this field that is large enough to hold both Democratic and Republican conventions at one time, and one convention would hardly know of the presence of the other. We found in the West one hangar that is so large that the mist gathers inside the hangar, and it rains inside the hangar when it is clear and the sun is shining on the outside. That is not a fabrication. We were told that that is the truth. I did not see it. That was not in Colorado, because not much rain falls in Colorado.

Mr. President, if we want to save money we can stop the activities at Denver and save multiplied millions. We were advised at Denver that after this great airport is built they will have a great complement of bombing airplanes; and in order that bombing airplanes may be efficient they must have some place to practice dropping their bombs. They cannot drop bombs in a civilized community where people live, because a bomb might unfortunately fall on some man's house, or on his farm, or on a city, and the damage would be severe. In order that bombing planes may train they must have a large tract of ground where nobody lives, so that they may fly out over the ground, put a target out there, and then from various distances—a mile, 2 miles, perhaps 4 miles, 5 miles, 6 miles, or 10 miles—they may drop their bombs. It takes a long time for a bomb to reach the ground after it is dropped. If a man could see it coming he could run out of the way, but one cannot see them coming. He can hear them, but he cannot see them. In order that the institution at Denver may be efficient, after we have spent millions upon millions upon it, we must buy in Colorado or in Utah or in some other place a great tract of ground to which the planes kept on the field at Denver may fly and drop their bombs and thus train. I am for that. If we are not going to do that, then I want to close the establishment located at Denver.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to say to the Senator that the fields in Denver were not bought by the Government but were bought by the city of Denver and its constituents, and donated to the Federal Government.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I do not question that statement; but I challenge the inference that the city of Denver, or the county in which Denver is located, or the State of Colorado, has contributed a single penny to the work which is now going on at that point, giving employment to thousands of men, and which in the end will cost multiplied millions of dollars.

Mr. President, if we are going to have a naval establishment in San Juan to protect the Panama Canal, the Army must protect the naval establishment. If we are going to have part of the Army down there, we must have some quarters in which the Army may live. San Juan is on a little, narrow island, and the people on that island are so numerous that it is difficult to get through the narrow streets. There is hardly any place on the island for even the officers to live. General Daley, in command at San Juan, has to live in a house that was built in the year 1500. Columbus only discovered this country in 1492. Puerto Rico was discovered shortly afterward. The Spaniards had charge of Puerto Rico, and the Spaniards saw the military importance of Puerto Rico, and began to fortify San Juan.

In addition to building a very fine fort for that day, which is still preserved, they erected a building for, I presume, the high official, Ponce de Leon. I think he was there at that time, and I think he had charge of building the castle, called Casa Blanca. So, General Daley is now living in an old castle on the main island of San Juan called Casa Blanca, built in 1500. It cannot be said that that was an expense to the United States. Close to Casa Blanca castle he has converted some old, vacant buildings, as I understand, into a headquarters. He has planned now to spend, or will try during this Congress to obtain, sufficient money to buy a little land in the slums of San Juan proper on which to extend his military establishment, because if we are to fortify San Juan we must have some place in which the officers may live.

So, if we are to have part of the Navy there, I say again, we must have part of the Army there, because it is a rule that the Army must defend and protect naval bases. If we are to have part of the Army in San Juan we must have some place for the Army to be housed. We already have Fort Buchanan; and this little item has for its purpose the appropriation of about half the required amount of money to start buying land adjacent to Fort Buchanan on which may be built a magazine to store ammunition and a depot or warehouse in which to store the supplies which are now there out in the open. In addition to that, of course, the Army must have a place to build permanent houses for the permanent establishment, which means barracks and things of that character.

Mr. President, we are going to buy this land. We may not do it in this bill; we may not do it during the life of this Congress; but, as surely as the Congress exists, money will be made available with which to buy this land or some similar land in San Juan, Puerto Rico. I regard San Juan as being as important to the defense of the Panama Canal as are the Hawaiian Islands. If it is important to fortify the Hawaiian Islands with the most expensive military establishment in the world—and the largest camp in the world is now located in the Hawaiian Islands for the purpose of protecting the Pacific seaboard and the western entrance of the Panama Canal—then, in my opinion, we must provide similar establishments on the eastern side to protect the eastern entrance of the Panama Canal.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. If Puerto Rico is—and it is—such a strategic point for the protection of the Panama Canal, it is more important as a naval base than as an Army base; is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I agree with the Senator; but under the rule—

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask that question because we might have all the Army we wanted to have in Puerto Rico, but if any nation were going to attack the Panama Canal it would merely route its ships around Puerto Rico and go down and hit the Canal. As a naval base, I think it is of the highest importance; and yet I cannot see the necessity of maintaining any very considerable military establishment in Puerto Rico, unless it is for the accommodation of aircraft.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, what would happen to this necessary naval base, then, if trouble should come, and the ships should be drawn out of the harbor, away from the base? What would happen to the base while the ships were gone? The rule is that the Army protects the naval bases while the ships are away. The ships are not supposed to protect the bases from which they come. That is the duty and responsibility of the Army. So, if that is true, we must have at San Juan land on which to house these soldiers. The Army does not now have it.

Mr. President, one further word. I have occupied too much time already; but while I am on this point I might just as well cover it a little more fully.

It is my conviction that battleships are not of much benefit in modern warfare. I think they are only targets for the enemy air forces. I read a squib in a newspaper the other day, or heard it stated, that if a few more of Great Britain's capital ships were sunk, in the event the King desired to inspect his fleet he might have to put on a diving suit.

It is proposed to expend multiplied millions in building battleships. I voted for some of those bills. When I cast my vote I was not satisfied that I was casting a sound vote. I am not satisfied now that I cast sound votes in voting multiplied millions of dollars with which to build battleships.

Some one may want to know why I make that statement.

Mr. President, I saw in San Francisco Bay a demonstration which is the basis of my present statement. In San Francisco Bay, close to Fort Hamilton, which is the big air field, I saw a target placed out in the shallow water. The target seemed to be about 50 feet across. It looked like an inverted saucer and as if it might be made of a wooden frame, covered with tin. The tin was about the color of the pink slips that are on our desks. I think it was painted with red lead. From our point of vantage we could see the target in San Francisco Bay. It may have been a mile away; it may have been less, or it may have been farther, but it was approximately a mile away.

We were advised that a squadron of about 10 or 12 planes would climb to an elevation of 20,000 feet, which means almost 4 miles, and would undertake to drop bombs on the target. The target was not nearly so large as a battleship. It was about as wide as a battleship, but only a small percentage of the length of a battleship. It took the planes a few minutes to reach the required elevation. We finally sighted the planes coming back over the target in perfect formation.

We would have seen nothing, would have heard nothing, had our attention not been called to the planes. Had we not been out looking we would not have known any such planes were in existence. If we had had a detector, we might have detected them, but we did not have a detector service. That is another thing about which the Army is deficient, and I shall call attention to that later.

We saw the planes flying over in perfect formation. They were not dropping real bombs; they were dropping dummy bombs. The bombs were filled with a sufficient amount of power to make a smoke and to make a little noise, and were heavy enough to make a big splash.

A little later we heard a swishing sound, like ducks coming in about 4:30 in the morning. I do not presume many Members of the Senate know what that sounds like, but some do. Of course, we were watching the target, and after the swishing noise we heard the shells falling around the target. They all fell at once, practically. For hundreds of feet around this target the bay was literally sprayed with bombs. It was late, and we did not examine the target to see whether or not it had been hit, but I am advised that a bomb falling near a battleship is more destructive than if the bomb hits the battleship. The ships being sunk today are not being sunk by direct hits, as a rule; they are sunk by torpedoes, and there is no torpedo boat that can shoot a torpedo through the water in such a way as to pierce a battleship and sink it. The damage is not done by the piercing quality of the torpedo; it is done by the explosion of the torpedo. At the end of the torpedo there is a fuze, so that when the torpedo hits the battleship it explodes and the concussion, away from the battleship, blows the battleship in two, or blows it in, and destroys it.

The bombing we saw in San Francisco Bay, at Fort Hamilton, would have destroyed any battleship under similar circumstances anywhere in the world, the planes flying 20,000 feet, or practically 4 miles, in the air.

The Navy and the Army have a sight they are putting on the bombing planes, which is a secret. They did not show us the sight, but we did not have to see it, as we saw its effect, and we were told by those who know that they can drop a bomb upon a target from an elevation of a mile as accurately as the most accurate cannon capable of shooting a mile can send a shell. We have cannon which can hit a small target a mile away, and if an airplane can drop a bomb as accurately as our cannon can shoot, they can hit a ship a mile away, 2 miles, 5 miles, 10 miles, 20 miles away, if they can go that high; and these planes were 4 miles high.

Shortly after the first planes went over, a second squadron of about five or six planes came by, and they did exactly what the first had done. No battleship made could have withstood the fire of those bombs had they been 600-pound or 1,100-pound or 2,200-pound bombs.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator's statement recalls the books written some years ago by that great and brilliant general of the air, William Mitchell. General Mitchell predicted all this mighty air development. He did so when many of our military and naval authorities were asleep. I am glad to know that the able Senator appreciates our air services. I am glad to hear their importance emphasized.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am exceedingly regretful that I have not had the opportunity of hearing the entire address of the able Senator from Oklahoma. I particularly was anxious to hear what he had to say, because I know that but recently he has made quite a tour by airplane to many parts of the United States, as well as to Panama and to portions of the West Indies, at least those portions in which we are interested, the Virgin Islands, and San Juan, the capital of Puerto Rico.

I assume, from what I have heard the Senator stating, that he is highly in favor of the expenditure of the necessary amounts of money for the development of our air force, and is opposed to what I term reckless expenditures of money for the construction of naval armaments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will make two statements before answering the question.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I merely ask the question because I should like to have the benefit of the Senator's ideas about the matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am in favor of developing and building up the most efficient and the best army in the world, and that does not necessarily mean the largest army in the world. I only want to have the Government build up an army to protect the United States, our people, and our property. As to the size, I cannot say. That is a matter for the mature judgment of the people as expressed through their representatives in the Congress.

As to the relative merits of battleships and the air force, and artillery and infantry, that is another matter about which I am not prepared to give any expert advice. I have my convictions. I do not think battleships are worth very much in present warfare. I am advised unofficially that the greatest English battleship is hid; it cannot be found. If it is hid, of what use is it? It is the greatest ship in the world. If it is hid, it is serving no useful purpose. If that be true, it is my opinion that if we should build up a great navy in the United States and war should come, and some naval power should attack the United States, the safest place in the world would be on one of our battleships. The chances are that the battleships, unless we had a preponderance of power, would be somewhere away up the Mississippi River where they would be perfectly safe. They would have to be in some such place, because if the air forces could find the battleships, they would not last any time. If what our committee saw in San Francisco Bay can be done anywhere in America, a battleship would have no chance whatever.

The battleship today has no chance against the modern bombers with their bombs. The only chance of security is for the same nation that has the battleships to have more bombing planes and more pursuit planes and more of other kinds of planes than the enemy has, so that if a plane attempts to attack our battleships, we can send our planes to meet the enemy plane, and if an enemy squadron makes an attack, we can send a squadron to meet the enemy squadron, and fight it out in the air.

Consider the case of the Panama Canal. We have there vast coast defenses established. I think they are almost wholly worthless. We have guns at Panama, guns at San Diego, and guns at San Francisco, which do not shoot very far. The officers are not sure they can shoot at all, because they have not been shot for years.

At Charleston, S. C., we found military defenses at Fort Moultrie, just opposite Fort Sumter, on Sullivan's Island. We have guns there, but they have not been shot for 20 years, and if they should be fired, they would not shoot more than 5 or 6, or perhaps 10 miles. A modern battleship could stand out in the ocean, immune from the danger of shells from the guns at Fort Moultrie, and could shell and destroy that fort and destroy Charleston.

There is another reason why the guns at Fort Moultrie have not been shot. The fort was built many years ago, and the guns have been there a long time. The little settlement on Sullivan's Island is a separate municipality, only a few people living on the island. The mayor of the community lives on the island, between the emplaced guns and the sea, and he objects to the Army shooting these guns from Fort Moultrie because it disturbs his peace and quietude; and for that reason the guns have not been shot for years and it is not known whether or not they would shoot. If a ship should come, some of the bombing planes would spot it and fly out and destroy it.

We are going to keep the base at San Juan. We must defend it with the Army, and we must house the Army, and the land in question is needed for the purpose. If a hostile ship comes into that area we will have bombers there. On the north point of the island, 90 miles away, we are building a gigantic air field.

We will have a complete system of communications. If an enemy plane or ship should come anywhere in that area, our pursuit planes and our bombing planes would destroy it before it could come near.

We must have land at San Juan to carry on this activity. We have already bought the land for the bombing ship base on the northern point of Puerto Rico. We have only 286 acres on the south point.

In South Carolina, at Camp Jackson, the land owned is almost equal to an average county. At Fort Benning, Ga., land equal to an average county has been bought and paid for, and is being used for training purposes. At Fort Bliss there is a large reservation now, and authority will be asked to acquire 2,000 acres more. We will also have a reservation in New Mexico.

Mr. President, this is a good time for the acquisition of land. If we are to buy land, now is the time to do it, because land is cheaper today than it will ever be in our lifetime, in my judgment; and I think I know.

Land will increase in value. People cannot live with commodities at present prices, which means that prices must go up. Sugar is going up in price, which means that land in Puerto Rico will go up in price. Corn is going up in price, which means that corn land in Iowa will go up in price. The price of wheat will rise, and the price of wheat land in the Northwest will rise. The volume of land cannot be increased; there is only so much of it. So as prices of commodities rise, the price of land will rise, and, in my opinion, we will never in our lifetime see land so cheap as it is today. Therefore, if we are to buy this land in Puerto Rico, the sooner it is bought the better. The same thing is true of the other reservations where we are asked to buy land to add to our existing air fields, and to add to our existing military reservations, for training purposes. If I am correct in stating that from this time on we will keep our soldiers in great numbers on great reservations rather than scattered around in small posts here and there, then the land-acquisition program should be carried through now.

It is my conviction that we should have our Army in the South in wintertime for training purposes, and when it gets hot in the South, as it does, we should send the Army back to the North, to be trained in the summertime in the North, where it is cool. Someone may say that it will cost a great deal of money to send the soldiers south in the winter and send them north in the summer. But transportation is one of the most important items in wartime. It is not possible for us to choose the place where we will fight, if war comes. We must run down the other fellow, and in order to be safe, sometimes we must run away from the other fellow, and that all involves transportation. So the Army must be trained in transporting itself from place to place. Therefore, in bringing the Army to the South in wintertime, as we are doing now, to Fort Benning, to Camp Jackson, and to San Antonio, and Fort Bliss, and southern California, we are doing a fine thing. When the summertime comes, we send the soldiers back to the North to train with the National Guard of the Northern States, where it is cool. Transportation will not be expensive, but it is just as important a part of the training of the Army as the teaching of the boys to shoot guns, or to fly airplanes, or to fire cannon, or what not. So, as I see the picture, every reason exists for buying the particular piece of land in question, and buying it now. There is no other land in the vicinity available.

There are mosquito-infested swamps in that area. We must get the soldiers away from those swamps. The land in question is a little above the city, 7 miles away. Our material is all on the ground. If a man were to build an establishment, and he had only a small tract of land, he would move his lumber and his sand and gravel and machinery and what not and be ready to start his development. But we have it there. We have a start made. We have the soldiers there. The supplies are there. The ammunition is there. Everything; equipment of all kinds and character is there, but there is no place in which to house it. There are only 286 acres at Camp Buchanan. So this land immediately adjacent to Camp Buchanan, between the camp and San Juan, will be made use of. The high land will be smoothed down, and the area made useable for an airport.

Mr. President, today a military establishment without an airport is wholly worthless. Where there are soldiers there must be an airfield. Travel by train is too slow. Ships are too slow. Other nations do not depend on ships or on trains. Even Russia sends some of its soldiers across to Finland in airplanes, and the soldiers are dropped from the airplanes in parachutes. That shows the kind of transportation now being used by other nations. I am not recommending such means of transportation, because in the particular instance when the soldiers were transported in this manner the Finns anticipated where the soldiers would be dropped, and they waited for them, and when they came dropping down they shot at them like boys shooting at ducks. The soldiers dropping from their planes made the finest kind of targets and as a result became dead Russians.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Are we going to utilize land planes or hydroplanes at San Juan? I think that would affect the purchase of the land.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will say to the Senator that we will use both. The Navy is now developing a gigantic landing basin for hydroplanes. That basin is over in the swamp. They are dredging the swampland now, and there is no objection, so far as I know, to completing the basin. The naval air basin at Point Borinquen is to be used in connection with Camp Buchanan.

Mr. REYNOLDS. A Senator advised me a moment ago that the price to be paid for some of the land is $400 an acre. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In answer to that question I desire to read a portion of a telegram from the best authority I know of.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Before answering the Senator from North Carolina I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator has given us the results of much research and material gathered by him, and I am sure all of us are very much impressed with it. There can be no sound objection on the part of anyone to purchasing this land. So far as I am concerned I am in favor of the development of aviation to the limit. We must build Army and Navy bases wherever necessary. I voted for the largest number of planes at all times and I intend to continue to do so.

I believe this request for a proposed air field will be granted, and that many other fields will be built.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the field under consideration is not an aviation field.

Mr. LUNDEEN. It is an Army field and aviation field combined.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I wish to keep the record straight, Mr. President. A part of this land is to be used for a depot; that means a warehouse to store supplies. A part of it is to be used for building of igloos or housing facilities for bombs and ammunition. Part of it is to be used for building barracks to house the soldiers. A part is to be used to build an airport of sufficiently large size to serve a military force of the kind involved.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will say to the Senator we understand that this will be an Army base with airport facilities. I could not quite hear, but I think the Senator made a statement about great ships in hiding. Who made that statement?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I made the statement that I believe the British Navy is in hiding. The German Navy cannot find it at least.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I do not want to intrude any opinion of mine in this discussion, but I wish to recall the statement of the great admiral in command of the American Fleet in the late war, Admiral William S. Sims, who said that the safest place for dreadnoughts in the next war would be just as far up the Mississippi River as we could get them.

Mr. President, I appreciate the valuable statement made by the Senator from Oklahoma here today. It is about time that we give some real thought to the new methods of warfare that are coming upon this earth. War is being fought in a different manner, and it is very evident that the able Senator is wide awake on the subject, and giving us valuable information.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I thank the Senator from Minnesota. Answering now the question submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] as to the reasonable value of the land in question, of course I am not familiar with land values in Puerto Rico. I flew over the land. Not much of the land has great value. It is mountainous. No one lives on it. Relatively speaking only a little of the land is valuable, and that is the land which produces sugar. As a rule, however, the land which produces sugar must be irrigated, so even Puerto Rican land that is not irrigated is not valuable for the production of sugar.

When this issue arose the War Department telegraphed to General Daley, in command of the Army forces in Puerto Rico, asking, first, for information relative to the necessity for this land, and, second, as to its reasonable cost. I desire to read just a few sentences from the telegram sent by General Daley, and I will then ask permission to place the entire message in the RECORD. I quote from the message:

Painstaking reconnaissance has resulted in the selection of area recommended as best both tactically and economically. No percentage of land is waste land. There is practically no waste land on northern coastal plain except scattered swamps. Forty-nine percent of tract is pasture land. Thirty-seven percent is in cultivation for sugar. Fourteen percent is sugar land not now in cultivation. Prevailing valuation per acre of pasture land in vicinity is $350. Pasture valuation appears high but if not used as dairy pasture would be suitable for sugar cultivation. Prevailing valuation per acre of sugar land is from $300 to $500.

Annual production of sugarcane per acre in Puerto Rico varies from $150 to $500. Estimated annual production of sugarcane per acre in tract to be acquired is $250. Sugarcane on this tract is now ripening and will probably be cut in January and February. Estimated average price per acre of $400 was arrived at after thorough search of assessor's records, investigation of like purchases, and contact with officials and civilians with real-estate experience.

Mr. President, I ask that the telegram be printed in full in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAN JUAN, P. R., December 5, 1939.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

Re U rad December fourth land suitable for general depot cannot be secured at a lesser cost because there is no cheaper accessible land. Sites nearer to San Juan and in urban area would be much more costly. Suitable sites further away from San Juan would not be cheaper because of intensive sugar cultivation and furthermore would not be suitable for general depot. Painstaking reconnaissance has resulted in the selection of area recommended as best both tactically and economically. No percentage of land is waste land. There is practically no waste land on northern coastal plain except scattered swamps. Forty-nine percent of tract is pasture land. Thirty-seven percent is in cultivation for sugar. Fourteen percent is sugar land not now in cultivation. Prevailing valuation per acre of pasture land in vicinity is $350. Pasture valuation appears high, but if not used as dairy pasture would be suitable for sugar cultivation. Prevailing valuation per acre of sugar land is from $300 to $500. Annual production of sugarcane per acre in Puerto Rico varies from $150 to $500. Estimate annual production of sugarcane per acre in tract to be acquired is $250. Sugarcane on this tract is now ripening and will probably be cut in January and February. Estimated average price per acre of $400 was arrived at after thorough search of assessor's records, investigation of like purchases, and contact with officials and civilians with real-estate experience. It will be of great advantage to acquire this land within next 2 months because immediately after sugarcane is cut only small adjustment is necessary for value of seed cane left in ground. As crop grows value increases rapidly. The installation of ammunition storage and general depot is vital. In my best judgment the acquisition of this tract of land at a price not to exceed $320,000 is sound and will result in both immediate and long-term economy to the Government.

DALEY.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, interpreting this message, the land wanted is next to an existing military reservation. In no other direction can they buy land of any value because it is hilly or mountainous, and would not be valuable. So this is the only land adjacent to Camp Buchanan which may be used for aviation purposes. From the information given in General Daley's telegram the 800 acres is largely sugar land, and the average price of sugar land is around $400 an acre. That is based on the assessor's records and the records of those competent to give testimony.

I will say that this message was not before the House committee. The House committee reduced the appropriation from what was requested, because they did not have the information now available. When the item came to the Senate committee, the Senate committee still further reduced it, still without information, apparently.

Mr. President, I do not know who owns this land. That makes no difference to me. No other land except the land in question can be procured for the purposes needed unless we abandon Camp Buchanan and go somewhere else and build a new military establishment. The experts in San Juan say this is the land they want. They so decided in this instance, otherwise they would not have established Camp Buchanan. Now, because of the added importance of the San Juan military and naval base, it should have a larger establishment, and more land is needed. They want to have a naval base there of a size large enough to maintain a force sufficient to protect the island.

So I submit that the committee amendment striking out $200,000 in this particular instance should not be agreed to. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 7, beginning in line 21. (Putting the question) The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, can we not have a vote on this question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All those in favor of the amendment will stand.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that suggestion?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not wish at this time to argue the question. The hour is late, and in view of that fact, I was about to suggest that the Senate adjourn for the day.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not care to hold the Senate in session late, and that might be the result if there should be a call for a quorum. Obviously we cannot finish consideration of the bill today. I will defer to the Senator from Colorado. Does he think best to recess at this point?

Mr. ADAMS. I suggest we suspend until tomorrow.

ORDER FOR RECESS TO THURSDAY

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Let me suggest to the able majority leader that he obtain unanimous consent for a recess until Thursday.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today it take a recess until Thursday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 2953. An act authorizing States owning lands or interests therein acquired from the United States to include the same in certain agreements for the conservation of oil and gas resources;

H. R. 3931. An act for the relief of Charles H. LeGay;

H. R. 7171. An act to amend section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act; and

H. R. 7293. An act to amend section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to make permissive the acquisition of legislative jurisdiction over land or interests in land acquired by the United States.

EFFECT OF WAR ON COMMODITY PRICES

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, a moment ago I heard my able and distinguished colleague make the very interesting prediction that it would not be long before there would be a rise in the prices of sugar, corn, and wheat. I should like to inquire of him whether or not he can tell me when there will be a rise in the price of tobacco, which is grown in North Carolina, Tennessee, and Oklahoma.

Mr. BARKLEY. And Kentucky.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And Kentucky.

Mr. McKELLAR. Also, in the price of cotton.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should also like to have him tell me when there will be a rise in the price of cotton, which is grown in North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Oklahoma.

I make that inquiry for the reason that before the arms embargo was lifted—and, incidentally, I voted against lifting the arms embargo—persons in North Carolina and in other States led our farmers to believe that if the arms embargo were lifted the boys "over there" would buy all our tobacco and all our cotton; that the price of tobacco would rise from 17 cents to 50 cents, and that the price of cotton would rise from 10 cents to 20 cents.

In passing, I notice that the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is listening with interest. In his State a great amount of tobacco is raised. I see the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] listening with interest. In his State a great amount of cotton is raised.

I read in the newspapers that the British have placed an embargo upon our tobacco, and as a result of that embargo the producers of tobacco in North Carolina, Virginia, South Carolina, and our sister State of Georgia—

Mr. McKELLAR. And Tennessee.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And Tennessee—the producers of tobacco in those States will not be able to experience a rise in the price of tobacco; but further, the Agricultural Department of our Government has suggested that perhaps in the face of these embarrassing circumstances we shall of necessity be forced next year to limit our acreage of tobacco even more than we now do.

In reference to cotton, I noticed in some newspaper the other day that our friends across the sea are not now in a position to go through with their barter plan, whereby it is my recollection that we were to let Great Britain have 500,000 bales of our cotton in exchange for rubber and tin from the Malay States, out of the seaport of Singapore. We probably shall not be able to begin that exchange until April, and then perhaps the British will be so thoroughly involved in the war, which now looks as though it really will be a great World War, that they will need all the tin and rubber they can obtain, not only from the Malay States but also from the Dutch East Indies, to assist their friends in the present world condition of chaos. That being the case, a rather embarrassing situation is presented.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Am I to understand the able Senator to say that our British friends think more of the Turks than they do of the United States? I wonder just what our friends in the able Senator's State of North Carolina think about the British embargo on tobacco—our friends in Kentucky and Virginia seem much interested in all this. I thank the distinguished Senator for bringing this friendly British embargo to our attention. Perhaps after a while we can get someone in our State Department to read up on Andrew Jackson and his conduct of foreign affairs.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Somebody said that they said they could not accommodate the people in North Carolina, South Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Oklahoma, and other States because they had to favor their allies, the Turks. So, it is evident that they think more of the boys around Constantinople than they do of the boys in Columbia, S. C., Richmond, Va., or the capitals of the other States engaged in growing tobacco.

Finally, in connection with the very able address delivered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], I wish to say that from the portion of it which I heard, I am of the opinion that we should consider the whole national-defense program from the standpoint of national defense, with emphasis upon the word "defense."

Otherwise, we shall become involved to the extent of making expenditures of more billions of dollars than we should, bearing in mind the fact all the time that we are not building or developing our Army for the purpose of attacking any other nation in the world, but in our national-defense construction program we are building only for the purpose of protecting the United States of America against invasion from any other nation or nations in the world. Therefore, I am happy to be able to assume from the address of the well-informed Senator from Oklahoma that he is in accord with me, or that I am in accord with him, to the effect that we should put more money into the development of airplanes and less into a big Navy, because, as he has very forcefully explained, ships can be destroyed without much difficulty by the larger planes which we have been constructing and which we are constructing at the present time.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTER—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Jessie B. Searle to be postmaster at Bedrock, Okla., which had previously been passed over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], I ask that that nomination again go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be passed over.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the remaining nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters, with the exception of the one passed over, are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate, in accordance with the order previously entered, take a recess until Thursday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, the recess being, under the order previously entered, until Thursday, January 25, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 23, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everliving God, unto us as children of Thy jealous care, Thy benedictions are like streams of water in a dry and thirsty land: Thus to Thee we offer our hearts of praise and gratitude. We pray that the memory of our sins and failures may be grievous unto us. By every temptation overcome may we be made wiser and stronger. O kindle in our hearts those visions which never fade and open for our waiting feet the ways of purity, peace, and power, and may we never falter. Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BOULDER DAM

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs on House Resolution 356.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 356

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is directed to answer to the House the following inquiries:

1. When and in what foreign capital was the conspiracy entered into to destroy, by the use of explosives, the power and reclamation projects of the United States at Boulder Dam?
2. When did the State Department first learn of this conspiracy?
3. What had been done by the conspirators and the details of their scheme up to the time the State Department first obtained information of the plot?
4. What are the names of the conspirators?
5. What were their political and national affiliations during the existence of the conspiracy?
6. Have any of them been questioned by officials or agents of the State Department or any other department of the United States?
7. Have any of the conspirators or other persons been arrested or held as a result of said plot?
8. Are any of the conspirators Communists or did any of them act in furtherance of the designs of any communistic group?
9. What other information is in the possession of the State Department concerning said plot?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a letter written to the Federation of Women's Clubs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on tomorrow for 20 minutes after disposition of the matters on the Speaker's table and the legislative program of the day.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if we know now what the program is going to be tomorrow. If we are going to have general debate following any Calendar Wednesday business, I wonder if the request would be necessary.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, the resolution coming up today will probably take 2 or 3 hours, and in all probability it will be 3 or 3:30 o'clock before we get to a vote. It was our thought that the Treasury and Post Office bill might go over until tomorrow, but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] has his statement on the bill ready and would like to get it in the RECORD tonight. So after the so-called extension of the Dies committee resolution is disposed of, it is the purpose of the gentleman from Indiana to move that the House go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and, at least, to make his statement today. Tomorrow is Calendar Wednesday, and the call rests with the Committee on Naval Affairs. I do not believe that committee wants to use the day because it is not ready to proceed, but I think we should begin calling the calendar on Wednesday for at least one committee. After the call of the committee, it is the intention to go on with general debate on the Post Office and Treasury Departments bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The purpose, then, is to call one committee on tomorrow, which will be the Committee on Naval Affairs, and then continue with general debate on the appropriation bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The only thought I had in mind was that the gentleman from New York could probably get time under general debate instead of a special order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EMBARGO ON AMERICAN TOBACCO

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Speaker, the agricultural sections of this country, particularly those producing tobacco, were shocked when they learned that the British Government had placed an embargo on the importation of American tobacco to the United Kingdom. It is reported that the Empire expects to purchase from Turkey the tobacco heretofore bought in America. I suppose that the purpose is to incur favor with Turkey in connection with the Dardanelles. Favor may be incurred with Turkey by this action, but the embargo on American tobacco strikes a stinging blow at vast agricultural sections of this country and incurs disfavor and resentment.

As the reduction in our foreign markets will further depress a price level—upon which the farmers are hardly existing now—it is vital for us from the States or sections depending upon tobacco production to cooperate to the fullest degree to effect a removal of this embargo. I note with pleasure that my colleagues, the gentlemen from North Carolina, Representative COOLEY and Representative WARREN, have protested to the Agriculture Department on behalf of their constituents.

This embargo on an agricultural product is so far-reaching in policy and effect, I arise to suggest that all of us from tobacco sections cooperate immediately and pool our energies in exerting every honorable influence for the removal of this restriction. The British Government may feel justified in using this means to strengthen its economic and political policies with Turkey. They must, however, realize that the matter is sufficiently vital in its effect on the economic life of the agricultural sections of America affected by the restrictions to fully justify us as a last resort to advocate trade reprisals within our influences for the removal of this embargo. [Applause.]

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 8067, Rept. No. 1525) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. TABER reserved all points of order on the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein the address delivered by the President of the United States on last Friday in connection with a White House conference on children in a democracy.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TENEROWICZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the subject of the 1940 labor scene; also, to extend my own remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the subject of a radio program and to include two letters which I have received in this connection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, Mr. PATRICK, Mr. VOORHIS of California, Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts, and Mr. GIBBS were granted permission to revise and extend their own remarks.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a radio speech that I gave last night over the Mutual Broadcasting System.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday of this week, after the business of the day has been disposed of, that I may speak for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

THE CHRISTIAN FRONT

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to note that Attorney General Jackson has ordered a complete "front" inquiry into the charges against 17 Christian Front members of sedition and plotting the Government's overthrow.

I applaud that order.

Let the chips fly where they may.

Especially let the investigation include those who (1) directed, (2) abetted, (3) financed, and (4) incited—particularly incited—these fifteen-or-so foolish youths who allowed themselves to be hoodwinked by their leaders, Cassidy and the Nazi with the long criminal record—his name escapes me at the moment. Their scheme was fantastic, yet it betokens serious warnings and tendencies.

Fourteen Members of Congress were to be assassinated. I was No. 2 on the list. Our colleagues from our metropolitan area who voted to lift the embargo were also slated to go. Such a scheme is fantastic, yet it is also tragic.

Let the inquiry reach out into Detroit. Let Father Coughlin explain his avowed contacts with, encouragement, and praise of, the Christian Front, and particularly its leader, Cassidy, and his comradeship with him.

This man Cassidy created much mischief in Brooklyn with his rowdy cohorts. For many months he and his band abetted by editorials in Social Justice, edited by Father Coughlin, intimidated peaceful citizens in Brooklyn because of their religion, outraged the feelings of the decent people of our borough, and made of themselves nuisances bordering on criminality. Now, thank goodness, the law has caught up with them. They must answer to the charge of sedition.

Father Coughlin has hailed these same ruffians and brigands. I quote from an article in the New York Times:

As for the apparent acceptance by Social Justice of Cassidy as a member of the Christian Front in good standing, the files of the magazine show the following:

On July 31, 1939, the large cover-page headline on Social Justice read: "Christian Front Carries Fight Into More States." There was a reference to page 3, on which was a one-column article, under a New York date line headed: "Units of Militant Christian Front are being formed in Middlewest; Hosts Battle Communism in New York; National Movement Growing From Patriotic Action of 36 Christian Men in Brooklyn."

This article said in part:

"From a modest start of only 36 men banded together in Brooklyn last year, for the purpose of actively combating communism on the streets of New York, the organization has penetrated all boroughs of the metropolis. Under the leadership of Mr. John F. Cassidy of Brooklyn there are now five central units operating in the metropolitan district."

FIVE MILLION MEMBERS PREDICTED

The article spoke of the Christian Front as "the inevitable counteraction to communism," and as "a protector of Christianity and Americanism," and predicted a membership of 5,000,000 by 1940.

On July 24, 1939, Social Justice carried an account of a meeting in Philadelphia that heard Father Coughlin by radio. In the address, the priest, so the article said, "praised the heroism and zeal of the Christian Front in those areas where its work has already borne fruit, and urged Philadelphians to emulate their Christianity and Americanism."

Father Coughlin espoused the cause of the Christian Front, thus:

Ponder upon this fact, that the Christian Front is no longer a dream; it is a reality in America; a reality that grows stronger, more courageous and more determined under the threat of your ideological invasion.

MEETING FORCE WITH FORCE

Nevertheless, the Christian way is the peaceful way until—until—until all argument having failed, all civil authority having failed, there is left no other way but the way of defending ourselves against the invaders of our spiritual and national rights, the Franco way.

The Commonweal, a Catholic magazine of considerable excellence, editorially castigates Father Coughlin and his Social Justice, and blames him, with others, for the plight of these 17 men.

"Fantastic yet tragic and alarming," is the way it describes the criminal conspiracy of plotting destruction of public and private property, culminating in seizure of high offices and officers.

Great credit is due J. Edgar Hoover and his men for their skill and ingenuity and courage in unearthing this dreadful plot.

Hoover has been criticized for wasting time on such misguided youths. Wasting time—hell!

This conspiracy contains all the recognizable elements of antidemocratic and anti-Semitic terror, which were the pre-udes of Nazi and Fascist and Communistic victories. There was a complete terrorist schedule with guns, bombs, and rifles. Only one bomb set off in a crowded building would have killed hundreds.

Suppose they had shot one of our members, what would these critics have then said. Thank goodness their scheme was nipped in the bud.

All hail J. Edgar Hoover for his excellent work. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, we are going to have under discussion today the extension of the powers of the Dies committee, and I want to include in my remarks a letter from the American Legion of Wisconsin, in which 35,000 members, together with 21,000 members of the American Legion Auxiliary, are for the extension of this committee.

I ask unanimous consent to include this letter from the American Legion of Wisconsin, and also a letter from the American Federation of Labor, signed by William Green, president.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matters referred to follow:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
DEPARTMENT OF WISCONSIN,
Milwaukee, January 18, 1940.

HON. JOSHUA L. JOHNS,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: When the House of Representatives originally created the so-called Dies committee, which has been investigating un-American activities in this country, your action had the full support of the American Legion.

The national convention of the American Legion at Chicago in September 1939 voted overwhelmingly for the continuation of this committee, and I can assure you that the American Legion in Wisconsin, 35,000 strong, together with 21,000 members of the American Legion Auxiliary, are heartily in favor of the continuation of this committee.

We sincerely hope that this committee will be continued and that you will use all of your efforts in support of it.

Respectfully yours,

FRANK L. GREENYA,
Department Commander.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1940.

HON. JOSHUA L. JOHNS,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The convention of the American Federation of Labor which was held at Cincinnati, Ohio, recently expressed approval of the work which the Dies congressional committee has performed and of its continuation of the investigation which it is making into the activities of subversive groups within the United States.

In conformity with this action taken by the highest authority within the American Federation of Labor, I am officially requesting that you support such proposal as may be submitted to Congress, providing for the continuation of the Dies committee and of an appropriation sufficient to enable it to carry on its investigations.

I cannot conceive of anyone, other than those who may be exposed through association with Communist organizations and Communist front organizations, objecting to a thorough investigation into the activities of subversive groups by a congressional committee. Those who have no sympathy with these un-American groups, these subversive forces within our social order who are constantly seeking to change our form of government and to promote revolution can with perfect propriety give wholehearted support to the work of the Dies committee and to the investigation it has made and which it can continue to make.

The people of our country are entitled to know the truth. We of the American Federation of Labor want them to know the facts. We want those who are undermining our form of government and those who are engaged in subversive activities to be exposed. Ridicule, denunciation, and sarcasm, all directed toward the Dies committee by those who seek to suppress its activities and prevent it from carrying on its important work, can only be looked upon with suspicion. We cannot permit those who engage in such tactics to prevent a thorough investigation and a public exposure of the actions and of the activities of individuals and groups who are engaged in un-American activities, and who are seeking either directly or indirectly the overthrow of our Government.

The preservation of freedom and democracy is a matter of vital concern to all those who believe in our form of government. We can protect ourselves if we know who and what it is that is undermining and attacking our governmental structure. Those who are with us need not fear; those who are against us ought to be exposed. The Dies committee is rendering a great public service. It should be continued until its investigation is completed.

I urge you to support the Dies committee. I appeal to you to vote for an appropriation which will adequately equip the Dies committee to complete the excellent, splendid work which it has thus far carried on.

Sincerely yours,

WM. GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. LUDLOW, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill, H. R. 8068 (Rept. No. 1526), making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TABER reserved all points of order.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] be allowed to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of a report prepared by Samuel Crowther for the Commission for the Promotion of the Wealth and Income of the People of New Hampshire entitled "What We Earn—What We Owe," and to include therein an editorial from the New York Daily Mirror of December 6, 1939.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a very brief editorial from the New York Sun of January 10 last.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech given by the patriotic and distinguished newspaper publisher, Frank Gannett, in Rochester, N. Y., on January 16 last.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from the president of the New Jersey State Federation of Labor.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE LATE MAJ. GEN. OMAR BUNDY

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to report the death of one of our outstanding military geniuses, Maj. Gen. Omar Bundy.

Major General Bundy was born in Newcastle, Ind., in my congressional district. He departed this life on January 21, 1940, in the city of Washington at the age of 78 years. A graduate of West Point in 1883, he afterward participated in many of the great military expeditions of this country. In his early military life he took part in the engagements with the Sioux Indians. In the World War he commanded the Second Division, and later the Sixth and Seventh Army Corps. His record as a soldier is outstanding.

General Bundy will be best remembered because of his refusal to retreat when ordered to do so. His action in standing fast had a direct influence on the early outcome of the World War. He was a brave and gallant soldier. His inspiration will continue throughout the years. Having filled his mission in life—may he rest in peace.

BOULDER DAM

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I have requested this minute to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs the reason he moved to table the privileged resolution just offered by him, in view of the fact that it is so highly important to the people of southern California that Boulder Dam be protected and that they may know what to do about it? Is the gentleman from New York willing to answer?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Foreign Affairs had this resolution under consideration yesterday and voted unanimously to report it out adversely. The letter received from the Secretary of State regarding this matter is on file with the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and if the gentleman from California will come to the committee rooms and read the letter of the Secretary of State, he will find his question answered fully.

Mr. HINSHAW. I thank the gentleman.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House for this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the character of the Russian attack on Finland and the proposed loan to Finland.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by STYLES BRIDGES at St. Louis, Mo., on January 17 last.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on two subjects:

First, to extend in the RECORD a letter written me by one of my constituents, with an accompanying article by the columnist Ted Lee Berthon, appearing in the Los Angeles Daily News.

Second, to extend in the RECORD a letter addressed to me by Mr. Bruce Hannon, secretary-treasurer of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the South Bend Tribune in reference to the testimonial dinner given to Bishop John F. O'Hara, the newly consecrated auxiliary bishop of the United States Army and Navy diocese.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a bill which I have introduced to extend the time within which applications for payment under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, may be filed, and also to enlarge the class of dependents under such act so as to include the brothers and sisters and estates of deceased veterans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include in those remarks an address by Judge Joseph Hutcheson, of Houston, Tex., on the subject of neutrality and this Nation's relation to other nations, delivered to the Birmingham Bar Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief article from the Washington Post of January 20.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two resolutions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a letter and a certificate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

FOUR HUNDRED THOUSAND PATRIOTIC CITIZENS PETITION FOR CONTINUANCE OF THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the petitions here presented to the House are typical of petitions from 27 States signed by over 400,000 petitioners supporting this resolution:

Resolved, That we petition the Congress of the United States to vote an appropriation necessary to continue the congressional committee for the investigation of un-American activities, Congressman MARTIN DIES, chairman, until 1942.

All of the original petitions are on file in Detroit in the offices of the Committee of 1,000,000. Accompanying these petitions is a letter from the national chairman, Gerald L. K. Smith, and a list of the States in which the petitioners reside and the certification of the headquarters staff of the Committee of 1,000,000, certifying to the facts set forth in the letter of Mr. Smith. These exhibits will be printed following this statement.

My information is to the effect that since these petitions were signed and filed in the office of the committee, additional petitions have been sent in and that the number of petitioners now exceeds 500,000. When 500,000 petitioners will take the trouble to sign petitions asking that money be appropriated to continue a congressional investigation, it is most encouraging proof that all the vilification, the ridicule, and the unfair attacks which have been made upon the individual members of this committee and upon the committee itself have been judged and, by the American people, found without substantial foundation.

Little men, columnists; men who have never held an elective office; men who, if they offered themselves as candidates for Representatives in Congress, might discover that their opinions and views had little or no weight with those charged with selecting Representatives at the polls, have seen fit to belittle the members of this committee; to charge some of them with being interested only in political activities.

The answer to all those who have followed that course, whether they be columnists, or those high in authority in the New Deal councils, or whether they be members of the family in the White House, will be found today in the overwhelming vote of the House for a continuation of this Committee. The answer to all those accusations, the faith of American people in our form of Government, the desire of our people to put down and suppress all those who would overthrow our Government by force, is found in the overwhelming public sentiment throughout the country for the continuation of this committee. [Applause.]

GERALD L. K. SMITH, NATIONAL CHAIRMAN,
COMMITTEE OF 1,000,000,
January 21, 1940.

The Honorable CLARE E. HOFFMAN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HOFFMAN: As per arrangement I am forwarding to you petitions calling for the continuation of the Congressional Committee for the Investigation of Un-American Activities, Congressman MARTIN DIES, chairman.

The Committee of 1,000,000, of which I am the national chairman, is strictly a program of enlistment and education by the use of the printed page and the radio. Our weekly broadcast covers 27 States.

Some few weeks ago we invited our listeners to circulate petitions asking for the continuation of the Dies committee. Since this suggestion was first made over the radio, petitions have been requested in great numbers and are now being filled out at the rate of between four and six thousand names per day. We now have on hand petitions totaling close to one-half million names.

I am forwarding you herewith approximately 100 typical petitions representing 27 States. If the resolution calling for the continuation of the Dies committee comes to debate, or is carried over for further consideration to the point where you would advise that we carry these thousands of petitions to Washington, we shall be pleased so to do.

These petitions, as you will readily see, indicate the wide coverage of our campaign and the great popularity of the Dies committee.

I attach herewith a picture also of the recent midwestern rally, representing 15 States, held under the auspices of our committee, at which time 23,000 delegates attended. On the back of this picture you will see listed the resolutions adopted at this rally, with less than 300 people dissenting and more than 22,000 voting for the resolutions.

You will observe that Resolution No. 8 calls for the continuation of the Dies committee.

An interpretation of my heavy radio mail, which runs into thousands upon thousands of pieces, reveals that the average voter assumes that the main opposition to the Dies committee is coming from the Nazi propagandists and the Communist Party.

I attach herewith signed certification, signed by our office manager and the secretary in charge of the files, confirming the fact that these petitions merely symbolize an enlistment approaching nearly one-half million names.

Although there is other subject matter in the petition, we ask you in this instance to make use of the petition as it relates to the continuation of the Dies committee. Because of our great confidence in you, we ask that you present these petitions, together with the facts set forth in this letter, to the Committee on Resolutions, of which Congressman SABATH is the chairman. I understand that this committee meets Monday, January 22, 1940.

Sincerely yours,

GERALD L. K. SMITH,
National Chairman of the Committee of 1,000,000.

P. S.—The committee of 1,000,000 represents the active cooperation of the leadership of 141 patriotic and civic groups.

MEMO A

JANUARY 21, 1940.

Memo for Congressman CLARE E. HOFFMAN concerning token petitions to be presented to the resolutions committee as samples of nearly one-half million names calling for the continuation of the Dies committee

The attached petitions are from the following States: Michigan, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, New York, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Illinois, Massachusetts, Maine, Connecticut, Maryland, Oklahoma, New Hampshire, Louisiana, Kentucky, Florida, Alabama, North Carolina, Minnesota, South Carolina, and Texas.

MEMO B

JANUARY 21, 1940.

Memo for Congressman CLARE E. HOFFMAN concerning token petitions to be presented to the resolutions committee as samples of nearly one-half million names calling for the continuation of the Dies committee

We, the undersigned, are members of the headquarters staff of the Committee of One Million, having to do with files, petitions, and office management.

We have read the letter addressed to Congressman CLARE E. HOFFMAN by Gerald L. K. Smith, national chairman of the Committee of One Million, setting forth the certain facts having to do with the petitions that have been secured calling for the continuation of the congressional committee for the investigation of un-American activities, Congressman MARTIN DIES, chairman.

We certify by our signatures that the facts set forth by Mr. Smith are substantially correct.

PHYLLIS CHANDLER,
Keeper of Files.
BERNARD DOMAN,
Office manager.
E. M. SMITH.
WALLACE GAMBER.

This, the 21st day of January 1940.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a radio broadcast made Sunday evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER]?

There was no objection.

INVESTIGATION OF UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 321 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 321

Resolved, That the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities is authorized to continue the investigation begun under authority of House Resolution 282 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and continued under House Resolution 26 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as that conferred upon it by said House Resolution 282 of the Seventy-fifth Congress and shall report to the House as soon as practicable, but not later than January 3, 1942, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations for necessary legislation.

With the following committee amendment:

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Illinois if we can reach an agreement about the control of the time?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows the House has granted the committee an additional 1 hour. Under the rules I take it that that should be divided equally between those favoring and opposing the resolution. The gentleman is familiar with the fact that on this side, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], representing the committee, and two other members of that committee, desire and are entitled to time on behalf of the resolution; therefore, I feel that time should be set aside for them out of the extra hour, so there will be no complications or question.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] that certain members of the committee should have time, but I will have to insist that the time be equally divided between the gentleman and myself. Of course, I will be glad to give some time to those gentlemen, if the gentleman from Illinois cannot do it out of his time, but I think it should be well understood at the beginning of this debate that the time shall be divided equally, as is the usual custom, between the gentleman from Illinois and the ranking minority member of the Rules Committee.

Mr. SABATH. I was in hopes the gentleman would agree that I yield the time to the members of the committee who are in favor of the resolution; but if the gentleman objects and insists, believing and trusting that he will divide the time allowed him evenly, I shall agree to his proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois yields 1 hour under the unanimous-consent agreement to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, were it not for the fact that I have been misquoted in my interview of a few days ago, I would not take any time now.

I favored the resolution creating the special investigating committee of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] was chairman. I also favored the resolution which created the special committee of which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] is chairman; also I voted for the $100,000 last session for the expenses of that special committee on the assurance that the investigation would be properly conducted. However, I am obliged at this time to state that, although I am reporting this resolution by direction of the Rules Committee, I am opposed to it because I feel that many righteous and outstanding men and women, as well as various constructive, patriotic, and enlightened organizations, have been unfairly and unwarrantedly assailed and stigmatized by being charged with communism, nazi-ism, and so forth.

I am pleased to inform the House that at the hearing yesterday at least three of the members of the special committee assured the Committee on Rules that nothing like that will be done in the future and that no statements will be given out unless they are actually justified by facts.

Personally, of course, I do not blame the Republicans for taking the position they do. If I were a Republican I, too, would favor the resolution, because, unfortunately, this special committee has aided the Republicans by assailing and attacking our leaders and progressive, patriotic organizations. I regret very much that the special committee has lent itself to assailing and attacking progressive labor organizations throughout the United States.

I know where the petitions to which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], has referred, signed by so many members of the American Legion, emanated. We know that the leaders of the American Legion somehow or other are misled by the Republicans and are being used by them. [Laughter.] That is all right; I will show you later that such is true.

On the other hand, I have received thousands upon thousands of resolutions, petitions, and appeals that the life of this special committee be not continued. I have here [indicating] petitions from the American Federation of Teachers, the Consumers Union, the Committee for Peoples Rights, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Professional League for Civil Rights, the Public Affairs Committee, National Board of the Young Womens Christian Association, the American League for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom, the League of Women Shoppers, and many other organizations, all urging that they be heard against the resolution.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. In just a moment.

Mr. COX. Is the gentleman attempting to catalog all the communistic activities in this country in the reading of that list?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have not yielded to my colleague, and I resent the statement of the gentleman and deny that any of these named organizations are composed of Communists or are communistically inclined. I will say that I am just as much opposed to communistic activities as is the gentleman from Georgia. I am just as much opposed to the activities of the Nazis and all similar un-American organizations as is the gentleman, and, perhaps, even to a greater degree.

Mr. Speaker, not only have I received protests from ex-service men as to the unfair tactics and procedure of the investigating committee, but from practically every type and kind of organization in the United States, totaling at least a million protests. I am not going to encumber the RECORD with insertions of voluminous petitions and lengthy communications, but shall take the liberty of including a few excerpts from some of the petitions and brief telegrams and letters of outstanding organizations. I quote from a report by a special committee of the American Civil Liberties Union as adopted by the board of directors on January 8, 1940:

Congressional investigations properly conducted are one of the admirable attributes of our democracy. This is so, even though, because of the immunity given to congressional inquiries, the press often repeats, without legal liability, what would otherwise be slanderous and libelous statements. The cure is not a suppression of congressional inquiry, but, rather, orderly procedure of the congressional committee and public debate as to the truth or falsity of the material revealed.

Although we would not restrict congressional committees by the ordinary rules of evidence, we believe that such committees should observe at least a minimum standard of fair play, flagrantly ignored by the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities.

The second report of the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities is more calm and temperate in tone. It is more nearly on the proper track of the course an investigation of this kind should take. It is in striking contrast to the alarmist statements of Chairman Dies himself. However, the injury done to organizations and to persons through the publicizing of unfounded charges against them cannot be obliterated or atoned for by the subsequent issuance of a report which does not repeat such charges. Any continuation in any form of this kind of inquiry should, in all equity, give full opportunity to all those so maligned to testify and to offer witnesses in their behalf.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan has referred to the petitions he has received in great numbers. I desire to insert at this point a telegram I received today from the Reverend J. H. Bollens, of Detroit, chairman of the Civil Rights Federation. It says:

DETROIT, MICH., January 22, 1940.

Congressman SABATH,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Civil Rights Federation, composed of over 300 Michigan church, labor, farm, civic, fraternal organizations, representing 500,000 residents, strongly urge Rules Committee postpone action on resolution to continue Dies committee until public hearing is held. Request opportunity to be heard.

Rev. J. H. BOLLENS,

Chairman, Civil Rights Federation.

Among the many telegraphic protests directed to me as chairman of the Committee on Rules is one from Mr. Arthur Kallet, director, Consumers' Union, New York City, reading as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., January 12, 1940.

Representative SABATH,

Chairman, House Rules Committee,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

May we strongly urge that before giving any rule affecting the continuance of the House Committee Investigating Subversive and Un-American Activities you allow us to testify in behalf of our 85,000 members on the unsupported and outrageously unfair attack on ourselves and other consumer organizations by that committee's chairman and research director. We are convinced we have evidence to show that this attack was so motivated as to raise serious questions as to the integrity of the committee and the desirability of continuing it.

CONSUMERS' UNION,

ARTHUR KALLET, Director.

Next, I have the following telegram from the chairman of the Committee for People's Rights:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 21, 1940.

Hon. ADOLPH SABATH,

Washington, D. C.

Resolution adopted at meeting of 500 Philadelphians, auspices Committee for People's Rights:

Whereas the arrest of 17 members of the Christian Front by the Department of Justice is the only case involving conspiracy to overthrow the Government by force and violence which has as yet been brought to light; and

Whereas the Dies committee presumably investigating un-American and subversive activities has not only failed to uncover such plots but has persistently refused in spite of numerous demands to investigate the activities of Father Coughlin and the Christian Front and similar organizations; and

Whereas MARTIN DIES himself has been publicly charged by Congressman Hook, of Michigan, with being connected with the Christian Front; and

"Whereas the Dies committee has contented itself with smearing innocent individuals and organizations and has engaged in numerous other un-American activities, including illegal raids, searches, and seizures without warrant: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, citizens of Philadelphia, hereby petition the Congress of the United States that the Dies committee should not be continued, nor given additional funds, since sufficient laws now exist for the punishment of subversive activities and existing agencies, such as the Department of Justice, are adequately equipped to investigate and apprehend such violators, and further since the Dies committee has proven its inability or unwillingness to investigate organizations actually working to destroy our Government by force and violence."

JOSEPHINE TRUSLOW ADAMS,

Chairman, Committee for People's Rights.

Please listen to a telegram from the chairman of the public affairs committee of the national board of the Y. W. C. A. It says:

NEW YORK, N. Y., January 11, 1940.

Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH,

Chairman, Rules Committee,

House Office Building:

Urge public hearing on question of Dies committee continuation and appropriation. Many people subscribing to purpose Dies committee, gravely concerned over methods and scope of investigation, believing them to be serious threat to civil liberties and violation of rules of congressional investigation.

DR. EMILY HICKMAN,
Chairman, Public Affairs Committee, National Board,
Y. W. C. A.

Again, I want to quote from resolutions adopted by the American Federation of Teachers, December 30, 1939, which resolutions, in my opinion, cite really cogent reasons for a proper procedure for this special committee. This organization says, in part:

The American Federation of Teachers does not take issue with the stated purposes of the congressional (Dies) Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities but believes that such purposes can best be served by existing governmental agencies in the enforcement of Federal and State laws already enacted against sedition, espionage, sabotage, and violent overthrow of Government or incitement to violence.

The Dies committee has itself clearly violated democratic procedures and therefore been truly un-American (1) by calling witnesses without due regard to their credibility; (2) by accepting testimony unsupported by trustworthy evidence; (3) by releasing to the public press testimony which attacks the reputations of these individuals and organizations without affording them the semblance of a fair chance to refute irresponsible charges; (4) by condemning individual people through association; and (5) by summoning witnesses without due notice, thus preventing adequate opportunity to secure data either for complete clarification or defense.

The methods of the Dies committee violate the civil liberties guaranteed in our Constitution by un-American treatment of dissident minority groups.

The action of the Dies committee has brought attacks upon organized labor, threatened its security, and thus endangered the most important movement in advancing and protecting our American democracy.

The Dies committee has failed to define Americanism and thus confuses the entire country, embarrasses all liberals including teachers, students, and others who sincerely believe in democracy, and generally discredits free thought and expression.

The Dies committee has not been impartial and comprehensive in its choice of organizations to be investigated and thereby testifies to its own confusion or prejudices.

The methods of the Dies committee discredit all Government agencies with investigatory powers by reason of its obviously political motives in contradiction to its stated purposes.

The Bill of Rights should remain inviolate especially in view of the present international crisis.

Mr. Speaker, these are the underlying reasons why I cannot support the resolution before us.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SABATH. I did not yield in the first place. I dislike to decline to yield to my genial colleague, a member of the Committee on Rules, but he seems to get the floor whether I yield or not.

I shall not take any more time of the House at this time, and now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the American Legion I am well aware, and I believe everybody else is, that the American Legion is a nonpartisan organization. However, I am very happy to hear from such a high source as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] that the American Legion is in sympathy with the Republican Party on this issue and I hope on all others.

I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] as much time as he may desire.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is whether or not we feel the Dies committee should be continued. Before so determining we must ask ourselves these questions. Has it ably and successfully accomplished the things it set out to do? Has the money we have already appropriated brought results of beneficial nature? Do the great majority of our citizens feel that it should be continued? If it were discontinued, would detrimental interests be benefited?

Every Member of this House knows full well that any committee appointed by this House and directed by this House to do the things that the Dies committee was directed to do would not have unanimous acclaim. It is only natural that exposures made by the Dies committee would bring certain enemies to the front at this time. Their work necessitates stepping on somebody's toes. I would ask you who are the ones unfriendly to the Dies committee? Who wants it discontinued?

Here are a few: Earl Browder, under indictment. We all know about him. The Communist Party. We all know about it. The New Masses; Labor's Nonpartisan League; the American Youth Congress; the American Student Union, which has given its blessing to Russia's attack on little Finland; the American League for Peace and Democracy; the Workers Alliance; Secretary Ickes; and Madam Perkins.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I trust my colleague will not overlook the list given by our colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, all of which organizations are fronts for the Communist Party.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Georgia cannot prove that. It is easy to make that charge, but it has been disproved, and the committee does not state it in its report.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. It is always to be remembered that all of these were behind the bill to pack the Supreme Court; they all applauded the attempt to purge certain United States Senators whose ability, honesty, and integrity were above reproach.

It is my ardent hope that the Dies committee will be continued, and it will be continued by practically a unanimous vote. It is my sincere wish that it will then bring before them the leaders of these subversive organizations and insist that they tell the purposes and objectives of their associations.

The American League for Peace and Democracy is but one of the larger groups opposing the Dies committee. Who are they? The record clearly shows it to be a communistic organization, standing for the things that are opposed by every Member of this body. The origin of the American League for Peace and Democracy dates back to 1933. It was born and cradled in communistic Russia, and why?

Stalin becoming alarmed at the rise of fascism throughout the world called a meeting of the executive committee of the International at Moscow, at which Earl Browder represented the American Communists. They decided, among other things, to set up in America what is known as a popular front organization. I am sure it would interest every Member of Congress to discuss with the members of the Dies committee what they learned about that particular popular front.

A year ago the gentleman from Illinois, Representative MASON, a member of the Dies committee, named six or seven important government officials whose names were enrolled as members of the American League for Peace and Democracy. Other lists have been published showing that there are hundreds of governmental employees belonging to that "communistic organization." They hold office under the Roosevelt administration. Their wages are paid by the loyal citizens of your district and my district, or the money borrowed by the Federal Government, the principal and interest of which must be paid by future generations. I feel certain that after the Dies committee is continued that it will bring in these alleged Communists, give them a hearing, and if their activities are disclosed as subversive, expose them, and use every honest effort to have them forced off of the Federal pay roll. To me it seems repulsive to every sense of honesty and decency to permit these termites to be drawing a salary from the Government while millions of real Americans walk our streets looking for work which they cannot find. It would be of interest to know who are sponsoring these un-Americans boring into the bowels of our Government from within.

I have named certain individuals and organizations who are opposed to the continuation of the Dies committee. Now, what organizations and individuals are hoping and urging its continuation? You all know. There is not a Member of this House that has not received countless letters and telegrams insisting on its continuation, letters from outstanding people of each district, letters from Legion posts and from other patriotic organizations.

I hold in my hand many letters and telegrams from these loyal Americans. Here are several letters asking for its continuation which alone would warrant the support of this resolution by any Member of Congress. They are from the American Legion:

As representative of 85,000 Legionnaires in Illinois, I respectfully request that you do everything possible to insure the continuance of the Dies committee. We sincerely feel that the principles of Americanism are being fostered and encouraged by the exposures being made by this committee.

L. N. BITTINGER,
Department Commander.

Here is another:

The 40,000 Legionnaires and their families in Cook County hope that you will vote favorably on the continuance of the Dies committee.

WILLIAM J. COLLINS,
Commander.

Still another:

The 2,100 Legionnaires from your district urge your support of the continuance of the Dies committee. We are counting on your cooperation.

CHARLES EDSON,
Commander, Thirteenth Illinois District of the American Legion.

Like all of you, I too, have received letters from the Ladies Auxiliary of the American Legion. Like all of you, I have received many letters from the Veterans of Foreign Wars. They all urge its continuation.

The American Federation of Labor has passed resolutions urging its continuation. The National Grange, representing thousands of farmers, passes a resolution favoring the continuation of this special committee.

Of course the Dies committee made mistakes the first year. These minor mistakes have been broadcast by the enemies of its work. I am sure, however, that if it would have received proper cooperation from the Federal Government it would have done much better. With a very limited appropriation the first year, $25,000, with nothing but ridicule for its every effort, and this ridicule originated with those that should have been anxious to give a helping hand, it is only natural there should be some mistakes.

The committee started its second year with an appropriation of a hundred thousand dollars, with a year's experience and with competent counsel and other able help. Results were soon evident. Facts were soon brought out concerning the various subversive groups. Publicity relative to these leaders and their foreign connections, their racketeering in money affairs, and their flagrant violation of laws were clearly proven. Some of the offenders have been placed in jail by the Department of Justice. As a result of the work of the Dies committee the American people have been brought to realize "that it can happen here."

The investigation phase of its work has not been completed. Much remains to be done. It is necessary that the committee continue its work and to make a diagnosis of the causes of subversive activities; and to recommend a constructive program for the cure or prevention of such activities in the future. This I am sure will be done. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER].

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, in the Seventy-fifth Congress I voted for the creation of the committee now known as the Dies committee because, in common with all true Americans, I was in sympathy with its announced purpose, which was to investigate un-American activities in the United States. I am still in sympathy with that purpose, but I believe now, as I believed a year ago when I voted against its continuation, that the committee has failed in its mission and misused its authority.

During the first year of its existence the committee conducted its hearings without regard for the most elemental rules of fair investigation. Reputable American citizens from all walks of life were subjected to false and vicious accusations of un-American conduct by witnesses of doubtful integrity, without being afforded opportunity to confront their accusers or even to make subsequent statements in their own behalf. The witnesses who made these reckless assaults on the reputations of American citizens were permitted to indulge in surmise, hearsay, unsupported opinions, and damaging conclusions, with no attempt to confine their testimony to facts and legal evidence.

In all fairness, it may be said that during the past year those flagrant abuses of the rights and the reputations of American citizens have been to a large extent eliminated. This has been due to changes in the personnel of the committee, and to the determined efforts of certain of its members to compel proper conduct of the committee investigations. Notwithstanding these improvements, however, members of the committee still complain that prejudicial statements have been published as emanating from the committee without their consent or knowledge. Efforts to amend the resolution now under consideration so as to require prior inspection and approval by the committee members of all publicity releases have been rejected on the ground that they would "hamstring the committee."

In its early career the committee used the prestige of the Congress to disseminate over Nation-wide news agencies political propaganda which was employed with damaging partisan effect in State elections. This was done repeatedly and in such obvious manner that its deliberate purpose was unmistakable. In every instance this propaganda was designed to discredit and defeat liberal candidates and supporters of the New Deal by branding them as "reds" and radicals.

With these political abuses of a year and a half ago still fresh in their memories, the liberals of America are today unanimous in their opposition to a further grant of unrestricted authority to this committee to meddle in the coming State elections and attack the reputations of loyal progressive Americans.

Amend this resolution to provide for an orderly investigation of real un-American activities, and the true liberals of this Nation will not oppose it.

Revive and continue the old witch-burning campaign of terrorism against freedom of speech and freedom of political action, and the liberals of America will fight to a finish.

I should like to say to the party leaders on both sides of this aisle that neither of you can win in the coming elections without the liberal vote, and neither of you can be sure that you will get it. The only thing you can be sure of now is that if you give support and aid to those who are trying to terrorize liberals and suppress liberalism in this country you will not get it. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein some excerpts from the report of the committee and some brief quotations from various letters I have here.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, it was my privilege to speak and vote for Resolution 282 in the Seventy-fifth Congress to create the Dies committee to investigate un-American activities. I voted for House Resolution 26 in the Seventy-sixth Congress to continue its activities. I arise now in support of House Resolution 321 authorizing the Dies committee to continue its activities for another year.

The Dies committee, composed of five Democrats and two Republicans, on January 3, 1940, submitted a unanimous report of its work and findings. This report contains much startling information and should be read by every loyal American. I know of no investigating committee since I have been a Member of Congress that has done a more constructive, effective, and helpful job for this country than the Dies committee. I was glad to see that committee bring in a unanimous report. This is very unusual under the circumstances.

Many persons desire to know what is meant by un-American activities. The committee itself lays down what I consider a very clear statement of un-American activities on page 2 of its report:

By un-American activities we mean organizations and groups existing in the United States which are directed, controlled, and subsidized by foreign agencies or governments, and which seek to change the form of government of the United States in accordance with the wishes of such foreign governments.

THREE IMPORTANT UN-AMERICAN GROUPS

The Dies committee finds that these un-American activities flow from three general groups—Communists, Nazis, and Fascists. Each of these groups was born in a foreign land. Each is directed, controlled, and subsidized by foreign governments and agencies. Each of these groups seeks to change our policies and form of government in accordance with the wishes and purposes of foreign governments. The leaders of each of these groups swear allegiance to foreign governments. Their purpose is to overthrow our Government by force and violence, if necessary, and substitute for our policies and form of government the policies and forms of government of foreign nations. These facts have been established by the sworn testimony of the officers and leaders of these groups and by their own records.

It is difficult to estimate how many millions living within our borders have from time to time fallen under the influence of these un-American groups and have become directly attached to these groups or brought into sympathy with their purposes.

The committee adopted a splendid formula on which to conduct these investigations. I do not know how we could find a better one.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have only a limited time, but I yield to my colleague from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman has had long years of experience at the bar, and the very definition that he refers to, the gentleman realizes that the evidence would have to take wide latitude and go into many ramifications.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes; I realize that the committee had a very comprehensive matter to investigate. It involved many organizations and millions of people. The committee proved its case by the officers and members of these organizations and by their records. I do not say this committee made no mistakes in this very wide and extended investigation. I do say, however, that I like the committee for some of the enemies it has made. It put the "reds" on the run. [Laughter and applause.]

COMMUNISM

The Communist group is by far the largest. It has resorted to many devices and tricks to deceive the American people and to cover up its purpose. One of its "front" organizations is the American League for Peace and Democracy. This organization was supposed to have 6,000,000 members. There could not be a more appealing name to the average American. It is a part of the great Communist movement that has been growing in this country for the last 20 years. The primary purpose of communism is to overthrow by force and violence if necessary not only our own Government but every government in the world that refuses to accept communism. There could be no peace or democracy with Communists in control. Communism is headed by that monster of a dictator, Stalin of Russia. Communism is the enemy of religion, the destroyer of the home, the advocate of revolution, murder, and destruction. Communism means neither peace nor democracy.

In order to beguile the workers of this country they styled one Communist "front" organization as the International Workers. In order to capture the young people of the land they named one of their activities "The American Student Union." To make an appeal to the Negroes of the United States the Communists got up the National Negroes Congress, and the Southern Negro Youth Congress. There are many others just as deceptive as those I have mentioned. Last but not least, in order to capture the friends of the immortal Abraham Lincoln and to make the American people believe that communism was the great champion of liberty and freedom they organized another Communist "front" organization called the Friends of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade. The committee found many other groups—the Workers Alliance, International Workers Order, the I. W. W., and others—all of them controlled by the Communists and working in the interest of Dictator Stalin and his Communist government in Russia. They have a common purpose and that is to overthrow this Government by force and violence if necessary; to overthrow religion, break down the sanctity of the home, and enslave the workers and the childhood of the world.

What the Communists in the United States are attempting to do, they are doing in every other nation in the world which has not accepted communism. Earl Browder, the head of the Communists in the United States, and other leaders, frankly admitted they owed their allegiance to Dictator Stalin and the Russian Communist Government, and in the event of a struggle between this Nation and Russia they would take the side of Russia. With all of this Browder had the unmitigated gall to be the candidate of the Communist Party for President of the United States in 1936. On yesterday he was tried and convicted in the United States court in New York for the false use of passports in making his trips to Russia. Yes, Browder, from time to time, made trips to Russia in order to get instructions from Dictator Stalin and to carry reports to Stalin.

The Communists have induced many people from this country to go to Russia to receive training and instructions as to what to do when the proper time comes to help overthrow this Government. Communism is not really a political party—it is merely a great group of conspirators who have been plotting and planning for many years to overthrow this Government. Browder was convicted yesterday of these frauds and immediately sentenced by the judge to 4 years in prison and to pay a fine of $2,000. He was out on bond, and before a great group of Communists in New York City declared his conviction was a badge of honor. He refused to testify in his own behalf. He claims it was an honor to have been convicted for false swearing and for committing frauds against this Government, and these 20,000 Communists cheered his remarks.

THE GERMAN-AMERICAN BUND

The German-American Bund is an organization inspired and financed by Dictator Hitler and his government. Its head in this country is one Fritz Kuhn, who is designated as the fuhrer of the American bund. This is merely a political group. This organization divides the United States into 3 divisions, 47 districts, and 69 local posts or units. Thousands and thousands of persons, according to the evidence, have united with this German-American Bund. It is claimed that it has more than 100,000 members and sympathizers. Kuhn and his followers swear allegiance to Adolph Hitler and the German flag. It was found that in many communities of our country boys and men were armed and trained. Many of our boys were taken to Germany and there they saluted Hitler and the German flag and swore allegiance to Hitler and his flag.

They claim that one of their main purposes is to fight communism in the United States. It will be observed, however, that their technique is identical with the German leader who organized the Austrian Germans and led to the overthrow of Austria and made it a part of Germany, and the same procedure and policies were followed by the German leader in Czechoslovakia who helped to overthrow that nation and helped to make it a part of Germany, and the same procedure was followed in Poland. These same bund organizations are developed in many other countries of the world. The central idea seems to be to unite at some distant date all Germans under the German Reich. Kuhn and his followers admit that in the event of war between the United States and Germany they, like the Communists, would aid Germany. It is an un-American group.

Now, the Communists in the United States claim that they organized in order to protect this country from the Nazis, and the Italian organizations of American Fascists in turn claim that they organize to protect our country from Communists, but the leaders and most of the members of each one of these groups in the main swear allegiance to some European dictator.

The Dies committee has pulled the cover from off these un-American groups. The disclosures of the Dies committee brought about the indictment and conviction of Browder and other Communist leaders, and also developed the facts to show that Fritz Kuhn, the American fuhrer, was not only parading as an agent of Adolph Hitler and the German Government, but was stealing the membership dues paid into his organization, and he was recently indicted and convicted for stealing in the New York courts.

The Communists claim that one of their main objectives is to protect this country from the Nazis and Fascists. These facts against the Nazis, the Fascists, and the Communists have proved beyond question that these organizations are un-American. They are directed, controlled, and subsidized by foreign governments and agencies and they seek to change the policies and form of our Government in accordance with the wishes of foreign governments. Many of them are aliens, and they are enemies of this Government. The exposures of the criminal acts of these organizations and their leaders have caused many innocent persons who were beguiled to join these groups to drop out and condemn these un-American groups and their leaders.

You find that these Communists heartily applaud the invasion of Finland by Russia, and the unholy compact entered into between Stalin and Hitler. Fritz Kuhn and his followers wholeheartedly approved the ruthless overthrow of Austria and Czechoslovakia and the plundering of those small nations. They likewise favored the cruel aggression of Hitler and Stalin in Poland, and the overthrow of that government and the plunder and murder of the Polish people. Many American people who innocently became members of these various un-American groups have begun to realize that these groups have bored into the churches, the schools, the labor organization, and the Army and Navy. They have also found out that there is no peace, freedom of speech, or of the press, or religion where these groups control. They are beginning to realize that the people in Russia and Germany are forced to slaughter defenseless people in small countries whenever it suits the whims of a Hitler, a Stalin, or a Mussolini to do so.

We are spending billions to build a great Navy and a great Army to defend and protect our country. We know that no great country has ever been destroyed by forces from without. They have always fallen because of the enemies within. The great threat to our country does not come from forces across the seas. If this Nation ever falls, it will be because of the enemies within our own gates. It will come through groups like the Communists, the Nazis, or the Fascists, who are our enemies and swear allegiance to governments and dictators like Hitler and Stalin. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSON of Kentucky. I am very sorry that I cannot yield. I do not have the time.

The Dies committee has rendered a great service to our country in exposing these termites and vipers here in the United States who have been and are injecting their poisonous venom into the very heart of this great Republic.

I wish to commend the American Legion and other veterans' organizations, the hundreds of patriotic groups, the American Federation of Labor, other labor groups, many farm organizations, and industrial and professional groups for their support of the Dies committee and its work.

The liberties that we enjoy in this country came to us through the blood and sacrifices of millions of noble men and women. It cost us too much to permit a lot of vipers and termites to overthrow it and use our Nation and people as pawns for foreign governments and foreign dictators. It is high time we cleaned up America. Are we going to let a lot of enemies within our own borders scuttle the Navy we are building? Are we going to stand idly by and see them destroy the morale of our Army and teach our young boys to march under and salute another flag across the seas and swear allegiance to dictators in other lands?

LXXXVI—37

Americans who join these un-American groups and knowingly conspire against their own Government should receive their reward as have Browder, Fritz Kuhn, and others. Aliens who are conspiring with Browder, Kuhn, and their like should at once be put on ships and sent back across the seas and let them enjoy communism and nazi-ism in the raw in Russia and Germany.

When the Dies committee has finished its investigation, measures that have already been passed by Congress to protect this country should be strengthened. Let us not forget that there is no country that enjoys a democracy like our own and that it leads the world in peace and justice.

This resolution should be adopted by the American Congress without a dissenting vote, and I trust it will be. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat that the whole objective of the Congress in authorizing the committee was not to get newspaper headlines, but to get information that would aid Congress in any necessary remedial legislation. If that had been done, there would be no criticism coming to Mr. DIES.

I want, further, to repeat the fact that Mr. Metcalfe, the first witness before the Dies committee at its first meeting for taking testimony on August 12, 1938, made a very complete report on the German-American Bund activities, and Mr. Kuhn's association therewith. Mr. Metcalfe laid before the Dies committee a sufficient amount of evidence to have enabled the Federal Bureau of Investigation to round up every one in the bund, and would have enabled them to learn from the members of the various organizations what were the sources of their uniforms, their arms, their money, their plans of campaign and ultimate objectives, and more especially who the instigators of those objectives were. That would have been a real service. It would have enabled the prosecution of the leaders of the bund who might have been guilty of any offense against the laws of the United States. It is the way that every investigating committee that wishes for results carries on its business.

If the Federal Bureau of Investigation had had such a report, they would have had a mine of information that could have enabled them to get every other thing they needed about the German-American Bund organization and its associates.

But not so the Dies committee, because the chairman, who, from the beginning has made himself the whole committee, blared out the entire story to the newspapers. The headlines and the pictures that resulted excited the fears of many good Americans.

It is this extremely sensational method of presenting all of the information that has come into Mr. DIES' hands that has done so much injury and served no good purpose. Sensation always gets headlines. No one knows that better than the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. He loves the spotlight. It makes little difference whether or not a statement is true so far as sensation goes. All that is required is that there be an announcement that somebody has done something awful. If the accusation is untrue, no opportunity for correcting its influence is given. If a false accusation injures someone, he is never given a chance to defend himself under Mr. DIES' method of punishing un-Americanism. The injury is done. The knife of the assassin in the dark has done it work.

All other testimony taken by the Dies committee has been treated in the same way. It has been from the start a gathering and getting of sensational reports to the newspapers that would call forth headlines with Mr. DIES' name played up and the objective for which the Congress created this committee completely forgotten. I point this out deliberately and challenge anyone to deny the fact herein stated.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] made very enticing promises before he was originally appointed chairman of this committee, both on the floor of the House and in private, as regards his good behavior and consideration of the rights of men, because a good many Members of Congress had a very clear understanding of what might be accomplished under the terms of the resolution if the hearings were not conducted with great care and with a deep sense of justice to individual citizens. After the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] had made such a mess of the thing and came back to the House for a second appropriation, before he was reappointed chairman he went to even greater lengths and promised the leadership of the House that he would commit no further offenses along that line. He also agreed that he would not ask any extension of the committee beyond the 1 year, and that the second appropriation of $100,000 was granted with that specific understanding. He had asked for 2 years' time, which was frankly denied him. He had no more received the appointment and the money made available than he started out with increased vigor along exactly the same line, ignoring completely and entirely the other members of the committee.

It has been, is now, and in all human probability will continue to be a one-man committee, with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], of course, the one man.

It was the intention of the Congress that an investigation, especially of the foreign influences being exercised in this Government, should be made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] from the beginning, and especially during the second year of his chairmanship. But this he has completely ignored and has gone forward with insistent deliberation not to get information that would help the House in any way to pass necessary remedial legislation but to destroy the New Deal, which he has hated from the start; to destroy organized labor and to embarrass the Roosevelt administration, and where possible, to aid the Republican at the expense of the Democratic Party.

During the congressional campaign—1938, in fact—it appeared many of the Republicans placed more reliance for success of their party upon the reports of the Dies committee than they did on their own campaign committee. Everybody knows, or ought to know, how the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] deliberately and with political malice of forethought embarrassed the Democratic campaigns, especially in California and in Michigan, where the misrepresentation of correspondence to him and his committee resulted in the defeat of one of the very high-class men in America, Governor Murphy. It is, therefore, not to be wondered at that every Republican has voted for the continuation of the Dies committee. They are going to need more help, of course, and they are going to look to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] to furnish it.

I want now to reveal other actions of the Rules Committee in regard to the entire matter. A number of us went before that committee and asked for time to debate the whole matter, time to make a thorough presentation of all the facts on the floor of the House. We asked for 5 hours' open debate on the resolution. The Rules Committee had the full power to grant that if they had desired to do so. They had full power, but they did not do it. No one denied that they had full power to do it. They granted only 1 hour, because they were unwilling that a full presentation of all of the facts in this matter should be made.

At the same time, in the meeting of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], a member of the Dies committee, presented the following amendments to this resolution extending the life of the Dies committee, to prevent the abuses heretofore pointed out:

First. The committee shall hold regular executive meetings at least once each week.

Second. No public statements, press releases, communications, or reports involving the work and the responsibilities of the committee shall be issued or released by any member thereof, excepting after such statements, releases, communications, or reports have been submitted to the entire committee and approved by the majority thereof.

Third. Positive efforts shall be made by the committee to call persons accused of engaging in un-American activities before it as soon as possible after accusation to this effect has been made.

Fourth. Members of the committee shall make no speeches or public utterances during the course of the investigation which deal with matters under investigation, nor shall any charges or predictions as to future findings of the committee be made unless and until substantiated by evidence.

The Rules Committee refused to consider these amendments and were not as polite to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] as they might have been in refusing. That the Rules Committee had the power to include this as a part of the resolution there can be and is no doubt at all.

If such provisions had been made a part of the resolution, it would have, at least, I think, restrained their chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], from vocalizing on the investigator's reports to the committee in such a manner as to render them ineffective in the great service they could have rendered. The Rules Committee knew this very well. They evidently favored this vocalization method.

If the amendments had been made a part of the resolution itself, I should have voted for the continuation of the Dies committee. I should, at the same time, have been of the opinion that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] would not have paid much attention to these rules, by his evident and constant refusal to be directed by the Congress. Such restraints upon him by the act of the Congress itself would, in the eyes of the people, have largely nullified his sensational appeals for the rest of the life of the committee.

Some member of the Rules Committee suggested that the Dies committee itself might adopt the policies expressed in Mr. VOORHIS' amendments, but his fingers were crossed when he made it, and a good many winks went from one member to the other of the Rules Committee, upon hearing that bland announcement, because they knew two things. One, that there is not 1 chance in 10 that the Dies committee itself would adopt any such individually repressive measures on the vocal chairman of the committee. They also knew that if the committee would adopt any such rules for the control of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] that he would pay no attention to them, for no publicity would be given to that feature of the proceedings of the Dies committee. In other words, they knew that proceedings in the committee would go on, just as they had done before, unless the Voorhis amendments were made a part of the House resolution itself.

There has never been any desire on my part to prevent or handicap the proper investigation of any person or situation that even might be injuring America. In saying this, I believe that I am speaking for everyone who has opposed the Dies committee, as I have tried to make clear here. It is the method and the unfortunate result of that method which I have recognized and which I have been justified in opposing. The wholesale denouncement of people certainly is inexcusable and certainly as un-American as anything a man can be guilty of doing. It is to this sort of thing—the abuse of American citizens and the rendering ineffective to the purposes of this House in creating the committee of its evidence—that I have objected, that I do object, and shall continue to object.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, Fritz Kuhn is in Sing Sing. Earl Browder is on his way to Leavenworth. Nicholas Dozenburg and James Wheeler-Hill have pleaded guilty to indictments and are awaiting sentence. A dozen other of the objects of the Dies investigation have been indicted and are awaiting trial. Before many months have passed there will be scores of indictments; and many more of the un-American agents in our midst will be behind prison bars.

The vast majority of the American people know full well that our law-enforcement agencies have been spurred to action and the whole American people led to an understanding of the nature of un-American activities by the revelations of the Dies committee. This power of our democracy to protect itself against foreign agents aiming at the overthrow of our form of government is a tribute to the wisdom and vigor of our political institutions. Yes; and it is something else: it is the sufficient reason why the overwhelming majority of the American people want the Dies committee to continue its work, and it is the very excellent reason why every man in this House knows now that this body entertains no serious thought of ending the Dies investigation or of hamstringing its efforts to drag the rest of the un-American crew out into the open.

With the $115,000 which it has spent to date, the Dies committee has accomplished a piece of national education which, if it had been done before it was too late, would have saved many European countries from the fate which has overtaken them—thanks largely to their ignorance of the identity and true nature of the enemies of their now vanished free institutions. It may yet be written in the history of this country that an investigation committee set up by this House did more than any other single factor to save this country from the illusions and the terrors of totalitarian government. Our national education in these matters at this crucial period in the world history has been worth infinitely more than the sum which has been expended.

Our people are learning the important lesson of caution before joining organizations with high-sounding names and sinister purposes. It is due entirely to the work of the Dies committee that we now speak familiarly throughout this country of such things as "united front," "fellow travelers," and "transmission belts." Two years ago these phrases were not in our national vocabulary. Today they are almost universally understood, and understanding is the essence of our protection against them. I have it on good authority, and am happy to announce to this House, that Moscow's most successful "united front" or "transmission belt" in this country—the American League for Peace and Democracy—is about to fold up and go out of the business of hoodwinking the gullible. Just a year ago this "transmission belt" of Stalin was at the peak of its influence at the time of its annual convention held right here in Washington. Now it is about to become an unhappy memory.

It is altogether unnecessary for me to catalogue the achievements of the Dies committee. The American people and the Members of this House are pretty well acquainted with the committee's achievements, and that is why both the people and this body favor the continuation of the committee's work. Despite this widespread acquaintance with the results of the committee's work, I wish to state briefly at least 10 among the many things which the committee has succeeded in making clear:

First. It has exposed the fact of widespread passport frauds by Communists.

Second. It has established the connection between Stalin and a gigantic counterfeiting plot in this country.

Third. It has shown, by hundreds of pages of testimony, that the Communist Party in this country is a branch of Stalin's government and, as such, is guilty of violation of the act requiring the registration of foreign agents with the State Department.

Fourth. It has proven that numerous auxiliaries of the Communist Party, such as the American League for Peace and Democracy, have violated the same act by failing to register.

Fifth. It has adduced substantial evidence that the Communist Party has been engaged on a wide scale in espionage and sabotage in this country through the instrumentality of Stalin's OGPU.

Sixth. It has revealed an alarming penetration by the Communist Party into the ranks of labor and the penetration of communism in our schools, colleges, and governmental agencies.

Seventh. It has shown the direct link between Hitler and the German-American bund.

Eighth. It nipped in the bud a crude move of the Moseley-Deatherage-Gilbert-Campbell group to launch a race-hating violent American fascism.

Ninth. It has exposed from top to bottom the un-American character of Pelley's Silver Shirts, and of a score of kindred Fascist outfits including the Christian Front.

Tenth. It demonstrated again and again, long before the Stalin-Hitler alliance, the essential identity of all the totalitarians—the Communists, the Nazis, and the Fascists.

And yet, even with all of these achievements to its credit, the work of the committee is not finished. There are whole areas, both geographical and topical, where Communists and Fascists are operating, but where with its limited facilities, the committee has not yet brought about complete exposures. The continuation of the committee's work is, I am glad to say, a matter upon which both sides of this House can agree overwhelmingly. As the chairman of the committee has so often said, it is a work which rises far above all partisan questions and commands the wholehearted support of all Americans. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back one-half minute.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, everyone, including the chairman of the committee to investigate un-American activities and many of the committee's distinguished members, has been ready to admit that the so-called Dies committee has made mistakes. It has been freely stated that the committee's procedure has often been less than scrupulously fair and impartial, as we Americans understand fair procedure. It has not been denied that the committee engaged as its first investigator a man of at least questionable reputation and an unsavory past, in which anti-Semitic, anti-Catholic, and un-American activities played a part. It has not been denied that the committee has frequently given considerable weight to the testimony of witnesses whose credibility was open to serious doubt, some of whom even had criminal records. It has not been denied that the committee acted to influence national elections in at least three States, and in a manner characterized by the President of the United States as "unfair and un-American." It has been charged—and I believe the facts substantiate the charges—that the Dies committee has timed its appearance in certain cities to coincide with the holding of National Labor Relations Board elections, or the settlement of serious labor disputes, and that it has used its unquestioned influence to affect the outcome of those elections and those settlements in a manner inimical to the interests of the workers involved.

It has not been denied that the Dies committee has on occasion been irresponsible in its dealings with the press, nor that it has spread unsubstantiated charges against the character of prominent persons without giving them adequate opportunity to clear themselves.

Mr. Speaker, a recital of the admitted mistakes of this committee, which now asks the House to continue its life for a third year, a recital of the mistakes cheerfully and publicly confessed to by its own members, would take a lot more time than has been allowed to me and all the other opponents of this resolution. If the committee members themselves came before this House and confessed to all the mistakes they have previously admitted, it would take more time for their confessions than the 2 hours granted us for this entire debate.

But there is one mistake to which the committee and its members do not confess, Mr. Speaker. And that mistake is the fundamental one on which I base my firm opposition to continuing the life of the Dies committee. That is the mistake of permitting such a committee as this to exist at all in these critical times, and to pursue the objectives it has pursued in the past and will, we may be certain, continue to pursue in the future.

What are the objectives of the Dies committee? By their fruits ye shall know them. The objectives of the Dies committee are to spread mutual distrust and fear among the common people of America; to create in the popular mind a war hysteria and to set neighbor against neighbor in a hunt for heretical thoughts; to disrupt and destroy the progressive organizations through which the people seek to solve their problems of jobs, security, wages, and living standards; to cripple the attempts of consumers to protect their living standards against rising prices; to weaken the trade unions; to hobble the minds of students and muzzle their teachers.

In short, the objectives of this committee as established by their deeds and their "achievements" are to undermine American democracy by terrorizing the American people into the surrender of their traditional rights.

I am not alone, Mr. Speaker, in recognizing the essentially un-American nature of the objectives of the Dies committee and in opposing its continuance on this ground. The rank and file of organized labor is mindful of the danger. Many hundreds of trade-union locals have spoken out in resolutions and petitions and individual letters to the Members of this House. The American Federation of Teachers, of which I am proud to be a member, has asked me to make its views known here. Recently a group of distinguished educators, associated with the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom of which the Professor Franz Boaz is chairman, sent every Member of Congress a detailed analysis of the Dies committee's record. This report by the best and most respected savants in our country charges that the Dies committee has engaged in a series of attacks upon the "freedom of teaching and investigation in leading institutions of learning by recognized scholars and by professional associations of educators."

It warns us against the Dies committee, not only as a danger to freedom of speech, press, and assembly but as an even greater danger to that inalienable right of freedom to think for ourselves.

The President of the United States, when he charged the committee with being unfair and un-American, and when he spoke of its "sordid procedure" in publishing the membership and mailing lists of the American League for Peace and Democracy, brought its objectives as well as its procedure into question.

Unfortunately this opposition to the continuance of the Dies committee has been drowned out by those subversive elements who have every reason to want it to continue and by the millions of misguided citizens whom the committee has succeeded in misleading as to its purpose and its methods. A committee whose objectives are those of the chambers of commerce, of the National Association of Manufacturers, of the Associated Farmers, the Christian Front, the reactionary press, the Wall Street financiers, the munitions makers, and all the most powerful and richest enemies of democracy—such a committee has no trouble in making itself heard.

There is another reason for the failure of the opposition to the Dies committee to become more effective. The failure of the unions and other progressive groups to register the full strength of their opposition is itself a measure of the extent to which the Dies committee has already succeeded in weakening and intimidating the progressive forces in this country. It just is not healthy to speak the truth about the Dies committee any more. Mr. Speaker, I submit that this alone is sufficient reason for calling a halt.

And there is still another reason why the Dies committee can feel confident today that it will get a new lease on life from this House and more funds with which to continue to whip up more and more war hysteria in our country. That is the failure of the leaders of my party, the Democratic Party, to voice their unqualified opposition. Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to express the grave fears which this silence on the part of the administration and its spokesmen arouse in me. But I feel constrained to express them, because I know that they are present in the minds of my constituents and because they concern the future peace and security of our country.

I cannot help asking, Mr. Speaker, whether the willingness of leading new dealers to accept this resolution is connected with the new drive for economy in social expenditures reflected in the 1940 Budget? Is it connected with the increasingly ominous signs that we propose to convert our economy into a war economy? Is it connected with the attempts to cripple the Wagner Act and emasculate the Fair Labor Standards Act? Is it connected with alarming tendency toward building up a political secret police in the Federal Bureau of Investigation, as testified to by Mr. J. Edgar Hoover and his card-index system of "suspicious characters"?

If the new dealers are preparing to scuttle the New Deal, if they intend to abandon the fight for peace, progress, and the social security of our people, then they have every reason for wanting to continue the Dies committee. For, if that is what they intend, they will need all the help they can get in disarming the American people and persuading them to take this betrayal lying down.

The gentleman from Texas, Chairman DIES, has written a series of articles for Liberty magazine. The striking title of this series is, "More Snakes Than I Can Kill."

Mr. DIES' voting record in this House convinces me that his definition of "snakes" and mine differ. If by "snakes" the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] means red-blooded, fighting Americans who mean to defend what they have won under the New Deal and who mean to hold the new dealers to their promises, then the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] is quite right. There are more "snakes" of that breed than he, or any other man, or any other committee, can kill, though all the resources of the Federal Treasury were put at their disposal.

Mr. Speaker, no sensible man would delude himself in thinking that the Dies committee will be stopped by speeches today. I know that it will continue, at least for another year. But I know, too, that in the last analysis it will be defeated in its purpose. The American people will continue and democracy will continue. Not just for 1 year, but through the years to come, and long after the Dies committee has been forgiven and forgotten.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY].

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I voted originally for the creation of this committee. I believe that all subversive and un-American activities should be stamped out, but I did not vote for a continuation of the committee because of the un-American way in which it conducted the committee meetings. Unless we are assured that the committee will be conducted in a different manner in the future, I, for one, will not be able to vote for it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my friend, the ranking member of the minority on my committee, for the time he has given me. My own chairman has not found it convenient to consult with me with reference to time, and therefore I must go to the opposite party for the little time I may use.

Mr. Speaker, you may say what you please about the Dies committee, but it has the reds in this country on the run, and as to the position that it holds in the confidence of the people of this country, you will find ample testimony when this vote is taken.

I wanted time, Mr. Speaker, to make answer to the scurrilous attack made upon the chairman of this committee by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook], in his extension of remarks in the Record of yesterday. The gentleman from Michigan reminds me of the boy who burned the Temple of Ephesus. He wants to connect his name with some important event in history, even though he be represented by a mere daub of mud. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I am obliged to state that I have offered time to the gentleman. I made arrangements with the gentleman from New York for my colleague to have 5 minutes, but he has refused to take it that way.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I had a conversation with the gentleman this morning on the telephone concerning the control of the time at the disposal of the committee members presenting this resolution. My friend stated to me that he would make arrangements for me to control a part of the time. I now find that he has generously saved me 2 minutes, and I have stated to him that I do not want it. The gentleman being against the resolution should have had nothing to do with the control of time.

In the speech which the Member from Michigan [Mr. Hook] inserted in the Record yesterday attacking the chairman of the Dies committee, he stated that Mr. James Wheeler-Hill, secretary of the German-American Bund, was listed as a sponsor on the program of a luncheon in New York City which was addressed by the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, on December 8, 1938. I have in my hand a copy of the program of that luncheon which gives the names of 43 sponsors. The name of James Wheeler-Hill is not among them. The luncheon was open to the public and it is true that James Wheeler-Hill and Fritz Kuhn, like hundreds of others, purchased tickets of admission. When the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, was apprised of the presence of these two leaders of the German-American Bund, he declared, according to the New York papers: "I detest the Communist Party and the German-American Bund alike." Turning to the chairman of the gathering, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] added: "I wish he had brought Browder along, too, and a few others to hear what I have to say about the American doctrine." That, my friends, is the sort of link which the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, has with the German-American Bund.

Now, let us look for a moment at the alleged "guilty association" between the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, and William Dudley Pelley, of the Silver Shirts. Incidentally Pelley is suing the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] for the tidy sum of one-half million dollars. Certainly that is no evidence of the existence of a "friendly link" between the two.

The entire substance of the evidence of DIES' "guilty association" with Pelley is contained in alleged letters written by Pelley to a third party—one David Mayne. Now, no one can exercise a censorship over the correspondence of two other parties. In this instance the correspondence is between a fugitive from justice and one of his stool pigeons.

The Member from Michigan considers that the report of the Dies committee to this House is altogether inadequate in dealing with the aims and activities of William Dudley Pelley. The whole country has, on the contrary, hailed the Dies report as a fair and balanced document. On the subject of Pelley who will say that the report does not effectively castigate the leader of the Silver Shirts? I read from the report only one of the statements concerning Pelley, which occupy two pages of the committee's findings:

From the documentary evidence and testimony before the committee concerning the activities of Pelley, the conclusion that he is a racketeer engaged in mulcting thousands of dollars annually from his fanatical and misled followers and credulous people all over the United States, Canada, and certain foreign countries is inescapable.

Repeatedly in his broadcasts and in his comments during the hearings of the committee the gentleman from Texas, Chairman DIES, gave expression to this and similar estimates of Mr. Pelley. The truth of the matter is that the testimony concerning Pelley occupies not simply 88 pages of the Dies record but is found scattered through each of the 9 volumes that have thus far come from the press. No one who can read will be able to come to the conclusion that the committee or its chairman has handled Pelley with kid gloves.

Through its most commendable vigilance, the Dies committee learned that an agent of Pelley tried under false pretenses to obtain employment as a committee investigator. The committee promptly cited this agent of the Silver Shirt leader for perjury committed in his effort to obtain employment, and he is now under indictment for that offense in the District of Columbia courts.

Practically all of Pelley's recent issues of his magazine, Liberation, have teemed with vituperation of the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES. These publications have been widely circulated among the Members of this House.

Such are the evidences of a link between the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, and William Dudley Pelley.

Let us look for a moment into the allegation that a link exists between the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, and the Christian Front. There is not the slightest evidence of such a tie, but there are enemies of MARTIN DIES' brand of Americanism who would like to manufacture such evidence. I am informed that the Dies committee is in possession of testimony that an agent of the Communist Party has recently offered a certain gentleman who had some casual connection with the committee's investigation the sum of $2,500 for a false affidavit alleging a link between the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and the Christian Front. That is the desperate and despicable length to which the un-American forces in this country are prepared to go in their reckless attempt to smear one of the outstanding public servants of our time.

The Dies committee's report to this House brands the Christian Front and the Christian Mobilizers as un-American outfits. The devious logic of the Member from Michigan is not worth the paper on which it is written when it tries laboriously and painfully to trace a connection between the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and the Christian Front. Furthermore, I have in my possession astonishing evidence that these self-styled Christians entertain no love for the chairman of the Committee on Un-American Activities. They love him in the same way that the Daily Worker and the Communist Party love him. On last September 21, the Acting Chief of the United States Secret Service notified the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, in writing that he was the object of a threatened physical assault by these self-styled Christians. I hold in my hand the letter and the memorandum which the Acting Chief of the United States Secret Service sent to the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES. That, ladies and gentlemen of the House, was 4 months ago. When his personal safety was threatened, the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, did not go to the press with a news story that would have made the first pages of newspapers all over the country. In the light of the documents from the United States Secret Service which I hold in my hand, every Member of this House should resent with burning indignation any statement, express or implied, that the distinguished chairman of the Dies committee is linked with these Christian Fascists.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CELLER. Is the resolution under consideration subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not unless the chairman of the Committee on Rules yields for that purpose or unless the previous question is voted down, in which event the whole resolution would be open to amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

THE AMERICAN RIGHT OF FREE SPEECH

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Evening Star of Washington reported an un-American act which I hope this committee, in the extension which I expect this House to vote to it, will explore.

The Associated Press is quoted as saying that the National Labor Relations Board yesterday contended that freedom of speech was "a qualified and not an absolute right"; and, consequently, ordered the Ford Motor Co. to desist from distributing any literature which carried the attitude of Mr. Ford on the subject of labor. I suggest that the Dies committee in its investigation of things that are un-American in this country could well include an investigation of those governmental bodies which take such un-American positions as to say that any act of Congress can override or make null and void the First Amendment to the Constitution, that guaranteeing free speech. [Applause.]

Permit me to say further, Mr. Speaker, that that is an unfriendly act to labor and an unfriendly act to minorities and to those groups who need the protection in times of stress.

If an act of Congress can in the one instance nullify the constitutional guarantees of free speech in one direction, it can in another. The day has been seen and will be seen again when labor will plead the Constitution and the Bill of Rights for protection against some act of Congress. If you destroy free speech for the employer, you destroy it also for the employee.

Yet here we have an agency of the Government saying that the right of free speech is a qualified right, subject to nullification by an act of Congress. Mr. Speaker, if the National Labor Relations Board makes such an un-American decision in the belief that the Supreme Court at this time will uphold them, then the responsibility rests upon Congress to rise to its sworn duty of defending and upholding the Constitution by wiping out the Board and the act that seeks in such a manner to destroy the right of free speech.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. For a question only.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Does the gentleman also believe that the Dies committee should investigate a picture that is now being shown at the R. K. O. Theater in Washington, wherein the statement is made by Abraham Lincoln that the people have a revolutionary right to change the form of their Government?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I have not seen the picture and am not familiar with the quotation. Which matters little. The right of men to establish new governments was stated in the Declaration of Independence—a right when governments deny life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Yet the gentleman knows and every Member of this Body knows that giving allegiance to one's country's enemies is treason. And one witness before the Dies committee is credited with having said that in case of war between this country and Russia, the members of his organization would be bound to follow the Communist Internationale.

The man who probably wrote into the Declaration of Independence those words on the right of men to establish free governments, however—the right of revolution, if you want to put it that way—Thomas Jefferson, was among those most anxious to have adopted the first 10 amendments to the Constitution, the Bill of Rights. And first among them was:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press * * *.

He wanted this Government to succeed. He wanted it to maintain liberty. Yet here we have the National Labor Relations Board, a Government agency, saying:

The guarantee of such rights (self-organization) to the employees would, indeed, be wholly ineffective if the employer, under the guise of its constitutional right of free speech, were free to coerce them into refraining from exercising the rights vouchsafed to them in the act.

Lay aside the absurd contention that the simple distribution or posting of a circular stating the views of Mr. Ford on labor was coercion. The bald thesis of the N. L. R. B. is that an act of Congress is superior to the Constitution. No matter what the constitutional rights are, the Board says, in effect, if they make ineffective a guaranty of rights set forth in an act of Congress, the Constitution, not the act, fails.

Strange doctrine that. Strange friendship for labor that. Another act could give some board power to deny employees the right to have their voice or to print their side of a case.

Mr. Speaker, this body is sworn to defend the Constitution of the United States. When any governmental agency puts out such un-American doctrine, it is time that this body perform its duty whether it be to extend the life of the committee under discussion or to take direct action against the life of the Board or act guilty of such an un-American doctrine. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman not believe that the Dies committee should thoroughly investigate the un-American discriminatory activity against the people of the colored race down below the Mason and Dixon's line?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If such exists.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, as I view it, the House is today confronted with the choice of two evils. On the one hand, to adopt this resolution is to seemingly approve the un-American procedure of the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities. On the other hand, to defeat the resolution is to seemingly approve of a continuation of subversive activities.

It is unfortunate that such a choice must be made. It is indeed difficult to vote to continue a legislative committee which in itself has adopted methods which are a mockery of democratic processes. While it is true that telling exposures have been made, time after time persons and organizations have been accused of un-American leanings and, because of the manner of the committee in handling and disclosing the charges, have been found guilty, at least in the public's mind, without even being permitted to offer a defense. Practices of this sort are born of intolerance and beget hysteria in the public's mind.

In a sense, unbridled demagoguery is more of a menace to Americanism than the activities of a few scattered and half-brained sympathizers of communism, especially when it has legislative sanction and the open approval of Congress. Procedure violative of fair play and the sacred right of the accused to a fair hearing before being adjudged guilty should not for a moment be tolerated; and excusing such conduct in a legislative inquiry will gradually lead to a contempt for time-tested judicial methods of determining issues. Americans venerate the courts of this land, because in the final analysis in their hearts they know that justice will be obtained. The result may come slow, but it is assured.

I cannot believe that a single member of this special committee would for a moment seriously contend that this country is at present in such a grave emergency, because of un-American activities, that it calls for the suspension of constitutional methods or the rights of man.

This committee has, without doubt, performed a wonderful service to the people of this country, but the effect of much of what has been accomplished has in a large degree been nullified by its own methods of procedure and its incessant and insatiable desire for the newspaper headlines. It is my sincere hope that it will heed the just accusations which have been lodged against it, and with which I believe a majority of the committee will agree. It has had and, as it probably will be continued, will have in the next year a wonderful opportunity to perform a service of lasting benefit to the country. I pray that it will see the light and will act accordingly.

The ideologies of communism, fascism, and nazi-ism are unspeakably loathsome to me, and perhaps that is why I speak so strongly and condemn so heartily methods which in themselves are on the border line of intolerance.

However, because I do not want in the least way to do anything which may be expressive of sympathy for, or which may lend encouragement to subversive or un-American activities, be they communistic, Fascist, or Nazi, my vote must and will be cast in favor of the continuation of the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of this committee. The first thing I want to say is that I regret more than I can say the nature this debate inevitably takes on. The debate on the subject of the Dies committee is taken advantage of every time it comes up by various Members to make the accusation, in the first place, that there can be no honest opposition to the committee, and, in the second place, to express their own personal views about certain organizations and movements in America. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROSSON] quoted from the report a definition of un-American activities which, in my opinion, sets forth the scope of this committee and is the proper field of its work. I think it is a shame that the membership cannot discuss this question on its merits and dispassionately instead of attempting to make political capital out of it right here on the floor. For example, the old charge about there being large numbers of Communists employed by our Government has been reiterated again today. Such a charge is not supported by evidence before the committee, nor should such a loose charge ever be made by anyone until he is ready to be specific and to name names and give his evidence. When that is done, I, for one, believe that any person who belongs to a foreign-controlled group should be dismissed at once. But unfounded charges on a matter as important as this are wrong.

If it were within my power to do so, I should like to see this committee adopt as its rules of procedure the following things which I suggested yesterday to the Rules Committee:

First, the committee shall hold regular executive meetings at least once each week.

Second, no public statements, press releases, communications, or reports involving the work and responsibilities of the committee shall be issued or released by any member thereof excepting after such statements, releases, communications, or reports have been submitted to the entire committee and approved by a majority thereof.

Third, positive efforts shall be made by the committee to call persons accused of engaging in un-American activities before it as soon as possible after accusation to this effect has been made.

Fourth, members of the committee shall make no speeches or public utterances during the course of the investigation which deal with matters under investigation, nor shall any charges or predictions as to future findings of the committee be made unless and until substantiated by evidence.

When I suggested and submitted that, I was told it would "hamstring" the committee. I cannot understand that. I am convinced, on the other hand, that if we had followed these suggestions every mistake which this committee has made would have been avoided. Some of the mistakes which the committee made such as issuance of the report on consumers organizations in the way it was done, have been of such character as to cast discredit upon its other work. I hope and believe that what the House wants is a real investigation of un-American activities. We do not want this committee to accuse people on anything but clear evidence, carefully and properly developed.

Mr. Speaker, I did sign the report of the committee and I believe the basic findings contained therein are correct. I believe the basic work done by the committee is correct and has given the Nation valuable information. I am one of those Members who has spoken out when I felt the committee was wrong, and I propose to do just that in the future. For a committee of this kind cannot possibly be too careful in its work, even in the case of the report which I think was a good report, I want to say at this time that I am compelled to admit we were apparently not as careful as we should have been with regard to a couple of organizations concerning which certain facts have come to my attention since and which I certainly think should be given an opportunity to present their case at the earliest possible moment. One of these organizations is the United Electrical and Radio Machine Workers, which I am now informed, has a long record of peaceful relations with a great many employers. Its record does not look like that of a Communist-dominated union. I want to say that I believe the evidence upon which we acted is insufficient—particularly in the face of the union's record—to include that organization in the list of Communist-dominated unions, and I deeply regret my own failure to spend more time and pains on this matter.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. May I state that that evidence has been placed in my hands this morning and it appears that an injustice has been done this electrical union. I, for one, will be glad at the first opportunity to give that union a chance to clear itself and to repudiate what has been said about it. [Applause.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman very much. I want to proceed to another case. I am told that the Spanish Refugee Relief sends all its money to the Friends Service Committee. If that is true, then the committee certainly ought to look into that further than it has done before putting this organization down in the list contained in the report. I believe one of the jobs this committee ought to do is to look much more thoroughly into some of these groups and organizations and give them a chance to appear before the committee at the earliest possible date. Of course, as I stated, I take my share of that blame. Other things have happened which I am sure would have been corrected if the rules of procedure which I suggest had been followed. I shall try to see that is done in the future and I am sure other members of the committee largely agree with me in that respect.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman examine into the activities of the Christian Front and those individuals and organizations which espouse its case?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I cannot speak for the committee, of course. I hope the committee will proceed with equal attention as to the Communist movement on the one hand and the Fascist-Nazi movements on the other hand. So far as I am concerned, my effort will continue to be bent earnestly in that direction. I do not see how the committee can fail to go into the organizations the gentleman mentions.

May I point out that mention has been made that the F. B. I. investigations and arrests have resulted in indictments of leaders of many of the organizations that have been under investigation—including the Communist Party and the bund. Obviously if the F. B. I. had not done this work, and if the F. B. I. had not looked up and actually apprehended the people who are guilty of disobedience to our laws, the work of the Dies committee would not be nearly as effective.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the country faces three dangers today. Of course, there may be more than three, but I want to speak of just three at this time. The first is the unemployment problem. If this Congress thinks by setting up a Dies committee it is going to give the people a substitute for security and jobs, it is badly mistaken. Our first job is these jobs and that security, and if we ever forget that we will be negligent in our most elementary duties. The second kind of danger is the danger that the Dies committee is set up to investigate—activities aiming to subvert our democracy and set up dictatorship in its place. I am for finding all the facts and giving the American people all the facts about such activities. Such information is one of the ways a free government has of defending itself. But there is a third kind of danger that has been mentioned. That is the danger of inflaming the public mind. On this point I want to say that the important thing is for the committee to let the evidence speak for itself. The effectiveness of this committee's work is going to depend almost entirely upon the degree to which it operates in a conservative, factual, and careful way. It will be weakened, and the impact of its work upon these foreign-controlled organizations will be lessened just to the extent that earnest people whose unswerving loyalty is to the United States—whatever their economic views may be—are drawn under any circumstances into this matter. The effectiveness of the committee's work will be further weakened if the committee is utilized by a member of the committee or anybody else as a means of making political capital against the essential, progressive forces of this country, without which a solution of our problems is impossible.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] has stated, the Dies committee has made some stupid blunders and it is well that we air our views today frankly, openly, and fairly. The errors of the Dies committee have been due to faulty technique and bad procedure. Here is a committee set up to investigate un-American activities, and itself adopts un-American procedure. Its chairman has issued too many self-serving declarations. His ambition has outrun his sense of justice and fairness. This chairman allowed its research director, J. B. Matthews, to publish a report on alleged communistic activities in consumer organizations. The report was not even seen by any other member of the committee than the chairman. This is star-chamber business and should not be tolerated. But the real vice of it all was that the report unjustifiably smeared many decent American consumer organizations. Mr. Matthews charged that Communists have been active in the management of a number of consumer organizations interested in such matters as the price of milk, the retail cost of goods, and the honesty of advertising. There was not even a single hearing on the report. Not a witness was called to testify. Such tactics are outrageously unfair. Mr. Matthews claimed that many of these organizations were controlled by Communists. This was lamentably false and witnesses could have easily been submitted to deny such allegations. It may have been true that in some instances a Communist or several Communists were members or one Communist was an officer, but one color does not make a spectrum, two stars do not make a firmament, one swallow does not make a summer. Some of the organizations mentioned are riddled with Communists, notably the International Workers Order, but many of the others enumerated are not so tainted and they are not the so-called transmission belts for communism. Great injury was done these groups.

The recent Gallup poll—American Institute of Public Opinion—showed that 75 percent of the Nation believed that Congress should extend the activities of this committee for another year. The public believes that much of the work done by this committee has value. There has been exposed to the light of day communism and nazi-ism, not only in the field of politics but also in the field of propaganda. Such subversive activities in these fields have heretofore been concealed. The committee has brought to light much espionage, spying and "boring from within." The committee did good work in connection with Fritz Kuhn and the Nazis. It uncovered much of the intolerance of these vile leaders like Kuhn and Browder. It gave publicity to the contribution of Communist funds to various supposedly noncommunistic organizations. Many of the members of these organizations had had no previous knowledge whatsoever concerning such communistic connections. All this is good work.

The bad work of the committee is unfortunate, but it can be remedied. For example, a few weeks ago the committee gave "shotgun" publicity to a list of 563 names of Federal employees in a way that seemed to charge that the persons listed were "reds" or "pinks." This is damnable business and should not be repeated. I am assured by the members of the committee that there will be no repetition of this mistake. And it is for this reason that I am going to vote for the bill. Frankly, however, I do so with my tongue in my cheek. The American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom has the following to say concerning the Dies committee:

Freedom is essential to the intellectual life. In an age of conflict, free and untrammelled exchange of opinion is particularly necessary. That is why the Bill of Rights must be treasured at all costs.

"We believe," said 62 prominent educators, men of letters, and other public figures in a recent open letter, "that the Bill of Rights must apply to the rights of all Americans—or that it will prove a cheat for all. We do not accept the dangerous proposition, now being broadcast from certain quarters, that civil rights can be withheld from this dissident minority or that, at the pleasure of those who may have the power to do so."

The recent experience of other countries has shown that education is one of the early victims of suppression, sharing the fate of political minorities, labor, the church, and the press. As responsible citizens, we cannot remain silent when such vital issues are at stake. We must enter into the struggle to defend civil liberties at every point of threat, direct or indirect. Free America has given us our chance to train our minds, and we should be ungrateful if we did not bring our best thought to her.

Because we acknowledge these principles, we urge the Congress to grant no further appropriations to the Dies committee. In presenting the following analysis in support of our request, we, as educators, have confined ourselves largely to the treatment of educational world by the committee and its witnesses.

1. The House resolution introduced by Representative Dies assigned to his committee the task of "conducting an investigation of (1) the extent, character, and objects of un-American propaganda activities in the United States; (2) the diffusion within the United States of subversive and un-American propaganda that is instigated from foreign countries or of a domestic origin and attacks the principle of the form of government as guaranteed by our Constitution."

The use of the phrase "un-American propaganda," which is vague, undefined, and undefinable, left the committee free to follow its own bias and prejudice. The result has been something approaching the character of a witch hunt, reminiscent of the activities of Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer and the Lusk committee in the heat of the period of the first World War. Political phrases have been manipulated as epithets in order to discredit individuals and organizations. Public attitudes of intolerance and hatred have been created which discredit minorities—political, cultural, religious, labor—and greatly lessen their effective appeal. "The fundamental right of free men," said Mr. Justice Brandeis (Mr. Justice Holmes concurring), "to strive for better conditions through new legislation and new institutions will not be preserved, if efforts to secure it by argument to fellow citizens may be construed as criminal incitement to disobey the existing law—merely because the argument presented seems to those exercising judicial power to be unfair in its portrayal of existing evils, mistaken in its assumptions, unsound in reasoning or intemperate in language."

2. The Dies committee has attacked freedom of teaching and investigation in leading institutions of learning (Harvard, Vassar, Stanford, California, Columbia, among others), by recognized scholars (Albert Einstein, Dean Grayson, N. Kefauver of Stanford, Prof. Kirtley F. Mather, of Harvard; Prof. Max Radin, of California; Prof. Paul Douglas, of Chicago; Dr. Eduard C. Lindemann, of the New York School of Social Work; Prof. Wyllistine Goodsell, of Teachers College, Columbia, among others), and by professional associations of educators (American Association of University Professors, American Federation of Teachers, Progressive Education Association, Commission on School Studies of the American Historical Association, among others).

Reduced to their essential implication, these attacks mean that our universities, educators, and learned societies must give up their intellectual freedom and conform to the views held by a congressional committee or else be pilloried by the publicity it can command and be threatened with legislative interference. We cannot accept such an unwarranted assumption of authority and retain our integrity.

3. The Dies committee has attacked freedom of association and debate among students. We believe that our students think their own way through the political, economic, and social philosophies of our time. Any attempt to exercise tyranny over the minds of youth not only exceeds the authority vested in Congress, but is bad pedagogy and likely to produce results contrary to those desired. The safeguard of the United States tomorrow is the free minds of its youth today.

4. The Dies committee has sat in judgment upon current books, periodicals, plays, and works of art. We assert that the very foundations of intellectual liberty are shaken when any congressional committee can hold even the shadow of a threat over the books we read or the plays we see.

I have great respect for the aforesaid opinion of this American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom. Headed as it is by Professor Boaz, it is made up of a distinguished array of college professors. I have presented their conclusions to certain members of the committee. They assure me wholeheartedly and unmistakably that there will be no repetition of the errors of the past. They will respect the Bill of Rights. They will accord everyone appearing before it a fair hearing. They will try to put a muzzle on the gentleman from Texas, Chairman Dies. They will not attack the intellectual freedom of educators and university instructors. They will not berate students for their opinions, and they will not attempt the censorship of books, plays, or works of art. They will treat labor and labor organizations squarely and fairly.

Finally, I have also been assured that the committee will attempt to examine the Christian Front, and particularly the crackpot conspiracy of the 17 men arrested in Brooklyn, charged with plotting to overthrow the Government. These political lunatics were aided and abetted by the writings and mouthings of Father Coughlin. It is hoped that the committee will look carefully into this matter, will look into the ramifications of the so-called Christian Front and see what part this political priest played in the beginnings and the furtherance and the encouragement of this so-called Christian Front. Its terror schedule had among its objectives the assassination of 14 Members of Congress in the metropolitan area of New York, all of whom voted to lift the embargo. Let these Christian Front leaders be asked what effect the editorials in Social Justice had upon their conduct. And let us find out to what ends and for what purpose Social Justice approved the formation of so-called rifle clubs designed to assist in quelling any revolutionary disturbances.

Let the committee examine the various advices given in Social Justice to the Christian Front. That advice read, in part, "Meet force with force only as a last resort."

Behind the camouflage of the defense mechanism, Coughlin has constantly hinted to his followers of impending violence and cited the Franco insurrection as a classic political model. Only a fortnight ago, in a national broadcast, he candidly announced his faith in the dictatorship idea.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I will vote for the continuance of the Dies Committee on Un-American Activities.

For years the service and patriotic organizations of the country have been warning us of the existence of subversive activities in the United States. They have shown these activities were on the increase and that they were reaching out into all parts of this land. Many of us scoffed at the idea that in our land there could be any large group whose patriotism and loyalty were in question. Others of us thought these service organizations were trying to create a problem of their own choosing to increase their own activities and membership and for publicity purposes. Few of us realized the full nature and significance of these undercover activities until the Dies committee was authorized to bring out into the open the enemies of the United States of America.

Under our system of government and under the terms of our Bill of Rights it has been difficult to handle this problem. Many of the solutions urged by Members of Congress would have done violence to our Bill of Rights or to the Constitution. Publicity alone was in most instances all that was necessary, and this has been the great work of the Dies committee.

They may attempt the smear the chairman of the committee with acts un-American and unpatriotic. They censor him for mistakes and blunders. This, in my opinion, has very little to do with the problem today. It is our duty to pass upon the question as to whether or not the whole committee, not the chairman only, is to be continued in office.

I for one believe that the committee has done a mighty good job. It has brought to the attention of the public the real seriousness of the subversive activities existing in the Nation. It has focussed public indignation upon these activities, and this, in turn, has resulted in useful legislation in Congress. This work should continue. It should continue until every bit of evidence bearing upon disloyalty in the United States is fully exposed. It should continue until the work of the Nazi bund and Soviet Communism in America has been fully exposed, even unto the very last scintilla. The committee should not be held back at the flood tide of its activities by the hand of Congress calling it back from battle. It has our support as it has the almost united support of the American people and should be given full opportunity of developing its case and extirpating finally and forever this slimy work of the alien who bites the hand that feeds him.

Andrew Jackson once said about a close friend of his, "My friend is the natural enemy of scoundrels." The Dies committee is the natural enemy of all who seek to undermine our form of government.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, undoubtedly the most conspicuous thing about the Dies report is the absence of any definition of communism. It says:

Essentially, communism is an international revolutionary movement seeking to replace democratic government by a so-called dictatorship of the proletariat. This is the aim and goal of all true Communists and fundamentally it never changes.

This is merely a definition of a means toward attaining communism. The mere replacement of a democratic government by a so-called dictatorship of the proletariat is neither the ultimate aim nor the ultimate goal of communism. The one and only end that all Communists, without a single exception, have striven for is the abolition of private property and its absorption into the community or the state. The Encyclopedia Britannica defines communism as the "abolition of private property and its absorption into the community." Karl Marx in his Manifesto defined it simply as the "abolition of private property."

Certainly no one is at this hour going to question Marx's definition of communism, which has been universally accepted by all Communists and which has been fully established in Russia.

Why has the Dies committee left out of its report even a hint at a true definition of communism? Is it because of fear it would expose the really dangerous forces of communism in our country? Communism being the abolition of private property, why is the report so silent about the program of the United States Housing Authority, which has under way the abolition of between twenty and forty billion dollars' worth of private property—and our homes at that, the most sacred physical possession of the family—and its absorption into the Federal Government?

Why is the committee's report silent about the Tennessee Valley Authority, which is the abolishment of hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of private property and its ownership taken over by the Federal Government?

I challenge the Dies committee to show that these are not communistic programs.

Furthermore, one of the basic principles of communism, so stated by Karl Marx as well as all other communistic writers and as carried out in practice by Russia, is the prohibition against the use of money of intrinsic value. I challenge the Dies committee to show that the irredeemable paper money the United States is now on is not, at bottom, the same as that which is used in Russia, that it is not the communistic money advocated by Karl Marx.

If I vote for this measure it will be principally because I am hopeful that its work may arouse the people of the country to a consideration as to what communism really is. If they do give it this consideration, they will see that the real danger of communism is from within not from without. They will see that we are now, ourselves, on communistic money. They will see that the T. V. A., the U. S. H. A., the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and a great many other of the programs adopted by the Federal Government in the last few years are communistic.

They will see that the real promoters of communism in this country do not live in dark, subterranean haunts of illicit intrigue but that they live in marble palaces and other respectable places.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I cannot conceive of anyone, other than those who may be interested in or exposed by and through association with Fascist and Communist organizations, objecting to a thorough investigation into the activities of subversive groups by a congressional committee. This is essentially what I find in the following letter just received from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

We can protect ourselves, as European peoples did not, if we know who and what is undermining and attacking our representative governmental structure. Those who are with us need fear nothing, those who are against us ought to be exposed, is another statement which is obviously fundamental. Read the whole letter and note that there is no quibbling or pussyfooting as to where a large part of organized labor stands on Americanism:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1940.

HON. JOHN G. ALEXANDER,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The convention of the American Federation of Labor which was held at Cincinnati, Ohio, recently, expressed approval of the work which the Dies congressional committee has performed, and of its continuation of the investigation which it is making into the activities of subversive groups within the United States.

In conformity with this action taken by the highest authority within the American Federation of Labor, I am officially requesting that you support such proposal as may be submitted to Congress, providing for the continuation of the Dies committee, and of an appropriation sufficient to enable it to carry on its investigations.

I cannot conceive of anyone, other than those who may be exposed through association with Communist organizations and Communist front organizations, objecting to a thorough investigation into the activities of subversive groups by a congressional committee. Those who have no sympathy with these un-American groups, these subversive forces within our social order, who are constantly seeking to change our form of government and to promote revolution, can with perfect propriety give wholehearted support to the work of the Dies committee, and to the investigation it has made and which it can continue to make.

The people of our country are entitled to know the truth. We of the American Federation of Labor want them to know the facts. We want those who are undermining our form of government and those who are engaged in subversive activities to be exposed. Ridicule, denunciation, and sarcasm, all directed toward the Dies committee by those who seek to suppress its activities and prevent it from carrying on its important work, can only be looked upon with suspicion. We cannot permit those who engage in such tactics to prevent a thorough investigation and a public exposure of the actions and of the activities of individuals and groups who are engaged in un-American activities, and who are seeking either directly or indirectly the overthrow of our Government.

The preservation of freedom and democracy is a matter of vital concern to all those who believe in our form of government. We can protect ourselves if we know who and what it is that is undermining and attacking our governmental structure. Those who are with us need not fear, those who are against us ought to be exposed. The Dies committee is rendering a great public service. It should be continued until its investigation is completed.

I urge you to support the Dies committee. I appeal to you to vote for an appropriation which will adequately equip the Dies committee to complete the excellent, splendid work which it has thus far carried on.

Sincerely yours,

WM. GREEN,

President, American Federation of Labor.

On page 18 of the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I inserted a definition of Americanism. As a guide to all parties interested in this question now under debate and to the members of the Dies committee, I again repeat:

Americanism is an abiding faith in the correctness and justice of the principles contained in the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the Bill of Rights.

Americanism is a way of life, based on this abiding faith. It is a willingness to live in peace and harmony with our fellow men, regardless of political or religious faith.

Americanism is a willingness to apply the principles of free speech, free press, and freedom to worship God to our fellow men, even when their ideas and speech and methods of worship are opposed to our own.

Americanism is a willingness to live for the principles of America in peacetimes, as well as a willingness to die for American principles in wartimes.

Americanism brings to each American liberty under law, and a regard for law which means liberty and happiness for each of us.

If this is a fair statement of Americanism, and I believe it is, then let each and every one of us adopt it as our program and practice it in our everyday lives. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, despite the unnecessary and unwarranted sensations sought by the chairman of the committee, for his personal publicity, I am in favor of the continuation of the Dies committee investigation.

It cannot be denied that the work of the committee in exposing the activities of organizations in our country which seek to undermine American institutions has been of the greatest value. It has aroused our people to a complete awareness of the forces hostile to our democracy. It has united us in defense of the things we cherish in our land. The work of bringing darkness into the light has not yet been completed. The Dies committee gives promise of doing its job more effectively than any other organization in our country. I know that I speak for thousands of Americans in my desire to see that job completed. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities since the creation of the committee, I most heartily recommend to the Members of the House its continuation. We have had a rather tough assignment, that of investigating un-American activities, especially because, at the time the committee was created, there were several distinct groups of that type, each competing with the other. There were the Fascists, the Nazis, and the Communists. It was strange to me that when we were investigating the Nazis we got great applause from the Communists, but when we were investigating the Communists we were accused of infringing on the right of free speech. That is the attitude the Communists took.

The Communist Party of the United States is a branch of the Comintern of Moscow, from which organization it gets its orders, and it obeys those orders. Mr. Browder, general secretary of the Communist Party in the United States, who was sentenced yesterday to 4 years in the penitentiary, is being sentenced because of evidence developed by the Dies committee about his fraudulent use of passports and the manner in which he obtained these passports.

I believe the committee has done a splendid job. This Nation is a nation of joiners, largely. We like to join organizations with patriotic names, at times not realizing that the real purposes of those organizations are quite the reverse of patriotic. This deception has been going on in this country for years, and millions of our citizens have joined such organizations. The moneys they have contributed have been used by foreign agents to spread propaganda throughout the country.

Something has been said about dissension in the committee. There has been some dissension in the committee, but I have yet to see any member of the Dies committee who failed to continue investigation of any subversive group after his attention had been drawn to it. We have been unanimous on everything except, at times, procedure. There is much more for the committee to do. It would be shortsightedness and the sheerest folly, I feel, not to continue its work. That is all the resolution before the House provides—that the Special Committee on Un-American Activities shall bring to a successful conclusion the work it has begun, to the end that there shall not remain in this Nation a vestige of the threat that has existed through these subversive activities.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. HOBBS. I appreciate the gentleman's comment on the suggestion of the gentleman from California [Mr. Voorhis] with regard to certain rules of procedure.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have been in favor of regulation, but it must be by the committee itself.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. In view of the remarks placed in the RECORD yesterday by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook], which very vigorously attacked the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] and his committee, can the gentleman not tell the House here and now, as a member of that committee, that the Dies committee has done everything possible to apprehend this man Pelley and bring him before it?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The committee has not only had its own investigators seeking Mr. Pelley—and he is a fugitive from justice from the State of North Carolina—but has appealed to the Department of Justice to try to locate him. I want to say about Mr. Pelley that he is a cheap, slimy, gutter racketeer of the worst type. I have never said an unkind word about a Member of Congress on the floor and I never expect to, but I am afraid that when the gentleman from Michigan yesterday gave as his authority that reprehensible person, Mr. Pelley, he did not have the information he should have had before using him as an authority. Mr. Pelley has condemned the President of the United States for taking moneys contributed to the victims of infantile paralysis, and he has attacked everybody who has tried to do a decent thing in this country.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The chairman of the gentleman's committee about 3 weeks ago made public a certain statement, which appeared in the press. I want to know whether the committee acquiesced in that statement or agree with the chairman of the committee in his statement that if the power is given to him under this resolution he will deport 7,000,000 people from this country. Has the gentleman read that statement, and does the committee approve that kind of a statement?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I did not read it, and if I had read it I would not give credence to it because the committee has no such power.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Such loose statements and press releases disturb the people of the country.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I cannot be responsible for that.

Mr. FISH. I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, it is a strange thing that each time we investigate and bring information to this House, especially about the Communists, so many persons in the House are disturbed. [Applause.] Let me say that my hatred for these alien "isms" is so great that it was only because of that feeling, and not because of any wish to shield the real believers in them—for I believe the un-American "isms" are the most despicable of all beliefs—that I took the attitude I did with reference to the publication of the names of Government employees who were on the mailing list of the League for Peace and Democracy, an organization which I know to be a front organization for the Communist Party. I believe we should exercise the greatest care not to connect innocent persons with membership in such organizations.

We are a committee having immunity. We can say anything we please about people, and they have no recourse. This being the situation, we should be more than ordinarily careful about our statements. I wish to say, however, that the committee members were unanimous on their report. There may be some errors in the report, and I am inclined to agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] and the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] about the electrical union; but the committee members were unanimous on the report and are unanimously in favor of a continuation of the life of this committee. We have on this committee liberals, middle-of-the-roads, and conservatives, as we should have on such a committee. I defy any Member of this body to point to a single committee that has ever been appointed by the Congress that has done greater good for the people of this Nation on a similar expenditure than has the Dies committee. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. How about the McCormack committee? [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, it has been reported to me, and I believe reliably, that the red flag of Soviet Russia and the swastika of Nazi Germany have flown over secret meetings in the valleys and canyons of my district.

These statements have been made to me from time to time by individual citizens, most of whom have been members of patriotic organizations such as the American Legion, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and others.

There is no law that I know of to prevent the flying of foreign colors in the United States, but on the contrary there is freedom to do so, and on numerous patriotic occasions flags of all nations have been flown side by side with the Stars and Stripes.

But, Mr. Speaker, it cannot be denied that on the occasions referred to and at these secret meetings the general purpose of the occasion was not to promote good will between the United States and these totalitarian states but on the contrary to promote the organization of groups of American citizens devoted to the overthrow of our American form of government and the establishment of new governments under the domination either in principle or in fact by these foreign states.

It is a generally known fact in my district in California that while certain Nazi and Fascist activities are in existence there, that the largest activity by far is the International Socialist, better known as the Communist movement. The Communist Party of America is established and has the privilege in California of placing candidates upon the ballot. The Communist registration is not large in my district, but numbers about 1,000. However, I have reason to believe that there are much larger numbers of International Socialists, fellow travelers of the Soviet Socialists, who participate in political activities disguised under other party labels.

Mr. Speaker, I do not quarrel with people who cherish political views differing from my own but on the contrary I shall maintain their right to express their views so long as I may be able, in spite of the fact that experience elsewhere teaches us that were the situation reversed and these people in full control that my expression of my own views then would probably be not tolerated. These people cry out for and are freely granted the very rights that they deny others when they attain to full power. But that is not my concern at the moment. The thing that does concern me and millions of others like me of all American political shades is the fact that many of these people are engaged in fomenting trouble and violence, in obstructing wherever possible the flow of commerce and employment, in promoting the allegiance of our people to foreign ideologies and to foreign institutions whose objectives are world revolution and dictatorship.

Now Mr. Speaker, I offer the following letter for the RECORD. It is addressed to me by the Democratic Club of Glendale, Calif., a city of 80,000 population in my district.

I quote as follows:

GLENDALE, CALIF., December 27, 1939.

HON. CARL HINSHAW,
Representative, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HINSHAW: At the regular monthly meeting of the Democratic Club of Glendale, a motion was unanimously adopted to discontinue the Dies committee.

We trust that you will feel as we do, that the Attorney General's Department is adequately equipped to investigate subversive activities, and that the Dies committee is an additional expense which the country cannot afford at this time.

Please vote "yes" to discontinue the Dies committee.

Very truly yours,

RUTH M. FRABLE,
Secretary, Democratic Club of Glendale.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Democratic Club in Glendale, Calif., is in error when they state that the Attorney General's Department is adequately equipped to investigate subversive activities. The Attorney General has manifold duties to perform in connection with enforcing the laws on the statute books of the United States, in combating espionage and other like acts against the United States. The duties and authority of the Attorney General and the Department of Justice are well stated in the United States Government Manual of October 1939. To adequately staff the office of the Attorney General and the Federal Bureau of Investigation for investigating subversive activities of all kinds would be, in my judgment, at this time against public policy, as it could easily lead to the establishment of a political secret police on a permanent basis that could be the equivalent of the Nazi Gestapo or the Soviet OGPU, which God forbid.

The purpose of the Dies committee is not to establish a secret political police but to expose to the strong light of public inquiry the propaganda, the activities, and the active membership of un-American organizations, to expose their subversive principles to public analysis, and to establish the fact of their connection with foreign-born international revolutionary movements, all as a basis for such legislation as the Congress may deem advisable for the proper protection of the Government and the people of the United States. The Attorney General is not charged with conducting public inquiry of this sort; but, on the contrary, his investigations and reports are generally quite secret. The Attorney General is bound to report only to the Executive and his staff. He may conduct only such investigations as are authorized by law and directed by the Executive. It would be proper for the Attorney General, through the Executive, to proffer the services of members of his Department in aid to this special committee of the Congress; but to date, as reported by the Dies committee, no such offer of aid has been extended.

In view of the facts and the circumstances, I feel that the Dies committee's authority should be renewed and an adequate appropriation of funds granted. As I have stated before, however, I do feel that the Dies committee might well adopt such rules for its own conduct as have been recommended by my colleague from California [Mr. VOORHIS], a member of that committee, in his address earlier this afternoon. It is especially important that innocent joiners of organizations fostered by and aided and abetted by alien enemies to our great Republic shall be protected from being branded by virtue of their mistaken enthusiasm. But it is equally important that they find out quickly that they are being made tools of alien objectives or philosophies. I shall vote "aye" on the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include certain letters and communications.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received this mimeograph copy of a speech which says at the top "Speech of Congressman FRANK HOOK, of Michigan, prepared for delivery Monday p. m., January 22, 1940, on the House floor."

Evidently, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] was precluded from delivering it upon the floor due to the early adjournment of the Congress Monday, but it appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under Extension of Remarks.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just one statement?

Mr. KEEFE. In just a moment, please.

Perhaps, being under Extension of Remarks, some privilege may be given to the gentleman from Michigan that he might not be accorded had he stood here in the Well of the House and made the attack which he makes in this speech upon the character and the integrity of the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, the chairman of this committee.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. Just a minute, please. You will have your opportunity.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. In just a moment—I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will yield you my 1 minute.

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Just to make the announcement that as soon as the debate has concluded and the rules permit I shall rise to a question of privilege of the House and ask to have the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] expunged from the RECORD.

Mr. KEEFE. It seems to me that action would be justified. It further seems to me that when this important matter is up for discussion that it is strange that a Member of this House should so violently attack a colleague, especially one on his own side. I do not know the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, intimately, being a new Member here, but I would not dare, upon the flimsy facts that are set forth in this statement, under my oath as a Member of this House, give utterance to the things that are set forth in this speech.

I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] where he got this information. I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan who wrote his speech for him.

Mr. HOOK. I wrote that speech.

Mr. KEEFE. All right; I want to ask you where you got your information.

Mr. HOOK. That is none of your business, but it is placed in the Department of Justice now and it is authentic.

Mr. KEEFE. Just let me show you what happened, if you have not read this thing.

Mr. HOOK. If you want some more information I will give it to you.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman, I assume, is a lawyer. I read his biography in the book here and it said he graduated from Valparaiso University, college of law, and I assume he is a lawyer.

Now, I ask any Member of this House who is a lawyer to turn to page 9 of this speech and read the factual information which is presented as an indictment of the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, in an effort to show that he is connected with the Christian Front organization or that he is connected with a Mr. Pelley or with Pelley Publications. There appears a series of letters which the gentleman says he has photographic copies of, which he offers as evidence as letter and admissions of the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. No.

Letters which appear to have been written by this man Pelley to a stool pigeon of Pelley's here in the city of Washington, by which Mr. Pelley himself builds up a case in this correspondence of self-protection against the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. KEEFE. I do not yield, Mr. Speaker.

This is a series of letters, written by Pelley to a stool pigeon of Pelley's in Washington, which the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, had no part in and could not know anything about, and yet the gentleman produces these letters as indicating that the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, is a party to a conspiracy with Pelley in connection with his subversive and un-American activities in this Nation.

I am simply astounded and surprised to think that anybody would impose upon the intelligence of lawyers, especially, and ask them to accept that as an indictment based upon facts. There is not a word in it but what would be excluded by any court, because at best they are mere self-serving declarations of Mr. Pelley himself in trying to build up a case for himself. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I shall support the resolution. My service in the Congress has demonstrated to me at least one thing that is exceedingly clear, namely, that un-American and subversive groups are so ruthlessly determined to project their foreign ideologies in America that any citizen or any Member of Congress who dares to expose and defy them immediately subjects himself to a campaign of vilification, slander, or libel, and immediately he is pointed out as a reactionary or a Fascist.

In view of this situation, it is indeed refreshing to note that an overwhelming majority in this House and an overwhelming majority of the people throughout the country demand that the spotlight of publicity be turned upon these smear artists and character assassins to the end that the public may know the full extent and purposes of their various subversive activities.

The continuation of the Dies committee has been challenged by various groups of so-called liberals, who are pleased to point to the constitutional guaranties of free speech, assembly, and so forth, and under the specious plea that the Dies committee in the performance of its solemn duties threatens the fundamentals of the Bill of Rights, its work should be curtailed or stopped.

Let it be noted the source from which this clamor comes.

I am certain that such an examination will disclose that it comes, not from those sincerely interested in the protection of our constitutional liberties, but that in most cases it is inspired by those who owe allegiance, secretly or otherwise, to some foreign government or some foreign ideology.

I can see a clear line of distinction between those groups that owe fealty and loyalty to our Government, but who demand the right to advocate change in our social and political structure, and those groups or individuals who claim the benefits and protection afforded by our Constitution and yet who secretly have taken an oath to support and defend some foreign dictator should the occasion arise.

I will defend the right of any group or any American citizen inspired by liberality of thought and progressive action to belong to any political party or to express any doctrine compatible with our democracy, because I believe that as time marches on, change in our social structure is inevitable, and that the Constitution is flexible enough to permit such change as may be necessary in the public interest in accordance with constitutional procedure.

I applaud those great liberals of the past who have, within the provisions of our law, advocated great social changes which have come to be recognized today as the law of the land. However, as I scan the record of the past I find not one of those great leaders of social and economic progress who owed secret allegiance to any nation other than the United States.

Many were thoroughly criticized because of the advocacy of change, but the march of progress under our system of government could not, and cannot be denied, and we have as a nation accepted many departures from the old order of things in the public interest. The difficulty today, however, is that we find many fake liberals who, with secret contempt in their hearts for our system of government, pose as liberals in order to more effectively promote the ideologies of Stalin and Hitler. The Communist who has wormed his way to a large extent into our social and economic structure, owes no allegiance to the country that guarantees to him the right of free speech and free press, but clothed with the mantle of protection afforded by our Constitution he works energetically at all times to secretly and covertly destroy the very government that guarantees those liberties.

I, for one at least, believe the time is here now, when those who assemble in Madison Square Garden or any other place under orders from Stalin or Hitler should be told in no uncertain terms that the mantle of free speech and free assembly can no longer be used as a cloak and a protection to those determined to destroy our form of government.

Nikolay Lenin, the dean of communism, once wrote, "Scratch a liberal and you find a reactionary." I am convinced that the true mark of all American liberals is to be called reactionary by the sons of Stalin.

I shall never vote to suppress or curb the right of any citizen to express his judgment or opinion on a political, social, or economic problem, because I have a right to assume that if the test ever comes between a revolutionary program of a Stalinite or a Hitlerite, and the orderly processes of change under our system of government such a citizen, no matter how radical he may be, would stand firm for the protection of our constitutional form of government.

However, I can no longer countenance alien or citizen agitators or groups who owe secret allegiance to Moscow or Berlin, and who have sworn that in the event of trouble between this democracy and the Soviet or Nazi Governments in Europe they will defend the Nazi or Soviet Governments, being permitted to continue their efforts to break down our form of government by force and violence and to substitute another type of government to which they have secretly or openly sworn allegiance.

The Dies committee has done commendable work in exposing to the people of this Nation such individuals and groups, and it is refreshing, indeed, to note how the Stalinites, Hitlerites, and other foreignites squeal and clamor when the pitiless light of publicity is turned upon them. I, for one, want this work to continue in the orderly manner that it has been conducted in the recent investigation because I know that the spotlight of publicity turned on these groups will disclose them ultimately to be as impotent as the alleged colossus of Stalin which has, up to date, been so badly defeated by the small but inspired and courageous army of Finland.

My colleagues, in this crisis there is every reason in the world to continue this investigation. We will not be deterred by the spurious plea that the Bill of Rights is being trampled upon, or that liberal thought is being suppressed, but we will send the message out to the world that 130,000,000 people love their country and do not intend to have it imperiled or destroyed by a comparatively few disciples of Hitler or Stalin.

We are subject to the plea today, "Defend America. Spend for naval defense. Enlarge our Army. Enlarge our Navy. Build more airplanes, more guns, more implements of war"; and, although I know that the Government is aware of the activities of foreign agents and saboteurs in our midst, I want this Congress and this Nation to know that national defense involves more than the mere military or naval safeguarding of our shores. Impregnable though we may be from invasion, the most self-assured citizen must admit that our far-flung industries throughout the Nation are extremely vulnerable to the attack of foreign agents seeking to break down and destroy our great industries.

I am not an alarmist when I say this because Federal grand juries throughout the land and reports of the Federal Bureau of Investigation clearly disclose that these agents of foreign powers are carrying on their work here in America every day.

I want to call the attention of the Congress to what I conceive to be the most vital and at the same time the most vulnerable link in our national defense. I direct your attention to the Great Lakes and inland-waterways transport system of this Nation. The immensity of this transport system and its relation to the industrial system of the Nation is scarcely realized by the people of this Nation.

On the Great Lakes alone there are 568 American ships, of 2,596,564 gross tons, serving American and Canadian ports. The three main cargoes of the Lakes are coal, ore, and grain. In 1938 ships plying the Lakes carried 40,368,121 net tons of coal, 50,481,451 net tons of iron ore, and 11,172,079 net tons of grain. A total of 114,229,856 tons of cargo of all sorts was carried. Add to this, if you will, the gross tonnage carried on the other inland waterways through barge lines, and so forth, and the importance of maintaining this uninterrupted flow of commerce is immediately clear.

Our excellent railroad systems, together with our great highway systems, with their autotruck transportation, could not cope with the increased traffic if for any reason lake and waterway transportation were stopped.

The great steel mills depend upon the carriers of the Great Lakes to build the ore reserves in their yards to insure a sufficient ore supply. The railroads alone are not able to handle a sufficient tonnage of ore to supply the normal operation of the steel mills. In Buffalo the greatest grain elevators in the world are filled with the grain of the West, brought there in the great grain-carrying ships of the Lakes. The harbors of Duluth, Superior, Milwaukee, Chicago, Toledo, Buffalo, and of all other Great Lakes ports, are equipped with the most modern machinery and freight-handling devices—equipment upon which depends the successful operation of the entire Lakes commerce and a great portion of the Nation's steel and allied industries.

Stop this flow of commerce on the Lakes and industry throughout the country would be paralyzed. It is the vulnerability of this part of the commerce to attack that I wish to direct your attention to. I do not anticipate an attack by submarines, battle cruisers, or airplanes, but I have concluded an investigation which leads me to the conclusion that it will come as a result of well-laid plans of foreign agents and saboteurs who for a period of some 10 years under instructions from Moscow have been working indefatigably on a plan that would permit the sabotage of industry in this country through the strike medium destined to tie up the commerce and shipping upon the Great Lakes.

Wage and living standards of the crews of the Lakes steamers have always, even during the worst business years, been higher than the salt-water scales of the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts. Serious labor difficulties have been rare. The American Federation of Labor maintained its Lakes maritime organization during the lean years between 1921 and 1934. Annual agreements were entered into between the union and certain employers throughout these years and a mutual respect was established.

Many of the Lakes seamen were members of the Independent Lake Carriers Association. The allied Lakes crafts—stevedores, grain scoopers, ore handlers, warehousemen, tugboatmen, and so forth—have also enjoyed a comparatively high wage scale and have been singularly free of wage disputes of a lengthy or violent nature. They were largely organized in the International Longshoremen's Association of the American Federation of Labor, or in organizations affiliated to the I. L. A. and A. F. of L. Great credit for the establishment and conduct of these responsible organizations is due to the late T. V. O'Connor, formerly president of the I. L. A., and later Chairman of the United States Shipping Board, and to Joseph P. Ryan, present president of the I. L. A.

There is no doubt that foreign agents have for years schemed and planned ways and means to paralyze lake traffic and sabotage the vast industrial network dependent upon that traffic. In 1930 agents of at least one foreign power definitely embarked upon a campaign the results of which constitute an imminent menace to the successful operation of the Lakes commerce and the steel industry.

In the early spring of 1930 Communist saboteurs dispatched selected organizers to various ports on the Great Lakes. Many of these were identified by testimony given to the Dies committee. The first task of these organizers was to make a survey of ships, docks, steel mills, and basic industries, compiling a list of all persons sympathetic to the Communist Party and the Soviet Union. This work went on from 1930 to 1934 under the guise of the Marine Workers Industrial Union, which was then being maintained by a direct subsidy from the Communist Party. This organization participated in all strikes, including the Curtiss and Consolidated Aircraft strike in Buffalo in 1934. They were active in the steel industries also, assisting in the organizing campaign of the Trade Union Unity League.

At the close of the 1934 Lakes season the Marine Workers Industrial Union, its membership largely recruited by Communist organizers, disintegrated. However, the Communists remained on the Lakes and were taken over by the organization known as the National Maritime Union. Organized efforts were extended to the Mississippi and tributary rivers and under recognized Communist leadership membership was recruited for the National Maritime Union among employees of the Federal Barge Lines and independent operators.

At the present time I am advised that the National Maritime Union is conducting an active campaign on the Great Lakes and upon the inland waterways in the recruiting of new strength for the purpose of so controlling this vast commerce that a strike would effectively sabotage the entire industries of the East and Middle West.

I want to emphasize to the Congress that the operation of the inland waterways, rivers, canals, and the Great Lakes, while vital in normal times, is absolutely indispensable in critical times. The Communist organizers serving their foreign masters have made an investment for 10 years in their attempt to control this vital industry, and if I know the activities of Communist organizers, as conducted in the past, I know that they do not intend to lose this investment without a struggle. They do not intend to call a strike in the interests of the workers, but if and when one is called, it will be because of their desire to stop the flow of munitions abroad, to sabotage our steel mills and our Navy program, and to bring about discord and strife in the Nation, so as to provide a more fertile field in which to spread their Communist propaganda.

If such a strike is called, it will be a "rule or ruin" policy, with complete control of the Great Lakes commerce in the hands of the Communist element in charge of the leadership of the National Maritime Union. My investigation discloses that while the organizing work appears on the surface to be merely another organizing campaign of the C. I. O. National Maritime Union, yet the real object and purpose is not to better the conditions of the Lakes seamen but to carry out a plan of sabotage long ago conceived by the fertile brains of the Communist masters in Moscow. Ten years of work by un-American agents are culminating in this effort, and the plans are part and parcel of the Communist political campaign in this Nation in 1940.

A mere glance at any recent issue of the Daily Worker, the official mouthpiece of the Communist Party, is proof conclusive of this. A strike in the Lakes this year with the ore stock pile reserves at low ebb would so curtail steel production that even the normal domestic demands could not be met. Foreign orders would have to be canceled. The naval and merchant-marine building program would be stopped or drastically curtailed, and if it spread into the steel industry with many shifts laid off because of an inadequate ore supply, I can envision chaos resulting, with Mr. Stalin chuckling over the handiwork of his puppets.

Responsible labor leaders in both the C. I. O. and A. F. of L. are opposed to a recurrence of the 1933-36 strike wave. The general membership of the unions is also opposed to it. Strike hysteria, however, is harder to stop than a forest fire, and a strike precipitated on the Great Lakes would inevitably bring vast unemployment in its wake, and unemployed workers are easy victims of the skilled Communist propagandists who have crept into the leadership and control of the National Maritime and certain other American unions.

Under the cloak of strike action these Communist strike agitators would be able to strike their blows at American industry. In 1934 the Daily Worker admitted the long-range plans of the Communist Party in a feature article which described the Great Lakes as "the most important link in the American war industries." The conclusion was that the organization of the Lakes was a major Communist objective.

Today the Daily Worker is accusing the United States of America of plotting an imperialist war against the U. S. S. R. The President even is accused of starving American unemployed to build battleships. The long-haired boys and the short-haired girls are on their soap boxes every night yelling, "We want bread, not bullets." The old propaganda machine that organized the unemployed demonstrations, the hunger marches, the relief-station riots, and the hysterical disorders starting March 6, 1930, and lasting 4 straight years, is in progress of operation again. The real issues mean nothing to these propagandists. Hunger, misery, strikes, riots, unemployment, and crises are their weapons.

The Communist Party is directing precisely the same attack at President Roosevelt in 1940 as they did at President Hoover in 1931. The slogans, the banners, the speeches, and the petitions are practically the same. Skip the pitiful stories of the Finnish colossus attacking poor, defenseless Russia, and the rest of the Daily Worker in 1940 would appear identical with its 1931 program.

What are we going to do about it? I have always glorified in the liberal traditions of America. Certainly the men and women of America have the right to be either radical or conservative as their members may choose. Certainly they have the right to conduct their campaigns even if the objective of these campaigns is wrong, so long as they keep within the bounds of law and order and the fundamentals of our system of government. This is America, and an American citizen has a right to advocate the principles of communism if he so desires, provided that in his advocacy he is doing so because of his interest in the welfare of America.

The Communist saboteurs who worm their way into the National Maritime Union and any other great organization of liberals are not motivated by a desire to help the oppressed laboring man and to restore equality of opportunity and better working conditions, but in reality are using these slogans to capture the sympathy of the workingman in order to carry out their secret orders delivered direct from Moscow.

I believe it is time that we look this issue square in the face, and the time is not far distant when an aroused

American people will demand that action be taken. That demand is here now and has gradually been spread throughout the length and breadth of this land until even the long-haired Communist and the rotund "Bundist" has been driven to cover.

We can and will protect our democracy. We can and will protect our economy against the sabotage of Mr. Stalin and his puppets. We can and will expose those in our midst who are parties to the great conspiracy against America. We can and will continue to go forward with orderly processes and maintain our system of government, which, despite all of its traducers, continues to represent freedom and liberty, not only to 130,000,000 people fortunate enough to be here, but to countless millions of oppressed minorities throughout the world.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin made some charges as an attorney. The gentleman knows that the evidence collected by the Dies committee is not restrained or bound by the rules of evidence and are protected by immunity for any remarks they make as members thereof, and further protected from criticism; a vicious rule, in my opinion.

Let us go to the remarks made by my friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Allen] where he mentioned that there were thousands of Communists on the Government pay roll. I yield to any member of the Dies committee at this time to name me one Communist on the Government pay roll that they could have justly named in their report, excepting the investigator of their own committee. I hear none.

Let me refer now to a speech that was given by our colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] when he said over the air over a national broadcast something about a famous list, referring to the list of the Pelley publications, about which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] referred when he said, "When the mailing list of the William Dudley Pelley Silver Shirts was spread on the record there was no charge of 'sordid procedure.'"

I yield now to the members of the Dies committee to show me any such list placed in the record. There was no such list. But there was a list of names published smearing innocent people with a "red" tinge. Never a Fascist list. My colleague either did not know what the record of his committee contained or was very much wrong in making this statement.

What kind of reports are we getting? I have asked the Attorney General of this United States, based on the evidence that is in my possession, to make a full and complete investigation of un-American activities. I have always felt that the founding fathers of this Nation intended the legislative, executive, and judicial arms of the Government to have specific and separate functions, designated not to encroach upon each other. The biggest stumbling block to communism today is the fight that is being made by that noble little country, Finland. If we would vote aid to her, we would stop communism from further spreading in this Nation. They are really fighting communism—not shadow boxing with it.

Yes. Did any of the patriotic gentlemen who would decry my stand in this matter disagree with me when I was the first one to stand on the floor of this House and oppose in no uncertain terms the unlawful and un-American sit-down strikes? Did they disagree with me when I voted against the antilynching bill? Did they disagree with me when I have talked and talked against communism and fascism in every form on the floor of this House?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. Was my sincerity questioned at that time? I decline to yield.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I want to answer the gentleman's first question.

Mr. HOOK. I decline to yield. Did they question my sincerity then? I believe in the investigation of all un-American activities. The first three words of the Constitution of the United States are "We, the people." I want "We, the people" to be represented so that all un-American activities will be taken into consideration. Many Members of this House come here by the vote of less than 5 percent of the population of their district. Is it un-American to keep people from voting because of intelligence tests, poll tax, and race, color, or creed?

Is the Ku Klux Klan an un-American body? I do not know. I think it is, but I know that the Dies committee has never touched that.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HOOK. I do not.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Michigan challenged any Member of the Dies committee to answer a certain question and I am prepared to answer the question.

Mr. HOOK. Get your time and do it.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled. The gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. Many members of the Dies committee and others come now to the floor of this House and assure us that the same tactics that were used in the last year will not be used again.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentlemen 1 additional minute.

Mr. HOOK. I wish we had a recording of the talks that were given here the last time the committee was extended. The very same promises were made. Those promises were broken. Are we going to pass legislation over broken promises? Five hundred thousand people signed a petition, according to the gentleman from Michigan; but there are 131,000,000 people in this United States. Ninety-nine majority believe in curbing and destroying un-American activities, but believe in doing it without blaspheming innocent people. I compliment J. Edgar Hoover, Attorney General Jackson, and others in their fine work in doing just that in the American way.

I want to pay my respects to the former committees that investigated un-American activities, for the gentlemanly manner in which they conducted them. I believe the procedure that was suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. Voorhis], a member of the committee, should be followed. It is the same procedure that is followed by the Monopoly Committee investigating monopolies here. That is a gentlemanly committee and doing a wonderful work. I wish I could vote for this resolution but it is my opinion this work is the duty of the Department of Justice. So I cannot, under the circumstances, vote for a continuation of this committee. [Applause.]

At this point I offer the statement issued by the Attorney General of the United States, Hon. Robert H. Jackson, issued on January 21, 1940:

I am today instructing United States Attorney Kennedy at Brooklyn as to the scope of the grand jury investigation of the charge of sedition and other offenses, made by the Federal Bureau of Investigation under the direction of J. Edgar Hoover against the 17 Christian Front defendants in proceedings instituted by my predecessor, Frank Murphy. This investigation will include examination of the activities of any individual or group, wherever located, who may have aided, abetted, directed, financed, or incited these particular defendants or any other subversive group working for similar unlawful ends.

Out of this investigation should come a clear identification of any person or groups who have provoked or financed or otherwise conspired with these defendants. They should be held responsible for their conduct if they have violated or induced the violation of any Federal law. If, on the other hand, these defendants have acted independently of any others, the public should be assured of that fact so that there may be no exaggerated anxiety caused by the incident.

In order to expedite the Brooklyn proceedings, I have instructed Assistant Attorney Oetje John Rogge, Chief of the Criminal Division, and members of his staff who have been in charge of cases involving subversive groups elsewhere in the United States, to go to New York to cooperate with United States Attorney Kennedy, and have asked United States Attorneys John T. Cahill, of New York, and William J. Campbell, of Chicago, to cooperate by furnishing all helpful evidence in their possession. These instructions do not constitute an accusation against any person involved but only call for a thorough-going inquiry in accordance with our traditional grand-jury system.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 7 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee at the outset of this debate said that the American Legion was in sympathy with the Republican Party.

Mr. SABATH. I said the officers.

Mr. FISH. That the officers of the American Legion were in sympathy with the Republican Party. The gentleman and every Member of this House know that the American Legion is a nonpartisan organization, composed of Republicans and Democrats alike, united, however, in their determination to expose and stamp out all Communist, Nazi, and Fascist propaganda in the United States of America. [Applause.] But if the American Legion is in sympathy with the Republican Party on this issue or any other issue, I, for one, welcome the support of that patriotic organization.

The American Legion is not the only great patriotic or national organization in America that has endorsed the Dies committee. The American Federation of Labor has likewise given its unanimous and enthusiastic support to the Dies committee, its achievements, and to the report submitted by that committee.

The following letter, I assume, was sent to all Members of the House by Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1940.

HON. HAMILTON FISH,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The convention of the American Federation of Labor which was held at Cincinnati, Ohio, recently, expressed approval of the work which the Dies congressional committee has performed and of its continuation of the investigation which it is making into the activities of subversive groups within the United States.

In conformity with this action taken by the highest authority within the American Federation of Labor, I am officially requesting that you support such proposal as may be submitted to Congress, providing for the continuation of the Dies committee and of an appropriation sufficient to enable it to carry on its investigations.

I cannot conceive of anyone, other than those who may be exposed through association with Communist organizations, and Communist front organizations, objecting to a thorough investigation into the activities of subversive groups by a congressional committee. Those who have no sympathy with these un-American groups, these subversive forces within our social order, who are constantly seeking to change our form of government and to promote revolution, can with perfect propriety give wholehearted support to the work of the Dies committee, and to the investigation it has made and which it can continue to make.

The people of our country are entitled to know the truth. We of the American Federation of Labor want them to know the facts. We want those who are undermining our form of government and those who are engaged in subversive activities to be exposed. Ridicule, denunciation, and sarcasm, all directed toward the Dies committee by those who seek to suppress its activities and prevent it from carrying on its important work, can only be looked upon with suspicion. We cannot permit those who engage in such tactics to prevent a thorough investigation and a public exposure of the actions and of the activities of individuals and groups who are engaged in un-American activities, and who are seeking either directly or indirectly the overthrow of our Government.

The preservation of freedom and democracy is a matter of vital concern to all those who believe in our form of government. We can protect ourselves if we know who and what it is that is undermining and attacking our governmental structure. Those who are with us need not fear, those who are against us ought to be exposed. The Dies committee is rendering a great public service. It should be continued until its investigation is completed.

I urge you to support the Dies committee. I appeal to you to vote for an appropriation which will adequately equip the Dies committee to complete the excellent, splendid work which it has thus far carried on.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] will venture to say that the American Federation of Labor or its officers are completely in sympathy with everything that the Republican Party does. I hope they are. The following telegrams from American Legion posts in my district—and these are only about half of them—show clearly that the Legion is in dead earnest in combating subversive activities. In addition, I received over 200 telegrams from Legion posts throughout New York State.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., January 22, 1940.

HON. HAMILTON FISH,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:
American Legion James C. Bilz Post 685 favors continuance Dies committee. We urge your support.

CHARLES G. CROOPIN,
Post Commander.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., January 22, 1940.

The Honorable HAMILTON FISH:

Urge your support continuance of the Dies investigating committee.

AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY POST 151,
MAE THORNTON, President.

HIGHLAND FALLS, N. Y., January 22, 1940.

HON. HAMILTON FISH,

House of Representatives:
The O'Connor Doyle Post 633, Highland Falls, N. Y., membership 160, insist upon the continuation of the Dies committee.

WILLIAM E. DYROFF,
Commander.

NEWBURGH, N. Y., January 21, 1940.

Representative HAMILTON FISH,

Washington, D. C.:
Galloway Post, American Legion, urges continuation of Dies investigation committee.

WILLIAM BARNETT,
Commander, Galloway Post, American Legion.

NEWBURGH, N. Y., January 21, 1940.

HON. HAMILTON FISH,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:
Urge your vote to continue Dies committee investigation and for appropriation requested for performance of that vitally important mission in present world affairs. We urge continuance of committee regardless of objection by the President, John L. Lewis, or any other of reddish tinge.

HARRY STANBROUGH MONELL,
Commander, Memorial Grove Post 1213, the American Legion.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., January 21, 1940.

HON. HAMILTON FISH,

Washington, D. C.:
Please support the continuance of the Dies investigating committee.

KATHRYN REID,
Dutchess County Chairman of Legislation, American Legion Auxiliary.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., January 20, 1940.

Congressman HAMILTON FISH:

Please act in accordance with Legion resolution favoring Dies committee.

HARRY L. WELCH,
Commander, Dutchess County American Legion.

I take this occasion to deny the remarks made by my friend [Mr. SABATH], the chairman of the committee, that the Rules Committee of this House is antilabor. I cannot, and I do not intend to, speak for the Democratic members. I can speak for some and I believe all of the Republican members. I know that they are not antilabor, and I likewise know that their record in this House proves them to be the friends of labor, and particularly of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. SABATH. I have not made the statement that all of the members are antilabor. Some of them do support the labor organizations.

Mr. FISH. I am speaking for the Republicans; and, of course, not for the Democrats.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] has let his logic run away with his reason when he condemns the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], the chairman of the committee, through association, because a so-called Mr. Pelley, head of the Silver Shirts, writes one of his stool-pigeons here in Washington and mentions Mr. DIES' name. By the same token it would be very easy for me to condemn the President of the United States by association because he wrote letters commending the activities of the American Student Union and the American Youth Congress, as there are Communists in both these groups. By the same logic and the same reasoning, and by reductio ad absurdum, the President of the United States must be a Communist.

That is the main argument the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook] has advanced to denounce the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies], who is unable to answer for himself on account of illness. He has given of his time, of his energy, and of his health to the extent that he is now at home in Texas suffering from the effects of his labors in exposing un-American activities. If he were here to defend himself he would answer those charges directly, as he has from his own State in the press, and deny and repudiate every charge made by the gentleman from Michigan on the floor of this House that would associated him with Mr. Pelley or his group. In addition, Mervin K. Hart, whom I know well, has likewise been charged by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook] with being connected with the Christian Front. In all fairness to Mr. Hart, who is head of the New York State Economic Council and a man of high character, he has publicly denied having any connection, directly or indirectly, with the Christian Front, and has denounced such charges as "an unmitigated lie."

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOOK. Does not the gentleman believe that those were exactly the same tactics that were used by the chairman of the committee to brand others as Communists when they were not?

Mr. FISH. No; I do not believe that. I think, under all the circumstances, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies], and his committee, have rendered the greatest possible service to this country in exposing un-American activities, particularly of the Communists and the Nazis, and not by association but by direct evidence.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I do not yield further. As a result, Fritz Kuhn, of the German-American Bund, is in jail today; and Earl Browder, the head of the Communist Party in America, is likewise in jail for a 4-year term.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3½ minutes additional.

It is not good for the ultimate health of American ostriches to bury their necks in the sand and not know about the spread of un-American activities around them.

I know of no compromise between Americanism and communism. No public official can be half for America and half for Soviet Russia. There is no room for divided allegiance in the United States. The interests of our people and our country come first, last, and all the time. With the aid of the Dies committee, I hope we may be able to drive from the Federal service all communistically minded officeholders and fellow travelers. [Applause.]

The American people will not tolerate any of their money going into the hands of public officials to be used to undermine our free institutions and republican form of Government.

It makes very little difference whether a public official is a member of the Communist Party or a fellow traveler, if his salary goes to spread communism and revolutionary activities in the United States. There is no room for this breed of cats on the American Government's pay roll, and every one of them should be exposed, as Cicero did Cataline, and driven out or dismissed from office and, if not, by the ballots of a free people.

I am convinced that the most important duty of the Dies committee at the present time, with Europe aflame with war and hatred, is to investigate immediately the insidious, dangerous, and un-American activities of foreign warmongers who are spreading poisonous war propaganda in our midst. The Dies committee could do no greater service than to expose, without fear or favor and from whatever source, all foreign agents and propagandists who are trying to inflame our passions and hatreds and to drag us into foreign entanglements and wars.

If these foreign propagandists have not enough decency to mind their own business and let America make its own decisions, then Congress should enact laws to deport all alien war propagandists. We have enough trouble trying to solve our own deplorable economic problems, with 10,000,000 unemployed American citizens, without being made a victim of foreign propaganda and being propagandized into foreign wars.

This Congress should not wait for the final report of the Dies committee, but should enact drastic deportation laws immediately, in order to deport all alien Communist and Nazi agitators back to their native lands, and give their jobs to loyal American citizens now walking the streets.

I am in favor of recalling our American Ambassador from Moscow and severing diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia. We should stop sending notes of protest against the inspired Communist propaganda emanating from Soviet Russia, and instead start sending shiploads of alien agitators back to Stalin with the compliments of the American Congress. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON].

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, not much can be said in 2 minutes.

History repeats itself. Twenty years or more ago a great President, Woodrow Wilson, was in office, and he was assailed just like the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES, is assailing the President of the United States today. A great man, General Bragg, cried out in Chicago at a Democratic national convention one time: "We love Grover Cleveland for the enemies he has made." I view with suspicion the admiration shown the gentleman from Texas, Chairman DIES, by his new-found Republican friends over here and his labor-hating friends on this side of the Chamber. I say to you, this committee should not be continued. I hope there will be manhood enough in this body to write into this bill somewhere the provision that no Member shall collect one dollar of revenue from any newspaper or from any speech that he may make if you authorize the committee's continuance. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I regret that there is not sufficient time in which adequate discussion may be given this very important and very controversial subject. It was deplorable that the Rules Committee did not vouchsafe to the proponents and the opponents of this measure more than 25 minutes during their hearings yesterday, and in the brief time allotted to us on the floor today comprehensive discussion cannot be afforded.

I am going to vote against the continuation of the Dies committee, as I voted against its original creation in 1938, as I voted against it 1 year ago. At the time it was being considered some 2 years ago the former Member from Texas, Mr. Maverick, led the fight against the Dies committee. At that the distinguished prospective chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies], said, in effect, that "We have had witch hunts exposed in the past, and I do not propose that the committee, if placed under my charge, shall be culpable of the practices against which indictments have been justly laid in the past." He predicted that efforts would be made to engage in widespread "red" hunting, but that he would not indulge in it as long as he was chairman of the committee.

WHAT CAUSES EXTREMISM

Mr. Speaker, there are infinitely more important problems confronting the country than the proposition embraced within the functions of the Dies committee. What comfort can be drawn from the spectacle of this House voting to this committee another large sum of money? Surely the unemployed, the indigent, the needy, the evicted, the harassed, the submerged one-third whom the President described as ill-housed and undernourished, can derive no stimulus from this situation. If there are those who wonder at the existence of subversive and extremist organizations let them recall that there are 9,000,000 heads of families still unemployed in America; that we are turning out nearly half a million preparatory school and college graduates every year, yet to whom the door of opportunity is almost shut. If we would overcome un-American activities we must get at and extirpate the cause. One cannot expect to eliminate a volcano's rumblings by clamping a cement cover over the outlet. We may inveigh at groups with whose philosophy we are in diametrical disagreement, continually and persistently, but to do an effective piece of work we should enact legislation the effect of which would be to take away the dread sword of Damocles of insecurity hanging by a tenuous thread over the heads of millions of our citizens today. Remove the curse of unemployment, of hunger, of want, of lack of opportunity, of sickness, of malnutrition, and our problem is settled.

THE SAME OLD PLEA

One year ago the chairman of this committee said: "We want just one more year. We can wind up the work of the committee during that year. Give us $100,000. Let us finish the work on which we are now engaged, and we will not be back again." But they are back again and they will be back next year.

WITCH HUNTING STREAMLINED

We are urged to cut the unemployed in America one-third of their total appropriations by the financial advisers of the House. In the Budget just submitted to the House we are going to find that we do not have sufficient money with which to take care of those on the W. P. A. because we "cannot find the money," but we can find $100,000 to engage on a witch-hunting, bogey-chasing expedition, in which rules of evidence will be flouted and in which hearsay testimony will be allowed to be introduced in that record which would not be admissible in any court of record in the United States; in which unsupported and readily refutable assertions made by unqualified witnesses will be allowed to be spread on the record; in which reputable citizens will be assailed and accused of being Communists and will be charged with engaging in un-American activities, but not in the presence of the accusers; and in which, when persons and groups so slandered have asked for permission to appear before the committee and deny the charges, frequently they have not been accorded that opportunity. This prognosis of the committee's future conduct is based on its past record. The American Negro Congress has been requesting an opportunity to come before the committee through its officers and deny the charges that have been laid at its door. One of its officers told me a few moments ago that they had not been accorded the privilege of appearing before the committee to deny these charges.

Mr. Speaker, let no one in this body delude himself by any conviction that the American people are a unit in demanding the continuation of this committee. There are countless groups who are opposing it. There are newspapers by the score who have carped at its antics. Magazines have editorially hurled diatribes of ridicule at its methods of procedure. Prominent educators, intellectuals, and creative thinkers have bitterly denounced what they term "injustice" pervading many of its hearings. A little later I shall briefly include excerpts from some of their pronouncements.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately this committee has not had time or inclination so far effectively to investigate such nationalist, anti-Semitic, pro-Nazi, or Fascist organizations as the following: The Silver Shirts; the American Nationalist Federation; the American Nationalist Party; the Ku Klux Klan; the American Crusaders; the American Coalition; the Christian Front; the Christian Mobilizers; the American Immigration Conference Board; the Black Legion; the American Vigilant Intelligence Federation; James True Associates; the Paul Reveres, Inc.; Christian Defenders; Associated Farmers; American White Guards; American Patriot Guard; the Vindicators; Pelley Publishers; the White Legion; the Khaki Shirts; the Order of '76; the Christian Militia; the Crusaders for Economic Liberty; and the Awakener.

Among the people or organizations who or which have been termed Communists or helping communism without rebuke in front of the committee are such famous figures as the motion-picture stars, James Cagney, Joan Crawford, Nancy Carroll, Miriam Hopkins, and Betty Davis. Among other famous figures or groups similarly referred to are the American Newspaper Guild; the late Heywood Brown; former United States Senator Robert Bulkley, of Ohio; former Gov. Elmer Benson; the composer, Irving Berlin; the director of the Indian Service, the Honorable John Collier; Hon. Oscar Chapman, Assistant Secretary of the Interior. Among others so treated are Senator Sheridan Downey, of California; the great public-health and medical-care authority, Paul de Kruif; Bishop Ralph S. Cushman; the great writer and economist, Stuart Chase; Prof. Paul Douglas, of the University of Chicago; the great scientist, Albert Einstein; Harold E. Hoffman, former Governor of New Jersey. The League of Women Shoppers, a national organization of women interested in the consumer movement and including in its membership hundreds of the most prominent women of America was similarly charged before the committee. The following well-known figures or groups were likewise referred to: Gypsy Rose Lee; J. Warren Madden; Justice Frank Murphy; College President Henry Noble McCracken; Frederic March; Bishop F. J. McConnell; National Council of Methodist Youth; Gov. C. O. Olson, of California; former Senator James Pope, of Idaho; John Steinbeck, author of Of Mice and Men, and Grapes of Wrath; former Congressman Byron Scott, of California; the University of Michigan; Y. W. C. A.; Y. M. C. A.; Frances Perkins; Dorothy Parker; Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt; the Senate Civil Liberties Committee; Stanford University; World Youth Congress; William Allen White, famous Republican editor of the Emporia (Kans.) Gazette; Clark Gable; Howard University; and the Department of Health of the City of Detroit.

Mr. Speaker, I attach herein below a list of prominent educators, thinkers, and scientists in America who have aggressively, both orally and in writing, signified their relentless opposition to a further appropriation for continuation of the Dies committee.

The list follows:

Mr. Speaker, the following statement is an excerpt from a public declaration of the National Board of the National Negro Congress on the Dies committee, dated January 22, 1940.

We must point out to the American people that the unsuccessful attempt of the Dies committee to smear the national Negro Congress is only one link in the chain of reactionary forces in America who seek to throttle freedom of speech and to destroy the democratic rights of the Negro people vouchsafed us by the Constitution and laws of the United States. We call on the United States Congress to repudiate and abolish the Dies committee. We call upon the American people to denounce the star-chamber procedures of this committee. We serve notice on MARTIN DIES and his friends of the Ku Klux Klan that we will not be stopped in our struggle to win economic freedom and democracy for the 15,000,000 Negro Americans in our land. And we leave the American people to judge by our deeds whether it is we or the Dies committee who are un-American.

Mr. Speaker, by special permission of the House, I attach herein below statements from newspapers and organized groups in which the Dies committee is discussed in various of its aspects.

[San Diego Sun, Nov. 1, 1939]

IS DIES COMMITTEE UN-AMERICAN?

(By Raymond Clapper)

NO DISCRIMINATING

The Dies committee has been no more discriminating in separating alien subversive activities from domestic liberalism than the lady in the New York Herald Tribune who chirped brightly every morning throughout the 1936 campaign that only so many days remained to save the American way of life by electing Alf Landon. It is like Mrs. Dilling, who in her "red network" classed William Allen White as a "red."

Representative DIES had an opportunity to make distinct in the public mind the subversive alien activities, on the one hand, and on the other the native progressivism, the yeast in our democracy, the movements to make our form of government work more effectively, which are as American as the Constitution itself. Bryan, Theodore Roosevelt, Wilson, Brandeis, populism, the non-Partisan League of the Dakotas, the La Follettes in Wisconsin, Franklin Roosevelt, and the New Deal—all have been damned as socialistic, Communistic, un-American. DIES talked about new dealers being "lapdogs of Moscow."

The Dies committee could have done a good turn to progressive democracy by pulling it clear of the radical-communist color. Instead, it has served to paste more Communist labels on the New Deal. Apparently the job will have to be done by the administration because it is vital that someone do it. To allow progressive ideas to succumb to a wave of red hunting and throw the country back into a period of reaction such as followed the Mitchell Palmer "red" hunt after the last war, would be an unnecessary and tragic loss.

The late Rodney Dutcher, N. E. A. staff correspondent, agreed with his colleagues as to the unique character of the Dies committee—unique, not in a flattering sense. He wrote:

No such loosely handled investigation has been covered previously by this generation of Washington correspondents.

Along the same line is the comment of Heywood Brown:

If the Dies committee had used any sort of cross-examination whatsoever, it might have held its more imaginative witnesses in bounds. Instead the more florid romancers were egged on as they seemed to be drawing to the end of the chapter. MARTIN DIES and his men seemed like eager infants in their disposition to say, "Don't stop now, Granny. Tell us another story. Tell us the one about the ogre who ate up the Sunday-school superintendent."

Another journalist, Frederick R. Barkley, feature writer for the New York Times, describes this method in actual operation, and also the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES'] reaction when the witnesses refused to cooperate by "yessing" the investigator:

What conclusions the people out in the country are reaching from the widely publicized testimony is puzzling many observers here. Have the committee's many ineptitudes and its unquestioning acceptance of the most fantastic tales wholly discredited it? Or is the public taking all the stories told it as gospel truth?

Luther A. Huston, likewise writing in the New York Times, summarizes the work of the committee in the early stages of the investigation, thus:

During a week of torrid testimony in torrid weather, a procession of witnesses . . . pinned the red badge of Moscow on the bosoms of a host of labor leaders, placed Communist sympathizers not only in the legion of the New Deal, but in the staid ranks of the Grand Old Party, hinted that Stalin's minions were trying to corrupt the church, attributed Communist affiliations and sympathy to many organizations, hitherto designated as patriotic or educational, and pointed scornful fingers at persons who gave money to buy ambulances for wounded Spanish Loyalists. . . .

At no time in the testimony was a definition given of communism or a Communist. Some of the witnesses left the impression on critical observers that their definition of communism was any program that opposed theirs, and a Communist was anyone whose opinion differed from their own.

Arthur Krock, Washington correspondent of the conservative New York Times, and himself critical of the New Deal, wrote:

Mr. DIES, like Representatives FISH and DICKSTEIN, is a foreign-propaganda bloodhound. But he goes further than even Mr. FISH and leaves Mr. DICKSTEIN at the post in finding links between foreign ideologies and radical movements on the left fringe of the New Deal. . . . Mr. SHEPPARD, chairman of the senatorial committee investigating campaign activities, is merely after facts he was instructed to obtain. But Mr. DIES was from the very first suspected of being after unilateral evidence to support a preconception.

EDITORIAL VIEWS ON THE DIES COMMITTEE

Newspapers of both major parties and of all shades of opinion, conservative and liberal alike, are agreed in their views of the Dies committee. A few representative views follow:

The New York Herald Tribune, leading conservative Republican organ and critic of the Roosevelt administration, writes:

. . . the country should be warned against the danger of spying a Communist under every bush.

Let us realize, for instance, that Mr. Frey is a special pleader and that his object is to discredit the C. I. O. When, therefore, he says that the C. I. O. is in the grip of the Communists, his assertion should be taken with several grains of salt.

And in another editorial this newspaper asks rhetorically:

Are William Allen White, Henry Nobel McCracken, a bishop of the Methodist Church, and the former Governor of New Jersey, among others of like standing, dense enough to become the "stooges" of Stalin? There must be a catch somewhere.

The catch, we believe, appears in the assumption that because Communists ally themselves with a liberal cause they necessarily capture it.

The New York Times, Democratic and critical of the New Deal, in its restrained way, pokes fun at the committee thus:

One gathers from some of the testimony given before the House Committee on Un-American Activities that it is now possible to be a Communist without knowing it. One may think he is merely working for peace and democracy, or against war and fascism, but in the background, if one takes this testimony at its face value, is the sinister figure of Stalin and the OGPU.

Clear across the continent the Portland Oregonian, conservative Republican, says:

The Dies committee listens to the fanatical Dr. J. B. Matthews charging that Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt herself is a dupe of the Communists. It passes this abnormal suspicion along to the Nation. . . .

To accuse this bountiful and warm-hearted First Lady of being manipulated from Moscow is an affront of common sense and good taste.

The Baltimore Sun, critic and opponent of the New Deal, declares that Secretary of Labor Perkins—

Is on firm ground . . . in her refusal to deport C. I. O. Leader Harry Bridges on the ground that he is a Communist, as Representative MARTIN DIES demanded.

The Sun continues:

There is such a thing as sedition and it is fairly defined by law; but this committee is not investigating sedition, it is investigating "un-American" activities. . . .

The inevitable implication is that there is such a thing as an American activity, which can be defined and recognized.

This is flat nonsense. . . . The investigation was not limited to sedition for a coherent, if not creditable, reason. Some of its proponents wished to annoy people whom they dislike; but these people are not guilty of sedition, and the proponents of the inquiry knew it. That is the only intelligible explanation of the meaningless term "un-American." Under such a term anything can be dragged in.

Another newspaper, the Walla Walla Morning Union, calls attention to the committee's failure to investigate certain other and really subversive organizations. It says:

Instead of running after the Methodist Federation for Social Service, the League of Women Shoppers, and the Milk Consumers' Protective Committee, the Dies group could have performed a real service by investigating such definitely un-American groups as the Silver Shirts, Knights of the White Camellia, Order of Black Shirts, and Dr. Winrod's fanatical following.

The New York Daily News, summarizing the work of the committee and commenting thereon editorially, says:

Up to now, the Dies committee has smeared the President of the United States and his wife with suspicions of having aided and abetted communism by making friendly gestures at the World Youth Congress; has hung a "red" label on poor little Shirley Temple, among other movie stars; and now wants the help of the G-men in digging up more smear stuff.

Recently Harlan Miller, famous columnist of the Washington (D. C.) Post, wrote in his daily news column, syndicated throughout the country (January 21, 1940):

And don't get me wrong about DIES himself. He's a great big lovable boy with a fine gift for shooting off his mouth. I'm sorry to see him looking so sick and pasty. But illness never kept DIES away from a microphone or a lecture platform; just away from Congress. I know MARTIN. I've had breakfast and lunch with him and talked with him by the hour. Sometimes he's fooled me.

Lately he's felt too puny to be in his seat here representing Texas, but not too frail to dash off $10,000 worth of magazine articles.

Funny thing is, DIES means well. He yells how tolerant he is, while all the time acting intolerant to almost everybody who doesn't act and talk and dress like they do in his corner of Texas. He can't help that.

I tell you, Joe, he's a great guy. He isn't content to deport 7,000 or 70,000. No; he wants to deport 7,000,000. That scared the other members of his committee, because it would take every canoe in the country for the next 5 years, and how could Congressman KENT KELLER go canoeing?

Mr. DIES used to be the whole show, but now a majority of his committee is agin him.

They found out he was flirting with the notion of running for Vice President, or maybe for Senator against TOM CONNALLY, one of the finest Senators on the Hill.

"Mention me in your speech," he said to a colleague who was speaking in Texas, "it'll help me for Senator."

DIES promised he'd expose all the Communists. He spent $100,000 and dug up one—Browder, their candidate for President. Great sleuthing, Joe, wasn't it?

He told me he'd get lists of all the Communists in the Government, and that he had the goods on where the Nazi and Fascist money was coming from. Joe, he never delivered.

But he got a lot of breaks. Hitler signed up with Stalin, and together they blackjacked Poland; Hitler stole Bohemia and Stalin picked on Finland; Fritz Kuhn got sent to jail and General Krivitsky exposed the Communists from the inside. The "reds" quarreled among themselves, and the Nazis bombed Warsaw, and all the lunatic fringe DIES was supposed to be exposing got in dutcher and dutcher.

It would have stunk without DIES to stir it up. But he got the credit; his name fits into any headline.

What I mean, Joe, is that DIES has got no business calling Shirley Temple or Eleanor Roosevelt a radical just because he wants to be Vice President. Them and thousands of others.

Joe, they're no more Communists than you or I or MARTIN DIES.

The other members of his committee would like to restrain MARTIN's exhibitionism and keep him away from microphones long enough to get well. They'd like to muzzle him, that's what they say.

But Congress apparently hasn't got the guts. They know it's popular to raise hell about the Communists, and they think DIES is now too popular to trifle with.

They'd like to muzzle him, but they didn't.

A few of the Congressmen think the way MARTIN does, and some of the dumber ones think the way the guys do who throw up their hats for DIES. But most of 'em see how dangerous that kind of stuff is to the plain old Samuel Adams-Patrick Henry brand of freedom.

But they just plain haven't got the guts to make it clear that Communists and Nazis are lousy, but DIES isn't so hot, either.

They know DIES in the House. He's famous as chief of the demagogues club.

Once he spoke against a bill, voted for it 2 minutes later.

When the first poll showed Roosevelt slipping a little, DIES said, "Boys, he's slippin'; I'm turnin' agin him."

Speaker BANKHEAD named DIES chairman. He knew MARTIN's dad, who was a great guy. In MARTIN he recognized a good demagogue, because BANKHEAD's a little that way himself.

So you'd better resign from the Epworth League, Joe, or they'll be callin' you a Communist.

Yours, on a limb.

HARLAN.

On January 17, 1940, Dorothy Thompson, wife of Sinclair Lewis, the novelist, and the most brilliant and gifted woman newspaper writer in America, said, among other things:

The Dies committee also discovered the German-American Bund and revealed what had been published previously in numerous newspapers. But the report does not contain a single reference to the "Christian" boys—of the "Christian Front," or the "Christian Mobilizers"—who see in "Christianity" a war whoop for the persecution of nongentiles in this country.

I once heard this definition of a detective: He is a man who closes his eyes and paints an eye on the eyelid so that people will think that his eyes are open.

Despite the fact that one has to pick one's way across or around the members of the Christian Front thrusting copies of Father Coughlin's Social Justice under one's nose all over Forty-second Street in the very heart of New York, and in spite of the animal screams of blood lust that emerge from the patriotic throats of Mr. McWilliams' Christian Mobilizers, which, I understand, are rivals of the good father, thinking that they have discovered in their handsome chief a more likely "fuehrer of the future," our Government investigators have not noticed these boys.

The fact that Father Coughlin's name is enthusiastically cheered at the meetings of the German-American Bund; the fact that invitations to the Christian Front meetings and to bund meetings have been handed out synonymously by the same men at the same meetings; the fact that the Christian Front maintained picket lines at WMCA radio station every Sunday for a full year, bearing large placards on which was the picture of Father Coughlin, has escaped the notice of investigators.

On January 11, 1940, Walter Lippmann, one of the most astute fourth estate commentators we have in America, a man who has been a frequent critic of the New Deal, and whose writings generally reveal a decidedly conservative penchant, wrote in his column as it appeared in the Washington Post:

The Dies committee are not really a legislative committee. They are a kind of committee of public safety set up by Congress to suppress activities which, though detested by the great majority of the people, are in themselves either not unlawful, or, even if they were outlawed, could not be dealt with by the ordinary procedure of the law. The Dies committee are official vigilantes operating in an area, that of the political underworld, where there is as yet no effective law and there is, therefore, no order. The committeemen, like their vigilante predecessors on the American frontier, are therefore themselves often lawless in spirit and disorderly in their methods.

This accounts for the somewhat shamefaced approval which thoughtful men have given to the work of the committee. The public is confronted with the ancient moral question of whether the end justifies the means. Thus, only the very innocent and self-deluding have any doubt that the Dies committee have been attacking a formidable evil in modern society. The menace is real. It is not imaginary. And it must be met. Yet there is no doubt also that the procedure of the Dies committee is itself a violation of American morality; it is a pillory in which reputations are ruined, often without proof and always without the legal safeguards that protect the ordinary criminal; it is a tribunal before which men are arraigned and charged with acts that are, as a matter of fact, lawful.

END IS ATTAINED BY DEPLORABLE MEANS

Therefore the end, which is to protect the American system, is attained by means which, if used for some other end, would be deplored by everyone, by everyone, except, of course, the revolutionists whom Mr. Dies is stalking.

It is plain that the Dies committee cannot be abolished and must be continued since it offers a center of resistance to evils which could not otherwise be brought to light and checked. It is equally plain that the committee needs to be reformed, so that its methods will in spirit, at least, be lawful, and, therefore, capable of commanding the respect of law-abiding citizens.

I do not know how this can be done except by subjecting the procedure of the committee to public criticism, and by adding to the membership one or two learned and respected lawyers who will make it their business to reform the procedure, and by giving the committee enough money to hire competent investigators so that they may cease to rely upon dubious informers and the crackpots who always gather about an inquiry of this sort.

In the home State of the chairman of the committee is printed a famous newspaper, the El Paso (Tex.) Times. In its issue of December 26, 1939, it published the following editorial:

AND HE'LL GET THE MONEY

Chairman DIES of the House Un-American Activities Investigating Committee roars into action again.

Great things are just over the hill. Tremendously menacing things. He could tell a great deal about communism among the big movie actors. It seems Hollywood has been rather thoroughly penetrated.

Then there are the great labor troubles which have played havoc with the Pacific coast. Chairman DIES foresees important and alarming developments coming out of that investigation.

All of which, possibly true to some extent, at least, signifies just this:

The Dies committee is about out of money. In preparation for asking Congress for another appropriation, DIES wants the country to know what menacing things are just over the hill.

And DIES will get the money. Mark our prediction. He may not get as much as he wants, but he will be given a substantial sum.

The White House dislikes him. Congress knows him for what he is, a show-off and politics player, a hunter of headlines. But few Congressmen will dare vote against an appropriation to carry on the work of the Dies committee, which, incidentally, has been productive of some little good. Because they won't care to run the risk of being branded secretly "red."

From the Kansas City (Mo.) Star of October 26, 1939:

KEEP TO THE NEEDED WORK

The Dies committee has an abundance of necessary work to do in exposing un-American activities of the dangerous sort. It does not need to slop over and cast suspicion upon possibly hundreds of persons who may be thoroughly loyal citizens. The committee has done that in giving out the membership and mailing list of the American League for Peace and Democracy.

The committee has exceeded both its authority and the bounds of discretion in thus subjecting some 563 persons to possibly unjust criticism. It failed to indicate whether the persons named were members of the league and in sympathy with its work or whether they simply were on its mailing list. And while the committee charges that the league is a Communist organization, that is not definitely proved. Its officials deny that it is "Communist dominated."

The league is a radical agency and may be Communist. The committee could establish the facts about it. Until it does and until it has conclusive evidence to show certain persons on the league's lists are an actual part of it, then it should be silent about those persons. The committee has done good work. It can continue without injustice to any citizen.

From the Davenport (Iowa) Democrat, of November 26, 1939:

How these Congressmen do succumb to the glare of the spotlight! There was Senator NYE, who presided over extended committee hearings which gave a pat on the back to any witness who would say that the munition makers cause our wars. When he couldn't get enough attention at the congressional sessions he graduated to the summer Chautauqua circuit. And there was Senator WHEELER, under a similar spell, going on the lecture platform, which brought him to Davenport as an after-dinner orator.

Now it's Representative DIES, who has a committee investigating un-American activities, and counts a quorum whenever he is present. The inquiry has cost about $125,000 to date, and DIES wants a lot more than that to keep it going. For fear of a lack of enthusiasm in Congress, he is planning a series of mass meetings to bring pressure on Congress to give him what he wants. The first will be held in Madison Square Garden next Wednesday.

It begins to look as if Mr. DIES is not so much possessed by the idea that "the reds'll get you if you don't watch out," as he is by an obsession for self-advertisement. As Iowa Legionnaire Frank Miles said at a forum in Des Moines, DIES is inclined to be "stagey" and has done "a lot of grandstanding which I wish he hadn't." Which was a frank admission after Frank had stated that the Legion had been instrumental in establishing the Dies committee.

The country will hear plenty of and from DIES. The Texas Congressman will see to that, himself.

From the Philadelphia Record, of October 27, 1939:

CHEAP TRICK

There is need for a genuine, decent, thoroughgoing investigation of foreign pressure groups and un-American activities in this country. But the Dies committee isn't it.

The committee's action in publishing a list of supposed members of the League for Peace and Democracy was an unbelievably cheap trick.

The League for Peace and Democracy is generally recognized today as a Communist front organization, although most of its members probably are not Communists.

But the list given out by the Dies committee was not a list of members. The papers handed to the press were marked "membership and mailing list" at the top. The committee ran a pencil through the words "and mailing." The press was supposed to draw the inference that it was a membership list, even though a committee member said that the committee made no claim that all those on the lists were members of the league.

Anyone's name can turn up on any mailing list. Why is it surprising or significant in any way that the names of Government officials were on the list? All the league's Washington office had to do to get the names was to consult a directory of Government officials, or look up addresses in the phone book.

What's to prevent Communist headquarters from putting MARTIN DIES' own name on its mailing list? What's to prevent some cheap "investigator" from seizing such a list and publishing it with the snide innuendo that MARTIN DIES is an agent of Moscow?

We think the committee owes an apology to the loyal Americans it has spattered with mud in a reckless and irresponsible manner.

The investigating power of congressional committees is one of the most useful instruments of government. It should not be abused.

From the Minneapolis (Minn.) Star-Journal, of October 27, 1939:

TEMPEST IN A TEAPOT

Representative DIES and the committee which bears his name certainly put their foot in it when they published the names of Government employees who were on the mailing list of the American League for Peace.

The Dies list totals 563 out of a Government pay roll in Washington of 147,760. Even if those listed were supporters of communism, which is not proven or even alleged, they would form such a small percentage of the whole that there would be nothing to get very excited about.

Publication of these names was unfair to most of the individuals concerned, and it is difficult to see how it served any useful purpose. Cannot the committee find something more important to do to justify its existence?

From the St. Louis (Mo.) Post-Dispatch, of October 23, 1939:

MR. DIES' REAL OBJECTIVES

If further evidence as to the unjudicial procedure of the Dies committee is needed, it is to be found in its chairman's boast that it has paralyzed the left wing of the Democratic Party, discredited John L. Lewis and the C. I. O., and driven Elmer F. Andrews from his post as Wage and Hour Administrator. Very sure of himself, Dies even has listed future victims of his witch hunt, among them David Saposs, chief economist of the Labor Board.

There have been some disgraceful congressional committees in the past, but it would be difficult, indeed, to find one with the record of the Dies committee and its parade of discredited and irresponsible witnesses, its public smearing of reputations, without the least effort to determine the truth of the charges being broadcast. Now, its chairman admits that the purpose of the committee is not an exploratory one, but that it has definite objectives. It is out to "get" the New Deal. It is out to "get" the C. I. O. Well, those are legitimate targets in the political arena, but a congressional committee set up to investigate subversive activities should not be allowed to become an instrumentality in such partisan warfare. No committee should ever again be permitted to enter a State campaign, as this committee did in Attorney General Frank Murphy's unsuccessful gubernatorial campaign in Michigan.

Now the Dies committee wants another $100,000 to continue its work. If, in the light of the objectives outlined by its chairman, it is granted this new appropriation, Congress will have taken about as effective a step against the democratic rights—that the committee was supposed to protect—as can well be imagined. Further, the Fritz Kuhns and the American Communists have done about everything possible to discredit themselves. If they are allowed to become "martyrs" to the Dies inquiry, the gentleman from Texas may yet succeed in rehabilitating them.

From the Dallas (Tex.) News of October 27, 1939:

UNJUSTIFIED COMMITTEE

The House Committee on Un-American Activities, whose probe has made some useful revelations, has made repeated mistakes that showed lack of thought and forethought. Not the least of these is publication of an alleged membership list of the League for Peace and Democracy, an organization it previously had branded as a Communist front. This committee action, now under fire even by some of its minority members, does an injustice to many individuals.

The claim that the publication is a violation of civil rights has little weight, of course. No one need be ashamed of belonging to an organization working for peace and democracy. The real injustice is in the unsupported branding of this organization as a Communist front, with the implication that its members, or many of them, are either Communists or Communist sympathizers. To a levelheaded citizen, a mere reading of prominent names on the membership list does not support the claim that the organization is tainted with communism, but there always are people ready to believe the worst of their fellows.

Any organization, even a lodge or a church, is likely to acquire a few members with Communist leanings—and as long as the Communist Party is a legitimate political body, there is no reason for discrimination against its members. But since many Americans consider themselves libeled by being tagged incorrectly as Communists or Communist sympathizers, and since such labeling might harm them politically or economically, congressional probes, no less than individuals, should be extremely cautious in order to avoid unjust accusations.

From that famous Republican newspaper of Worcester, Mass., the Telegram, in an editorial, dated October 26, 1939:

THE UNNECESSARY MR. DIES

All who have been following the newspaper reports of the doings of un-American organizations and their members within the borders of the United States must agree that there is plenty of work of the first importance to be done by the Dies committee. Thus public opinion is likely to second the request of the committee for funds to continue its investigations another year.

At the same time, however, all who have been following the newspaper reports of the sayings of Representative MARTIN DIES, chairman of the committee, must regret that the flamboyant Texan cannot be replaced by a man of more judicial temper. The committee has unearthed a vast deal of invaluable data concerning forces operating to overthrow the American form of government. It has revealed the menacing foreign sources of some of these forces. And it has caught the serious attention of the American people.

But it has been able to do these things not because of Chairman Dies but in spite of him. The chairman has done his best—unconsciously of course—to gum the proceedings. The limelight into which the chairmanship thrust him has sent him into a veritable St. Vitus dance of political ambition. He has sought constantly to make personal political capital out of the accomplishments of the committee.

He has absented himself from hearings in order to barnstorm here and there in the hinterland. He has cried out, when he should have been silent, as on the other day, when he asserted that the committee has the goods to send all Communist and Fascist leaders in America to jail. He has stressed the trivial and botched the momentous. He displays no real understanding of what it is all about. For him, it would seem, the committee's investigations are a circus and he the rollicking clown.

From the Charlotte (N. C.) Daily News of November 25, 1939:

POISON—MR. DIES CALLS FOR A HEADER INTO MADNESS

The other suggestion made by Mr. Dies, however, is just plain terrible. He wants a series of mass meetings to be held all over the country to develop "a crusade of real Americanism."

What that means we know well enough from the early post-war days of Mitchell Palmer and the Ku Klux Klan. It means the whipping up of a mob hysteria of hate and rage masquerading as patriotism, which must have its scapegoat at any price—which exhibits all the characteristics of the mob spirit, and above all its impatience with the notion that holders of unpopular opinions still have their rights.

In short, what MARTIN DIES proposes is a Nation-wide hydrophobia against the Bill of Rights. For that, precisely, is what the sort of thing he calls for has always produced.

THE COMMITTEE SHOULD BE ETHICAL

We are told we should not criticize the committee. I think our agencies ought to lean backward and not be guilty of engaging in un-American activities themselves. A judge about to sentence a prisoner usually grants him full opportunity to speak. Anyone who has not been given a fair trial in the courts may appeal to the higher or court of last resort. But when the accused before the Dies committee does not agree with the charges that are made and wants to appear and deny them in toto, and such appearance is refused, there is no tribunal to which he can appeal, only the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a sermon given by the Most Reverend John F. O'Hara.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

INVESTIGATION OF UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, the discussion at this time, and particularly the attitude which is being taken by the overwhelming majority of the membership of this House, reminds me of two people who went to a heavyweight champion prize fight at Madison Square Garden. During that fight there was a moment when it looked as though the champion was going to be knocked out. All eyes were focused on the ring. Everybody was on his toes shouting, waiting for the big kill and for the new champion. Do you know what these two people were doing? They were sitting there discussing the merits of a ping-pong tournament that had been played the night before.

The House today is doing the same. Instead of dedicating its efforts toward the solution of very serious problems which are confronting our country, problems that really affect the general welfare of our Nation, which, the President said, was the basis of our national defense; problems of unemployment; problems of peace; problems of the laboring people; problems of the farmers; problems of the small-business men and professional men—the membership is rushing through the House and making it practically the first order of business what I deem to be the most reprehensible record in legislative history since the days of the World War.

We are going to continue what should be put away on the musty shelf to be forgotten as a disgraceful assault on the liberties of the American people.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going into the question of procedure, and I am not going to make any attack on any member of the committee. I could just as readily stand up here and repeat the words of the leader of the Democratic Party, the President of the United States, and describe the procedure of this committee as sordid, and have that great authority behind me.

However, I am not going to go into that because my opposition to the continuance of this committee is based upon a basic principle—that is, the principle of the civil rights guaranteed in the Constitution of the United States.

Oh, it is perfectly easy to attack a dissident minority. The press applauds. In fact, "communism" has become very, very convenient for many, many Members of this House, and many people outside of it. If communism is destroyed I do not know what some of you will do. [Applause.] It has become the most convenient method by which you wrap yourselves in the American flag in order to cover up some of the greasy stains on the legislative toga. You can vote against the unemployed, you can vote against the W. P. A. workers, you can emasculate the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States, you can try to destroy the National Labor Relations law, the Magna Carta of American labor, you can vote against the farmer, and you can do all that with a great deal of impunity, because after you have done so you do not have to explain your vote. You do not have to defend yourselves to the country and to the unemployed, to labor, or to the farmer. All you have to do is stand up here and say, "I am opposed to communism. Let us destroy communism." What are you going to do when there is no more communism in this country? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, this resolution presents a very serious issue. It presents the issue of guaranteeing the rights of dissident minorities. Destroy the constitutional rights of minorities, particularly the rights of those minorities that you so vociferously condemn, and you are marching with seven-league boots toward the destruction of democracy. This committee, under the guise of investigating subversive activities, has done its utmost to abolish democratic rights in the United States.

It has failed to distinguish between illegal activities and constitutional activities. It has sought to destroy the right to constitutional activities under the pretext of investigating illegal activities. The right of minorities to freedom of press, speech, and petition have been endangered as never before by this committee. Oh, I know that when my friend the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] gets up here he will say, "I subscribe to the doctrine of free speech." Let me say that what the Dies committee has failed to recognize is the fundamental principle of application. There is a great deal of difference between mere subscription and application. I say that every dissident minority has the right to advocate, it has the right to organize, and it has the right to propagandize. The Dies committee has failed to recognize the difference between subversive and constitutional. There is a difference between espionage, sabotage, and conspiracy, on the one hand, and on the other hand the right to organize, advocate, and propagandize. Until you establish that a person is guilty of conspiracy to violate laws or to engage in espionage or sabotage, I say that person has the right to advocate and to do everything the Constitution gives him the right to say, publish, and do, whether he be a Communist, a Socialist, a Republican, a Democrat, or a Laborite. [Applause.] Once you tamper with this principle, no matter under what pretext, once you undermine it, you undermine the Constitution of the United States and deal a death blow to the fundamental principles upon which this country is based.

Legislation such as this is not anything new. It is the third time such a situation has arisen. Twice before now it has arisen. Every time we have gone through a critical period a real effort has been made to destroy the civil rights of the American people by making an attack on the rights of dissident minorities. Our institutions can survive only when we reaffirm the American tradition of greater freedom for the American people during periods of crises.

In 1798 we passed the Alien and Sedition Acts. Thomas Jefferson was hounded and accused of being an agent of a foreign country, France. The Alien and Sedition Acts, most similar in purpose with the activities of the Dies committee, were imposed on this country at that time. These laws were aimed at Jefferson and his followers. Now everybody respects Thomas Jefferson. Even my great friend from Dutchess County appeals to the Democrats in the name of Jefferson and calls them Jeffersonian Democrats when he wants them on his side.

Let us see what Thomas Jefferson said with regard to that legislation which is the monstrous ancestor of the type which you are putting over here today. He charged that that legislation was put over by a "war party." We are before a war situation now. He said that such laws were "merely an experiment on the American mind to see how far it would bear an avowed violation of the Constitution." He further stated, referring to the Sedition Acts:

These and successive acts of the same character, unless arrested at the threshold, necessarily drive these States into revolution and blood, and will furnish new calumnies against republican government, and new pretexts for those who wish it to be believed that man cannot be governed but by a rod of iron.

The Sedition Acts were repealed by the American people and the party that enacted them died.

During the World War we had a repetition of this situation. We passed the espionage laws, and we had the subsequent Palmer raids of which every American is ashamed today. No man was safe in his home. No minority was safe. No labor leader or labor union, no organization was safe to conduct its activities—legal activities, activities guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

Let me quote what a great Republican—one whose memory we will always respect, one who, too, was frequently in the minority, Senator Borah—said with regard to the espionage law when he opposed it in the United States Senate on April 19, 1917:

Without an unfettered press, without liberty of speech, all the outward forms and structures of free institutions are a sham, a pretense—the sheerest mockery. If the press is not free, if speech is not independent and untrammelled, if the mind is shackled or made impotent through fear, it makes no difference under what form of government you live, you are a subject and not a citizen. Republics are not in and of themselves better than other forms of government except insofar as they carry with them and guarantee to the citizens that liberty of thought and action for which they were established.

The espionage law of 1917 was repealed in disgust by the American people. After its repeal, at a mass meeting in New York City on March 11, 1923, held for the purpose of demanding the release of the political prisoners imprisoned under the espionage law, Senator Borah said, referring to the repealed Espionage Act:

It was not thought a fit law to remain upon the statute books of the United States in time of peace. I trust that at no time in the future will it ever be regarded or considered as a precedent for the enactment of any measure of that kind again. It should be regarded as not only opposed to the principles of free government in time of peace but also in time of war.

Mr. Speaker, take away the rights of people whom you do not like, take away the constitutional rights of dissident minorities, and you yourselves are engaging in un-American activities.

You say that you are worried about dissident minorities getting us into war. It is not the dissident minorities that will get us into war, it is the hysteria that this type of repressive legislation, that this type of persecution legislation you are going to pass today, will create that will get us into war. It will be the same as the hysteria that got us into war in 1917. The purpose is obvious. This is a prelude for an offensive against the Bill of Rights and for a drive to give the American workers the jobs of stopping bullets and shrapnel at the front. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I was interested in what the preceding speaker had to say about the connection of war and peace with the investigation being conducted by the Dies committee. It seems to me there is a subject we might emphasize just a little bit this afternoon in considering the reasons why we should or should not continue this investigation.

I believe the evidence so far revealed has clearly shown there is a direct connection between the various subversive outfits in America and attempts being made to drag America into a foreign war or to influence our attitude with regard to one or more of the three conflicts now raging in the world. If for no other reason, I believe it would be a splendid thing on the roll-call vote which is to come on this measure if 90 percent, or more, of the Members of this House would vote to continue the Dies investigating committee with the admonition that has been expressed here frequently that it concentrate for a time on the sources of foreign propaganda coming into this country and that the committee analyze it clearly and see how much of it is being paid for by foreign governments and how many foreign agents are posing as lecturers, journalists, members of royal families, and what-not, going about the country trying to change the attitude of our citizens with regard to our neutrality program.

I believe one thing we can do to safeguard the neutrality of America is to tell the world here and now that we are deliberately providing this committee with another adequate appropriation and authorizing it to investigate the sources of foreign propaganda which are attempting to influence our attitude on foreign affairs, or to drag us into war.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the peace policy of this country and our attitude on foreign policy are matters to be determined by American citizens and by American citizens only. They must not be influenced by paid propagandists doing the work of Communists, Fascists, or Nazis, nor by foreign agents of England, France, Italy, Japan, or any other belligerent nation, all of which, on both sides of the war are trying to flood our country with hate-provoking propaganda spread by foreigners who are receiving their pay and their inspiration from the rulers of foreign countries. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, it is a disappointment to me to see any opposition expressed on the floor of the House against continuance of the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities. This committee was created by act of Congress and has rendered an outstanding and useful service for the Nation. Possibly the committee has made some mistakes in its investigations, and perhaps some things have been done which should not have been done; but, after all, such is always the result in these investigation efforts. The fact remains that, largely as a result of this committee's efforts, Browder and Kuhn, both notorious un-American workers, have been convicted and imprisoned.

When we were sworn in as Members of Congress, we took the following oath:

I do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter, so help me God.

Surely un-American and subversive activities are not in accord with this oath, but are in dire violation of it and the very fundamentals of our American form of government. Surely we are bound under this oath to protect our country from domestic enemies as well as foreign. This committee has revealed in our midst both foreign and domestic enemies. I cannot give consolation nor approval to enemies of our Government, neither foreign nor domestic.

In voting to continue this committee, I feel that I am voting to uphold this oath, the Constitution of the United States, and our American Government. The efforts of this committee are approved by the various veterans' organizations of our country, patriotic groups in our country, as well as millions of right-thinking and properly acting American citizens. I am voting for passage of the resolution, and shall regret to see a single one of my colleagues who are under the same oath as I am vote against it. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the motives of the American Legion have been questioned here in endorsing the Dies committee. I rise for the purpose of making this brief statement. All veterans' organizations—the Veterans of Foreign Wars and all other World War veterans' organizations and the Spanish-American War veterans—have gone on record in favor of a continuation of the Dies committee. All these organizations are nonpartisan and are outspoken in their opposition to all subversive activities in America.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with the last speaker, wherein he expressed the hope that no one disagrees with the continuance of the Dies committee. I think it is a pretty good American custom to have our legislators engage in debate, express their opinions, and out of the welter and exchange of opinions no harm can come; nothing but good can come; and, certainly, with respect to this committee, there ought to be a great difference of opinion.

I am somewhat alarmed at the lack of criticism of the Dies committee. You cannot take a middle ground, because emotions have been aroused. You are all black or you are all white. You are 100 percent for the committee and everything it does or you are 100 percent against the committee and everything it does.

Now, we ought to be able to take a rational middle ground. We ought to be able to approve the things we approve and to criticize the things we disapprove. We ought to be able to subject the activities of this committee or any other committee to the searchlight of investigation, to find out whether what they are doing is right and just and democratic.

Now, the Dies committee has done a great work in exposing Earl Browder. It has done a most commendable job in exposing Fritz Kuhn. We cannot shut our eyes to those things. In many ways it has done admirable and commendable work, but the point I wish to make is this. Why can we not engage in exposing and denouncing un-American activities without also repealing the Magna Carta, without also giving up the rights that our forefathers have fought and bled and sweated for? This is the point I wish to impress upon you ladies and gentlemen of this Congress.

The Dies committee could be subjected to criticism for quite a few things and ought to be subjected to criticism. I refer, for example, to a report which I signed, and I admit my mistake, and other members of the committee here today have admitted their mistake, in characterizing the United Electrical, Radio, and Machine Workers of America as a union in which there is strongly entrenched Communist leadership.

We received some telegrams from James B. Carey, the head of that union, making a perfectly pertinent inquiry, asking who are the leaders in the United Electrical, Radio, and Machine Workers of America who are Communists. A simple question and a natural question. I sent for the evidence and I asked the clerk of the committee to gather together the evidence against this organization that we branded communistic.

I find that we have nothing but sheer hearsay. We have nothing that would hold up in any court of law. We have little more than the fact that Mr. Carey once spoke before the American League for Peace and Democracy. That is about all we have so far as he is concerned.

Now, Mr. Carey, I am informed, has spoken before the Young Republican Club of Brooklyn. So by the same reasoning, that would make him a member of the Young Republican Club. He has also spoken before Vassar College, and by the same reasoning that would make him a student of Vassar.

In a letter from Julius Emspak, secretary of this union, I find the following passage:

The United Electrical, Radio, and Machine Workers of America is a union formed 4 years ago from the local unions previously affiliated to the American Federation of Labor, and local unions that were independent and unaffiliated. From a membership of 14,000 at the time it was formed, the union has grown so that there are now approximately 250,000 employees in the electrical manufacturing industry working under the union's contracts.

The union functions in strictest accord with the fundamental principles of American democracy. Although the union has contractual relationships with 75 percent of the industry, with some 300 contracts in existence, the union has never once been accused of violating or breaching a contract.

I might also add that he states that the United Electrical had asked the chairman of our committee for a chance to appear and deny and refute the testimony. This chance was denied the United Electrical. I say this is something which the committee has done that should be criticized.

We have had other organizations in which the same denial could be made. We have, for example, the United Office and Professional Workers of America, in which we have said that Communists are strongly entrenched in their leadership. I have here a letter from Lewis Merrill, general president, in which he says:

Our organization has been given no opportunity to defend itself and our communications addressed to the committee have been disregarded.

I could go on and name others—for example, the American Association of University Women. They have some complaint to make with respect to consumers' unions being smeared as Communist. I say here there are undoubtedly other innocents whom we have branded as Communists. This loose talk about communism can blast reputations. Our committee has received a terrific amount of publicity in the American press. We should be careful. We should scrutinize the evidence with the utmost care. We should be judicial and analytical, and we have not been that.

I want to say to Mr. Carey, president of the United Electrical, Radio, and Machine Workers Union of America, that, as one member of the committee, I apologize for having put my name on a report branding his organization as communistic.

Now, let us go on from that. I have here another criticism to make of the Dies committee. When I say I am criticizing the Dies committee, I am not withdrawing from my share of the blame. We have good Members there. I am glad to pay my respects to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mason] on the Republican side. I feel that with his assistance we can reform the procedure. But let me point out the most despicable thing which this committee has done, or rather which was done in the name of the committee.

The Dies committee made a report of Communist activities in consumers' organizations. Let me recite chronologically the facts leading up to that report on consumers' organizations. On August 17, 1939, the Federal Trade Commission issued a complaint against Good Housekeeping Magazine, and Hearst Magazines, Inc., owner of Good Housekeeping Magazine. At that time Richard E. Berlin, executive vice president of Hearst Magazines, Inc., distributed a public statement assailing the Commission's action as Communist-inspired, and threatening public exposure of certain radical and communistic groups in and out of the Government service. This attack by Hearst Magazines, Inc., specifically singled out Consumers Union, Consumers National Federation, and Consumers' Council in the Department of Agriculture.

Having in mind Mr. Berlin's threat of August 17, 1939, let us turn our attention to the circumstances under which the Dies committee made its famous, or rather infamous, report of Communist activities in consumer organizations. No other member of the committee had any notice of this meeting, except the chairman. It was held on a Sunday night at 6 o'clock and was clouded in such secrecy that even to this day we of the committee do not know where it was held. The chairman of the committee sat as a subcommittee of one and called the meeting to order. There were no witnesses produced, nothing but the report of the investigator, Mr. J. B. Matthews, which was inserted in the record and later given widespread publicity in the newspapers of the country. It was an attack on consumer and cooperative organizations which seek to protect the housewife from profiteering, alleging that all had their inspiration from the same source—Moscow. The report was credited to the Dies committee, at least in the headlines, but that was repudiated by my colleague from New Mexico, Congressman JOHN J. DEMPSEY, Democrat, and by my colleague from California, Congressman JERRY VOORHIS, Democrat, both of whom attacked that report. The gentleman from California [Mr. Voorhis] said:

This report was purely and simply the opinion of one man.

That is an accurate characterization but who is the one man? He is Mr. J. B. Matthews, chief investigator of the Dies committee, a renegade Communist and formerly associated with Consumers Research, Inc., a rival consumer organization which was completely spared by his report. Mr. Matthews is still connected, by marriage, with the Consumers Research, Inc., because his wife, Grace Matthews, is a member of the staff and associate editor of this organization's magazine. This one-man committee, Mr. Matthews, is the same gentleman whom the newspapers reported as dropping in for dinner one night at the home of George Sokolsky, who once was paid $6,000 by the National Association of Manufacturers as ghost writer and pamphleteer. Present at the Sokolsky dinner was Robert Lund, of St. Louis, former president of the Manufacturers' Association, and head of the Lambert Pharmacal Co., manufacturers of Listerine. Another guest was F. J. Schlink, president of Consumers Research.

There can be little doubt but that Mr. Matthews' report was for the purpose of discrediting consumer organizations actively engaged in trying to secure a fair deal for the consuming public and also discredit the Federal Trade Commission which had issued in August 1939 a complaint against the Hearst Magazines, Inc. From a conservative Republican member of the Federal Trade Commission I learned that the advertisers themselves who had advertised in the Good Housekeeping magazine, under the seal of approval of that magazine, admitted their advertisements were false and misleading and agreed to cease and desist; but the Hearst Magazines, Inc., evidently feeling that it was a law unto itself and above the authority of the Federal Trade Commission, sought to avoid its guilt by countering with the allegation that the charges against it were Communist-inspired and threatening an exposé.

After the Dies committee had held those hearings, the releases of the report were given out by Mr. Berlin in New York. The report was known to Hearst Magazines, Inc., before it was given to the press and the mimeographed release was prepared jointly for the private use of Mr. Berlin of the Hearst organization and for the official use of Mr. Matthews of the Dies committee. Think of it. An investigation committee, created by the House of Representatives, being used to serve a selfish and private interest. It is, to put it mildly, a perversion of the authority granted to it by the House.

Mr. Matthews, the investigator, evidently felt that, in order to effect his purpose, all of the other members of the committee should be kept in utter darkness for they might ask too many questions. Is that not the reason for this secret meeting?

Mr. Speaker, you can cut men's throats with whispering, you can blast their reputations with either loose talk or deliberate misstatements in the name of the Dies committee. These things which I have spoken to you about are disgraceful and un-American and in themselves demand investigation. They can and will be stopped. I hope and I believe that other members of the committee will join me in seeing that they are remedied to the end that we can carry on our investigation in a calm, judicial, more honest, and more accurate manner. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON].

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to this body to vote down the previous question. Otherwise we can offer no amendments to this resolution. This is an ironclad gag rule. I want to offer this amendment:

After the period in line 11, add the following: "Provided, That all members of said committee are expressly prohibited from receiving any emoluments from writing or speaking as members of said committee, and a violation shall be punished by a fine of $1,000."

Likewise, there are other safeguards that should be put into this resolution. I understand they are prepared and are ready to be offered from the floor. I appeal to you, in common decency, to vote down the previous question so that amendments can be offered to this resolution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, as I have stated this afternoon, I have reported this resolution, though opposed to it, to carry out a mandate of the majority of the Rules Committee who voted for its consideration. A further reason for reporting the resolution was to give opportunity to some courageous Members of the House to express their views on the unfair tactics, press releases, and publicity given out by the chairman and personnel of the committee in advance of hearings without a check having been made as to the truth or falsity of such statements submitted to the chairman by irresponsible publicity seekers or those affiliated with organizations who had an ax to grind. Unfortunately, some statements were issued by the chairman of this special committee without the knowledge of members of the committee as they stated to me and before they had an opportunity to go over the evidence. The procedure of the committee was so contrary to all rules of procedure that injustice has been done in many instances and persons of highest standing have been placed in a false light and their patriotism and loyalty questioned.

Mr. Speaker, a great deal of evidence pertaining to the Nazi activities was known to me 2 years previous to the formation of the Dies committee, it having been disclosed by the McCormack-Dickstein investigating committee.

Like the gentlemen from Michigan and New York [Mr. HOFFMAN and Mr. FISH], I have received many telegrams from members of the American Legion.

Some of the high American Legion officials frequently mislead the membership. If the rank and file of the Legion membership were familiar with the unfairness of this special investigating committee, I know they would not allow their names to be signed to the many telegrams and petitions that have been received. I know that the rank and file of the American Legion and other veterans' organizations—the same as all other fair-minded men—are opposed to shamefully blasting the reputations of loyal and patriotic men and women. It is quite evident that the attack on labor organizations by the special investigating committee has been for the purpose of weakening or destroying them. I am satisfied that the membership of the American Legion on the whole in my district and city disapproves any action that unwarrantedly injures the fair name and reputation of any worthy individual.

It appears to me that the American Legion officers are being used by the Republicans for political purposes. I am satisfied that the Republicans, naturally, for the political advantages which they believe will inure to them, will cast their votes for the resolution.

Personally I have been and am for a proper investigation not only of the Communists and Nazis but of all other similar un-American organizations. I hope, in view of the assurance that was given by at least three members of the special committee, that henceforth the investigation will be fair, and that people will not be charged unjustly, unfairly, indiscriminately with being undesirable citizens and members of destructive organizations.

Further, it is my hope that the committee will investigate other subversive bodies also, particularly the Christian Front and the Ku Klux Klan. Father Coughlin first disclaimed friendship for the Christian Front, but is now ready to adopt it as his own. That being the case, let the glory be his.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] 5 minutes. I understand the gentleman from New York will do likewise.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 13 minutes.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, in the brief time I have I ask my colleagues to bear with me and let me, if I may, present a factual summarization of the work of the special committee to investigate un-American and subversive activities. It was authorized under House Resolution 282 under date of May 26, 1938, first, to investigate the extent, character, and objects of un-American propaganda activities in the United States; second, the diffusion within the United States of subversive and un-American propaganda that is instigated from foreign countries or of a domestic origin and attacks the principles of government as guaranteed by our Constitution; and third, all other questions in relation thereto that would aid the Congress in any necessary remedial legislation.

What is Americanism and what are un-American activities? Americanism recognizes the existence of a deity and that the fundamental rights of man are derived from deity. Among these inalienable rights are freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom of worship, freedom of assembly, the right to work, and the right to enjoy the fruits of work. In effect Americanism guarantees all of the rights set forth in the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the Bill of Rights. Any force or power, whether of foreign or domestic origin, which limits or circumscribes the citizen or groups of citizens in the enjoyment of these inalienable rights is un-American and subversive.

For more than 18 months your committee has functioned. We have expended $115,000. Save and except the services of one Government official lent us by the Veterans' Administration, we have received no aid from any source other than the money which the House itself voted us through its Committee on Accounts. In this brief space of time we have found and have exposed to the sunlight of publicity a large number of so-called patriotic groups in this country, dissident groups, if I may borrow the term from the distinguished and eloquent little gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]—dissident groups who have cloaked themselves in the garb of patriotism but who in reality are un-American because they appeal to the basest of instincts, the racial instincts, hatred, and to class instincts. These groups have really acted as organized racketeers in filching American citizens out of money to carry on their nefarious activities. Among such groups are the Christian Front and Christian Mobilizers and others whose names are set out in the committee's report.

In addition to these organizations of domestic origin we have also found that three groups have been at work in the social, economic, and political life of America, which were instigated, propagandized, and financed in whole or in part from foreign countries. I refer to the Fascist movement represented by the Black Shirts, the Nazi movement represented by the German-American Bund, and the Communist movement represented by the Communist Party of the United States.

The Fascist movement is very small and there is very little record of its financial transactions. It is so small in membership and has so few sympathizers, its activities and the results obtained may be dismissed as negligible. The vast majority of American citizens of Italian descent have no sympathy for this movement. They appreciate and exemplify good citizenship.

The German-American Bund is the successor of the Friends of New Germany. The Friends of New Germany contained many aliens within its ranks whose activities were so nefarious that many of its members were prosecuted in this country for espionage and sabotage. Many fled the country to escape prosecution. The bund was organized in Buffalo, N. Y., in 1936 with Fritz Kuhn as its leader. He is still its leader, although he now has to direct its activities from the State prison in New York. There are some 20,000 members of this organization and approximately 75,000 sympathizers in this country. Kuhn testified that it was necessary for the bund to be organized in order to give a political voice to the aspirations of a nationalistic minority in this country composed of citizens of German descent. He further testified that the purposes of the organization were to combat Marxism in all its forms and to fight Jewish control in this country. Mr. Speaker, that is the same song and dance that was sung and played which led to the invasion and destruction of the sovereign state of Austria. That was the same song and dance that was sung and played which led to the invasion and destruction of the Republic of Czechoslovakia and later to the rape, desolation, and destruction of Poland. How have they operated in this country? Through a strong group organization composed of 69 units in 19 States organized along military lines. They have conducted military drills in a distinctive uniform under the swastika of Germany. They have sponsored and led a youth movement in this country modeled after the Hitler youth movement, in which American children were taught the German language and Nazi ideology.

The Communist Party is the largest numerically, has been at work the longest in this country, and is the most dangerous dissident minority in the United States of America. [Applause.] From its inception it has been an international movement. For two decades it has carried on its work in this country. From the time of its inception it has been financed well by funds from the Soviet Union. Later the party has flied American citizens of millions of dollars in order to carry on its work. It is well organized, it is well financed, and it embraces a group of the world's master propagandists.

They have operated in three ways: First, they have posed as the friends of organized labor and have attempted to subvert the trade-union movement in America for political purposes. They believe that if they can gain control of the trade-union movement they could order a general strike and overthrow our Government overnight. They have used Trojan-horse tactics to do so; but, thanks be to God, through the vigilance of the leaders of trade-unionism in America, especially in the American Federation of Labor, they thwarted these apostles of disaster and dissent on every hand. As a member of this committee and as an American citizen I pay tribute to the leadership, to the courage, and to the patriotism of the working men and women of America everywhere. [Applause.] I want to express the appreciation of the committee for the magnificent support that has been given us by the largest and most powerful group of organized labor in this country, the American Federation of Labor. The American Federation of Labor is a great labor movement grounded in American ideals and entrenched in the economic life of our Nation.

In answer to the charge that the committee is unfriendly to organized labor I insert herewith a letter from the Honorable William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in which he praises the work of the committee and asks for its continuance.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the extension of my remarks a letter from Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in which he praises the work of the committee and calls on the Members of the House to continue its splendid work.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
There was no objection.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1940.

Hon. JOE STARNES,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The convention of the American Federation of Labor which was held at Cincinnati, Ohio, recently, expressed approval of the work which the Dies congressional committee has performed and of its continuation of the investigation which it is making into the activities of subversive groups within the United States.

In conformity with this action taken by the highest authority within the American Federation of Labor, I am officially requesting that you support such proposal as may be submitted to Congress providing for the continuation of the Dies committee and of an appropriation sufficient to enable it to carry on its investigations.

I cannot conceive of anyone, other than those who may be exposed through association with Communist organizations and Communist-front organizations, objecting to a thorough investigation into the activities of subversive groups by a congressional committee. Those who have no sympathy with these un-American groups, these subversive forces within our social order, who are constantly seeking to change our form of government and to promote revolution, can with perfect propriety give wholehearted support to the work of the Dies committee and to the investigation it has made and which it can continue to make.

The people of our country are entitled to know the truth. We of the American Federation of Labor want them to know the facts. We want those who are undermining our form of government and those who are engaged in subversive activities to be exposed. Ridicule, denunciation, and sarcasm, all directed toward the Dies committee by those who seek to suppress its activities and prevent it from carrying on its important work, can only be looked upon with suspicion. We cannot permit those who engage in such tactics to prevent a thorough investigation and a public exposure of the actions and of the activities of individuals and groups who are engaged in un-American activities, and who are seeking either directly or indirectly the overthrow of our Government.

The preservation of freedom and democracy is a matter of vital concern to all those who believe in our form of government. We can protect ourselves if we know who and what it is that is undermining and attacking our governmental structure. Those who are with us need not fear; those who are against us ought to be exposed. The Dies committee is rendering a great public service. It should be continued until its investigation is completed.

I urge you to support the Dies committee. I appeal to you to vote for an appropriation which will adequately equip the Dies committee to complete the excellent, splendid work which it has thus far carried on.

Sincerely yours,

WM. GREEN,

President, American Federation of Labor.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, they have attempted to seize control of our schools and colleges and poison the wells of thinking of the youth of America. Strange to relate, this state socialism of Communistic Russia has a subtle appeal to the so-called intelligentsia of this land. No one denies the influence of a teacher upon the child. No one who has listened to the testimony given us by college men and women throughout America can deny that they have made some real headway in winning converts to the cause of communism in the ranks of the teachers of America. Therein lies our biggest danger.

They have operated as exponents of twentieth century democracy in our schools and colleges and as exponents of genuine liberalism and defenders of academic freedom. They operate under the guise and mask of liberalism. This disguise makes it all the harder to detect them, because we would do a great injustice indeed to the progress of America if we attempted to place the tag of communism on every man whose ideas differed from our own. It would be an injustice to call every radical or progressive thinker and leader a Communist. But I think we have stripped the mask from the American League for Peace and Democracy and the American Student Union. These are the media through which they have attempted to operate in American college life. Their most effective device, probably, from a political standpoint, is the United Front. The largest United Front organization is the American League for Peace and Democracy, which claims a membership of approximately 6,000,000. The United Front and its related activities in this country probably has a membership of from eight to ten million. Not all of the members are communistic or inclined to the Communist theory, but these Communist organizations are organized or controlled by the Communists to further the Communist Party line and use millions of innocent American citizens as dupes and contributors.

What is the work of the Communist Party in this country? What have we as a committee done to expose it? We have shown that it is an agent of a foreign government which has failed to register as such. We have shown that not only the German-American Bund but the Communist Party follows the line laid down by the parent country, namely, Germany and the Soviet Union. We have shown that the Communists have operated a false passport ring. We have shown that both the German-American Bund and the Communist Party have furnished espionage and sabotage rings for their respective parties for the benefit of those countries which I have named. We have shown that every Communist in this country owes his allegiance to the fatherland, the Soviet Union. I want to call the attention of the Members of this House to the fact that not one single Communist who testified before the committee would declare his allegiance to the United States of America in case of war with the Soviet Union. They stated they would hinder the work of the United States of America or else they would go to jail before they would defend the United States or fight for the United States in a war with the Soviet Union.

The committee has furnished the Department of Justice and the Department of State with testimony and evidence of the violation of laws which have led to further investigation by these agencies. After further investigation indictments and convictions have been obtained in every case. We have also furnished evidence to the War and Navy Departments concerning espionage and sabotage. We have attempted to cooperate fully with the various agencies of the Government in order that to the end that law and order may be established and enthroned. We can investigate but it is not our province to prosecute.

In every instance we have sought to protect and defend the rights of citizens and minorities. At no time has the committee recommended legislation or action which would lead to the suppression of the rights of the citizens or dissident minorities.

Why should this committee be continued? It should be continued for the very purposes that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] said it should be destroyed. It should be continued for the purpose of exposing the activities of minorities in this country, nationalistic minorities, international minorities, who, if their theories of government prevailed, would destroy every vestige of individual freedom and would destroy the rights of dissident minorities in this country.

It is necessary that the people know the facts. An enlightened public opinion is really all we need. Why should this committee be continued? We have a tremendous amount of material accumulated, much of it new, much of which will shed light upon the activities of these groups in the merchant marine, in schools and colleges, in the field of agriculture, and in the field of politics that the country is entitled to know. Secondly, in view of the tense international situation when the world is again hovering on the brink of war which may sweep organized society into the abyss of oblivion we should have a committee of the Congress in being to expose the activities and propaganda efforts of international groups in this country who would attempt to embroil us in the affairs of Europe. America wants peace, she hates war. We are not interested in the imperialistic dreams of Germany and Russia. Not even the Hohenzollerns nor the Czars showed the rapacity and ruthlessness of Hitler and Stalin. No modern nation has ever experienced the bloodshed and destruction of individual freedom as state socialism has imposed upon the unhappy people of Germany and Russia. Finally, Mr. Speaker, we need this committee continued in order to study remedial legislation. It will be necessary to call in the best minds of America and obtain the benefit of the composite picture of progressive and conservative thought of America in framing a remedial legislative program to correct and to cure some of the evils complained of, insofar as legislation can do so.

Finally, and long last, what we ought to do is evolve a constructive program, a program to sell the advantages of democratic government and democratic ideals and institutions to the people of America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SHANNON) there were—ayes 251, noes 8.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 9, strike out "1942" and insert "1941."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

MESSRS. COX, THOMAS F. FORD, FISH, STEFAN, and MARCANTONIO demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 344, nays 21, answered "present" 1, not voting 57, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PEARSON] is unavoidably absent on official business of the House. If present, he would have voted "yea" on the resolution just passed.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] is absent on official business. He has requested me to announce that if he were present he would have voted "yea" on the resolution just passed.

Mr. GARTNER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW], who is absent because of illness, would have voted "yea" on the resolution just passed if he were present.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would have voted "yea."

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I have received a telegram from certain of my colleagues announcing how they would have voted on the resolution just passed. This telegram is signed by Mr. LEA, Mr. KELLY, Mr. COLE of Maryland, Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey, Mr. PEARSON, Mr. HOLMES, and Mr. WOLFENDEN of Pennsylvania, and reads as follows:

In event of record vote on Dies resolution announce for Record absence of undersigned on petroleum investigation that each would, if present, have supported continuance of Dies committee with adequate appropriations.

I also wish to state that if the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER] were here, he would have voted "yea."

Mr. ENGBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, had our colleagues, Messrs. WOLVERTON of New Jersey, WOLFENDEN of Pennsylvania, RICH, WIGGLESWORTH, DARROW, JARRETT, OSMERS, HAWKS, DITTER, THORKELSON, SHORT, DWORSHAK, CURTIS, REECE of Tennessee, and HOLMES been present, they would have voted for the resolution just passed. They were absent either through illness or because of official business.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, due to the indisposition of my colleague the gentleman from California, Mr. KRAMER, he is unavoidably absent. Had he been present he would have voted "yea" on the resolution just passed.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. HULL, is a member of the committee appointed by the Speaker to attend the funeral of the late Senator BORAH, and is absent for that purpose. He has requested me to announce for the Record that had he been present he would have voted in favor of the resolution just passed.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington, Mr. HILL, is necessarily absent from the Chamber on official business of the House, attending the funeral of the late Senator Borah. I do not know how he would have voted on the resolution just passed, and on inquiry I cannot ascertain it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues the gentlemen from North Carolina, Mr. KERR and Mr. DURHAM, are unavoidably absent. I am authorized to say that had they been present they would have voted "yea" on the resolution just passed.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that our colleague the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. STEAGALL, is unavoidably detained in Alabama on important business. If present, he would have voted "yea."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD in connection with the revision of the remarks I made this afternoon a letter received from Mr. William Green, of the American Federation of Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial by William Allen White.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to the remarks I made today I may be permitted to add certain brief editorials with reference to the subject matter of the remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have five legislative days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the Dies resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in my remarks today I may be permitted to include a half dozen telegrams from the American Legion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including an address delivered by the Attorney General, Hon. Robert H. Jackson, at the twentieth anniversary dinner of the Federal Bar Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD congratulating Governor Hell, of Wisconsin, on his determination to remove the oleomargarine tax; and also to include an article on flood control, an editorial from the Arkansas Gazette.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include certain excerpts from some editorial columns in connection with my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include in my remarks today a statement of the Attorney General, Robert H. Jackson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an article entitled "Our Gold Elephant," written by Hon. ROBERT LUCE and appearing in the Investor America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an address by W. Arthur Simpson, director of old-age assistance for the State of Vermont.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief editorial from Municipal Sanitation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a list of important Lake ports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] may be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD on the independent offices appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a copy of my own address before the National Automobile Dealers Association here in Washington, D. C., and to include therein a copy of a bill which I am introducing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

STATEMENT

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS] was absent today, due to illness. He has authorized me to say that if he had been present he would have voted "no" on the Dies resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that my colleague the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] is unavoidably detained at his home today suffering with a severe cold.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleagues the gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER and Mr. WOLFENDEN] are both absent on official business. If present, they would have voted "yea" on the Dies resolution.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privileges of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan rises to a question involving the privileges of the House and offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 366

Whereas Hon. FRANK E. HOOK, of Michigan, on January 22, 1940, obtained leave of the House to insert remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and

Whereas under the leave so given he has caused to be printed in the RECORD as his remarks charges against a Member of this House in his representative capacity, and against a committee of the House; and

Whereas said charges reflect upon the integrity of a Member of the House and upon the integrity of a committee of the House and upon the House as a whole and tend to bring a Member of the House, a committee of the House, and the House as a whole into disrepute; and

Whereas the said charges were not in order and were an abuse of the privilege of the House: Therefore,

Resolved, That the said remarks printed on pages 849, 850, 851, 852, and 853 of the [daily] CONGRESSIONAL RECORD dated January 22, 1940, be, and are hereby, expunged from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and are declared not to be a legitimate part of the official record of the House.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I will not on this occasion repeat any of the statements made in the RECORD, for the reason that those statements are all available to every Member of the House. The only thing I desire to say now in that connection is that a reading of the remarks will show that there is ample justification for the resolution.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook], speaking today and yesterday before the Committee on Rules, complained bitterly about the action of the Dies committee. He charged that that committee had not given a fair hearing to those who wanted to appear. To avoid any like charge, and so that he may have ample time to justify his remarks as presented in the RECORD, I send to the Clerk's desk a motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOFFMAN moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KRAMER, for 3 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. SMITH of Washington (at the request of Mr. LEAVY), for 2 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. ZIMMERMANN (at the request of Mr. WILLIAMS), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. ROMJUE (at the request of Mr. WILLIAMS), indefinitely, on account of serious illness in his family.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL,

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8068) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate shall continue throughout this afternoon without limitation, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8068, and, pending that motion, asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill shall continue through the balance of the afternoon, one-half the time to be controlled by himself and one-half the time by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I merely take this opportunity to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] when we can expect the deficiency bill on parity payments?

Mr. TABER. Well, not today. I do not know. Frankly, the hearings that have been held so far do not justify the resolution. Information has been asked from the Department of Agriculture as to what the facts are. What they are, I do not know. Whether that information will be available tomorrow or not, I do not know. I cannot tell anything about it until I do know.

Mr. STEFAN. I merely want to state to the gentleman that the farmers of my district who have been promised these parity payments for the 1939 crops are very anxious to receive them. I take this opportunity merely to ask when we can expect this bill in the House.

I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8068, with Mr. HOBBS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 55 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, at the outset I wish to express my profound appreciation to my colleagues on our subcommittee, Democrats and Republicans alike, for their friendship and for the fine spirit of cooperation which at all times pervades our committee circle. Our deliberations are entirely free from partisan rancor. I said once before in presenting an appropriation bill that the members of our subcommittee park their politics with their hats in the ante-room, and that still holds true. We appraise the proposals that come before us and reach our decisions on the basis of what we believe to be for the best interest of the country and on no other basis whatsoever. The framing of a large appropriation bill is a long and laborious process, requiring close attention to innumerable details. First we had weeks of hearings and then in executive session we gave careful consideration to the various items, in the light of the justifications and the testimony that had been elicited by cross-examination across the committee table. To the seven able men who serve with me on our subcommittee—Messrs. O'NEAL, JOHNSON, MAHON, CASEY, TABER, McLEOD, and KEEFE—I tender my heartfelt thanks for their undeviating faithfulness to the public interest and their generous tolerance of the shortcomings of their chairman. Our clerk, Marcellus C. Sheild, has had so many compliments showered upon him year after year for his marvelous ability that any panegyric of mine would seem like needless repetition. I shall not try to run the gamut of praise in referring to him but will simply say that our subcommittee's appreciation of Mr. Sheild cannot be expressed in words.

The total of the 1941 bill making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments is $1,032,154,612, as against appropriations for the same Departments amounting to $1,772,577,527.05 for the fiscal year 1940, a reduction of $740,422,915.05. This reduction is explained by the fact that in the reorganization of the Government, the old-age reserve account, a major item, the United States Public Health Service, a large activity, and the Public Buildings Branch of the Procurement Division have been transferred elsewhere, while only the Lighthouse Service, a relatively small establishment, has been transferred into our jurisdiction.

TOTAL CUT $11,491,900 BELOW BUDGET

However, in harmony with the urge for true economy, which seems to be so essential in charting the way to better times, we have cut estimates sometimes very deeply, wherever we thought it possible to do so without injury to essential activities. We have cut $8,057,150 from the estimates of the Treasury Department and $3,434,750 from the estimates of the Post Office Department and we bring before you the bill for the combined Departments cut $11,491,900 below the budget. The appropriations carried in the bill for the Treasury Department are $218,691,530 as against $978,557,563.05 for the current year 1940. For the Post Office Department the total of appropriations recommended by us for 1941 is $813,463,082 as against appropriations of $794,019,964 for the present fiscal year, 1940.

We feel that in bringing the proposed 1941 appropriations of the Treasury-Post Office bill $11,491,900 below the budget estimates we have accomplished a real achievement, especially when the nature of the two Departments is taken into consideration. Both are distinctively service departments, and there is always less room for cutting in such items than there is in the case of many appropriations that are non-service in character. The mails must be moved, Government fiscal operations incident to the relief program and other very expansive activities in which our Government is engaged must be serviced, and the personnel necessary to do these things must be furnished. The Post Office Department, for instance, is showing an upsurge in the volume of mail, and the mails must be handled, whatever the volume may be. So our opportunities to cut have been limited, but we have cut wherever we could do so, with reason and common sense, and we believe that not in any instance where we have applied the pruning knife have we done injury to any essential activity. We have been very careful to provide all of the personnel necessary to enable both Departments to function properly and efficiently.

The admirable committee report prepared by Mr. Sheild which accompanies this bill, explains its provisions very thoroughly and I shall not venture into too much detail but shall content myself with a discussion of some of its main provisions. Let us first look at the postal picture. By and large, it is an attractive picture, for while the total of appropriations we recommend for the Post Office Department in 1941, $813,463,082, seems a large amount it is comforting to realize that the Treasury will be recouped almost entirely for this expense by the revenues of the Postal Service.

POSTAL SERVICE PRACTICALLY SELF-SUSTAINING

The Postmaster General estimates that the postal revenue for the fiscal year 1941 will be $760,000,000 which, if it materializes, will be the high-water mark of income of the Postal Service. This compares with an estimated income of $755,000,000 during the current fiscal year 1940 and an actual income of $745,955,075.24 during the fiscal year 1939 and $728,634,051.36 during the fiscal year 1938. The appropriations for the Post Office Department carried in this bill, as previously stated, are $813,463,082, or an amount $53,463,082 in excess of the anticipated revenue in 1941. The Department estimates that the nonpostal items, that is to say the departmental penalty mail, the congressional franking mail, the domestic and foreign air-mail subsidy and other nonpostal items, will amount to $51,000,000 in the fiscal year 1941, which would reduce the gross estimated deficit of $53,463,082 to an estimated net deficit of less than $2,500,000.

Furthermore, it is the opinion of the Post Office Department officials that the estimated increase in postal revenue of only $5,000,000 over the estimated revenue for 1940 errs on the side of conservatism and that the increase in revenue, judging from all present forecasts, will really be much greater than $5,000,000, in which event the Postal Service may come out of the "red" and have a surplus by the end of the fiscal year 1941. That would not be a new experience, for after deducting nonpostal items the Department had a surplus in 1935, 1937, 1938, and 1939. The 1939 surplus was $14,547,795.30.

Recent added costs resulting from decisions of the Civil Aeronautics Authority increasing the pay of air-mail contractors, the granting of vacation and sick leave to substitutes as provided by a recent act of Congress, etc., have increased postal expenditures, and there is an anticipated net deficit for the current fiscal year of $2,290,079. In testifying before our subcommittee, Mr. W. W. Howes, the First Assistant Postmaster General, predicted that the small net deficit estimated in 1941 "will disappear completely if, as we have every reason to believe, the earnings from 1941 postal service exceed the forecast."

That this is not a wild guess but a reasonable assumption is indicated by the growth in the volume of postal business which is general throughout the country and which promises to reach still higher levels. The United States Postal Service is a service organization with a total of 263,601 employees, and there is no thought or purpose on the part of those connected with its administration to convert it into a money-making establishment, but it is interesting to know that it is one department of Government that virtually pays its way.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROMOTIONS

We are carrying in this bill a provision in reference to administrative promotions which is identical with the provision in the independent offices bill that passed Congress last week. It conforms to a policy agreed upon by the Appropriations Committee to be carried in all of the regular 1941 appropriation bills. The subject of administrative promotions was brought to the front when the Budget Bureau sent to Congress with the Budget estimates a few weeks ago a proposed formula for general administrative promotions. In the report on the Treasury-Post Office Departments' appropriation bill for 1940 we suggested that the Budget Bureau make a study of this perplexing question with a view to recommending a plan for uniformity in promotions. Heretofore promotions have been haphazard and irregular, based on lapses and savings, and it was thought that a promotion method might be devised that would iron out these injustices and irregularities.

To give a one-step promotion to all Government employees who come within the scope of the Budget's formula would require about $3,000,000 of new money and an estimated $4,000,000 more to be derived from lapses and savings. The Appropriations Committee decided that, with national finances in the shape they are at present, a plan as comprehensive as was proposed in the Budget formula could not be justified at this time. It was decided to eliminate the new money proposed for administrative promotions and to authorize a distribution of the $4,000,000 estimated lapses and savings according to a provision which is carried in the independent offices bill and in this bill in the following language:

The total amount used on an annual basis for administrative within-grade promotions for officers and employees under any appropriation or other fund made available in this act shall not exceed the amount determined by the Bureau of the Budget to be available for such purpose on the basis of the Budget estimate for such appropriation or fund exclusive of new money in any such Budget estimate for such administrative promotions.

If promotions are made under this rule the burden will be placed on bureaus and agencies of finding promotion money in lapses and savings. This can hardly be regarded as a definite and final solution of the promotion problem but at this time when so many of our fellow citizens are jobless, with no income at all, it is not considered likely that the public sentiment of the country would approve a general plan of promotions in the Government service. Pursuant to the formula of the Appropriations Committee we have deleted all of the items for administrative promotions for the Treasury and Post Office Departments wherever they appeared in the estimates submitted by the Budget Bureau. It will be permissible to make promotions only where money can be found in lapses and unexpended balances.

ALL SERVICE ITEMS ALLOWED IN FULL

For all of the main functions of the Postal Service requiring personnel, we deemed it prudent to allow the full Budget estimates. It is a truism that the mails have to be moved and it would be bad business to deny the personnel necessary to handle them. The principal Budget estimates for personnel which we allowed in every instance in toto are as follows: Clerks, first- and second-class post offices, $205,000,000, and this is the largest item, I may say, in the Post Office Appropriation bill; clerks, third-class post offices, $8,000,000; clerks in charge of contract stations, $1,600,000; city delivery carriers, $143,480,000; Railway Mail Service, $56,283,000; Rural Delivery Service, $91,840,000.

Our subcommittee did not subtract a dollar from the budget estimates for any of these groups and if the volume of mail should increase to an unexpected and sensational extent the substitute rolls can be drawn upon for the additional personnel needed. A table on page 13 of the hearings shows that the number of clerks in first- and second-class offices on November 30 last was the highest of all times. On that date there were 76,469 clerks in the service, or more than double the number employed in the prosperous years 1928 and 1929. The number of city delivery carriers in the service on November 30 last, 57,459, also established a peak record for all time in the carrier service, as shown by the same table. These high personnel levels will be carried forward into the fiscal year 1941. Should funds for these service operations become exhausted at any time the doors of the deficiency subcommittee are always open for additional appropriations and we feel that we have made ample provision for all postal services in allowing the full budgetary estimates.

MONEY ALLOWED TO EXTEND RURAL DELIVERY

We have provided in this bill for a reasonable extension of the Rural Delivery Service by allowing $100,000 for new routes and $245,000 for extensions, in addition to the cost of maintenance of existing service. The Department estimates that this will permit the establishment of 75 new routes and 4,000 extensions. Under the program allowing this additional money, all of the new routes that have been approved can be established. The Department has on hand 2,018 applications for extensions that have been approved. In other words, the number of approved applications for extensions on hand is only about half the number that can be established under the money provided in this bill. The amount recommended for the Rural Delivery Service in this bill is $91,840,000, which is $240,000 more than the amount for the current fiscal year.

The Budget estimates sent to us proposed the creation of 25 new positions as inspectors in the Postal Service. This increment of new personnel would have cost $65,000 a year in salaries, with commensurate increases in the travel item and the clerical expenses at headquarters in Washington. We are loath at all times, and especially in a period of distressed national finances, to increase the permanent office-holding personnel unless there are imperative reasons for doing so. In this instance it appeared that enlargement of the inspection force might be deferred, without prejudice, and we disallowed the increase. There are now 615 inspectors and without disparagement to the outstanding importance of this arm of the Postal Service it may be pointed out that Congress has been fairly liberal in building up this force. In 1936 we allowed 15 new inspectors; in 1937, 35; in 1938, 15; in 1939, 10; and in 1940, 5; or a total of 80 additional inspectors during the last 5-year period.

DOMESTIC AIR MAIL

We have made provision for the continuance of domestic air mail on the basis of the maintenance of the existing Service with $96,005 additional for increased frequencies. The Budget submitted an estimate of $50,000 to create a new set-up which would function as an agency to advertise the air mail. The ultimate magnitude of this new creation was not indicated, however, by the limited size of the proposed initial appropriation but the fact that the Department asked the Budget to approve $200,000 to start the new enterprise pointed to the probability that this unit, once established, would seek expanding appropriations. We tried to look at the proposal objectively, with a view to the best interests of the Service, and with due regard to the fact that it involved an entirely new policy, since no other postal facility has ever been singled out for such advertising.

The use of the air mail is growing rapidly without this proposed artificial promotion; the air-postage revenue for 1939 being $16,326,358.27, or more than three times the revenue in 1930 and almost double the revenue from this source in 1936. The prevalent thought in our subcommittee was that an excellent postal facility like the air mail is certain to advertise itself, and we disallowed the item without prejudice and without closing the door for consideration again at some appropriate time in the light of further developments. The domestic air-mail service is a comparatively new activity, but it seems to be making satisfactory progress in every way, and the testimony taken by our subcommittee—page 130 of the hearings—shows that the subsidy in this service is already being washed out to the vanishing point. One deterrent to putting on an air-mail advertising campaign is that every letter sent by air mail deprives the Post Office Department of the revenue from the sale of a 3-cent regular postage stamp, and often also the revenue from the sale of a special-delivery stamp, and it did not seem to your subcommittee that much advantage would accrue from building up one branch of the service at the expense of another.

The domestic air-mail appropriation carried in this bill does not provide for any new routes, the reason for that being as follows: Under recent legislation new domestic air-mail routes can only be established by the Civil Aeronautics Authority on a basis of convenience and necessity. Our committee has a settled policy of not appropriating for new routes until such routes are authorized by the Civil Aeronautics Authority. Otherwise we would be in the position of appropriating for routes which conceivably may not be established at all. When new routes are established, the Civil Aeronautics Authority has only to certify that fact to the subcommittee on deficiencies for deficiency appropriations. The amount provided in this bill carries on all of the existing domestic air-mail service at the rates of pay fixed by the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

FOREIGN AIR MAIL

We now come to the foreign air mail service. There the financial picture is not quite so attractive for the subsidy, instead of being near to the vanishing point, amounted to $5,313,532.14 in the fiscal year 1939. However, every passing year more clearly emphasizes the great importance of the foreign air mail service to the United States, both politically as well as in the sense of trade and commerce. The trans-Atlantic service, which we authorized a few years ago, is exceeding all expectations and if it were not for the dislocations and impediments imposed upon this service by the war in Europe it would already be producing a handsome revenue based upon the established postage rate of 30 cents a half ounce.

We are carrying in this bill $1,301,035 for a full year's service to New Zealand, which opens the way to Australia with its teeming millions. It is not anticipated that air mail on the long Pacific reaches, either to New Zealand or to Hong Kong and Manila, will ever be self-sustaining from mail revenue but those services are important from the standpoint of maintaining American prestige and building up ties of friendship and commerce. The trans-Atlantic service, on the other hand, promises in normal times to become lucrative from the revenue standpoint. With conditions as they are in Europe the estimated revenues of trans-Atlantic service rose for the first time above the $100,000 mark last October or, to be exact, $114,371, which was 66.19 percent of the operating cost. It is easily conceivable that with the return of peace this service will become a valuable revenue-producing operation.

We now come to an important item of increase in air mail service to South America which we have approved in this bill. We have allowed $1,926,462 to provide additional frequencies in the air service to that continent. This will permit an additional round trip per week on the present route on the east coast of South America from Port of Spain to Buenos Aires and on the west coast from Mexico City to Buenos Aires. The present air service does not provide for a frequency which can be expected to properly develop air-mail service and trade relations between the United States and South American points. The increased frequencies provided for should prove of great benefit in developing new business.

IMPORTANCE OF FOSTERING FRIENDSHIP OF LATIN AMERICA

Nor could we overlook in the consideration of this bill the political implications involved in fostering a closely knit community of nations in the Western Hemisphere, with common interests and ties, bent on enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine. It seems that whatever we can reasonably do to bind the nations of the Western Hemisphere together in bonds of commercial intercourse and amity will be wisely done. There was testimony in abundance that these additional frequencies will go a long way toward establishing closer, better, and friendlier relations with our neighbors at the South and that the effect would be to harmonize perfectly with Secretary of State Hull's program of drawing all nations of this hemisphere closer together.

Aside from the advantages that might accrue in the field of international relations there was testimony, very impressive testimony, that with European air services to South America bogging down on account of the war we are face to face with a golden opportunity to entrench ourselves for future trade and commercial advantages if we lose no time in strengthening our air service to South America. It was an impressive showing and our subcommittee was unanimous in believing that these additional frequencies should be granted.

There was one provision in the postal estimates which we felt obliged to deny, notwithstanding its very strong humanitarian appeal. It was an item in the estimates for powerboat service appropriating $55,000 to carry mail, passengers, and freight by steamboat or other powerboat of American registry on the route from Seward by points on Kenai Peninsula, Kodiak Island, Alaska Peninsula, the Aleutian Islands, to Umnak Island and points on Bristol Bay and vicinity and back under a schedule to be prescribed by the Postmaster General.

Testimony showed that this was an effort of persons outside the Postal Service to achieve a worthy humanitarian purpose by tying it to the fiction of a postal item. The Alaska Steamship Co. has withdrawn service from that section and this has marooned the unfortunate residents of that out-of-the-way region and has deprived them of the means of ingress and regress. It was testified that one small boat makes occasional trips in that region, but that its capacity is utterly inadequate and that if an epidemic should break out there would be no way of transporting the sick to the nearest hospital. In fact, it was stated that one good-hearted captain who operated a Government small boat actually carried a sick man to a hospital at one time on his boat and was fined $1,000 for his good Samaritan act. The appropriation was strongly urged by the diligent Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND], but he did not attempt to justify it as a postal item. The postal revenue from the operation would be practically nothing.

A DIFFICULT DECISION

We were faced with the decision as to whether we should establish this purely humanitarian service under the guise of a postal expenditure. The Post Office Department is already carrying the burden of a lot of items that are not postal in character, such as the sale of baby bonds for which it is only partially reimbursed, the excess of expense, over cost in handling country newspapers, and so forth, and we did not feel that we would be justified in foisting this additional nonpostal activity on the Postal Service, as much as we sympathize with the people of Alaska and their able champion, Mr. DIMOND. It is our hope that some arrangement may be made to have United States Government vessels of the Coast Guard or some other service reorganize their schedules so as to furnish the boat service which the people of that region so sorely need.

COTTON VERSUS JUTE

There is one other postal matter to which I desire to direct attention before I proceed to the Treasury items. In the 1940 Post Office appropriation bill the following language was inserted, after a strenuous controversy:

Not more than three-fourths of the funds herein appropriated for the purchase of twine shall be expended in the purchase of twine manufactured from materials or commodities produced outside the United States.

Under that law, experiments have been conducted which show that cotton twine and jute twine are equally serviceable for postal uses. The price differential, so far as shown by the experiments up to date, is in favor of jute but in a warring world anything may happen, and in reply to a question, Mr. Purdum, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, said it is conceivable that conditions may arise as a result of international relations whereby jute will become more expensive than cotton. It seemed to us, therefore, only fair that the experiments should continue and we are carrying the same language in the 1941 appropriation bill. I may add that Mr. Purdum, who administers the law, strongly recommended that this be done.

DECISION IN RE EMERGENCY PERSONNEL

For a number of years we have been faced in the Treasury estimates with requests that blocs of personnel that are being paid from emergency funds be transferred to and fused into the regular organization of various offices. The representation that usually is made is that these employees have for a long time been engaged on regular work and that they are needed as permanent employees. Some of the emergency agencies are disappearing from the picture, and others apparently will be liquidated before many months or years, and this helps to create an urge among emergency employees to get on the regular rolls where they will be more secure and less tempest-tossed.

Wherever it appeared that a bona fide and conclusive case had been made for the conversion of emergency employees into regular employees, we have fused the emergencies into the regular staffs in preparing this bill, but we propose to put an end to the practice by asking the subcommittee on deficiencies to include the following language in the next relief act—

No employees shall be paid from relief funds who are engaged in work of the Treasury Department not incident to relief.

We believe that this language, if adopted, will establish a permanent line of demarcation between regular and emergency personnel and will avoid the danger of loading down the regular rolls with emergency employees who have not been inducted through regular civil-service channels.

INTRODUCING A NEW PERSONNEL DIVISION

In this bill we have set up in the Treasury Department a new title and a new division to be known as the Personnel Division. The new division will absorb the old Division of Appointments, with added latitude of authority in bringing about a more uniform and better administration of personnel problems, which was the objective of the President's Executive order of June 24, 1938. We have set up this division on the basis of the status quo of December 15, 1939, with 57 employees, salaries aggregating $115,360, and 7 other employees with salaries aggregating $19,240 engaged in personnel work in other bureaus who will be transferred under the provisions of this bill to the Division of Personnel. The Budget asked for the considerable sum of $185,000 to create this Division with more personnel than we thought justified. We believe that an effective working set-up can be made on an appropriation of $134,600, or $50,400 less than the Budget estimate, and with the limitations above described.

THE VINSON-TRAMMELL ACT

In recent years, multifarious acts of Congress have imposed new duties on the Bureau of Internal Revenue and this, of course, requires an expanding personnel. It is axiomatic that if Congress desires a proper execution of the duties it imposes it must provide personnel adequate to do the job. Among the statutes passed by Congress is the Vinson-Trammell Act under which contractors for the construction of naval vessels must pay to the Treasury all profit in excess of 10 percent on the contract price, and contractors for Army and naval aircraft must pay to the Treasury all profit in excess of 12 percent. With an enormous defense expansion program under way, the Bureau of Internal Revenue is about to feel the full impact of the Vinson-Trammell Act. So far 3,900 contracts and subcontracts have been let which will be subject to the Vinson-Trammell Act.

The total money volume of all contracts on record is in excess of $450,000,000. Obviously the detailed examination of all of these contracts to determine the factors of cost and the proper basis on which to apply the law will require an enormous amount of detailed work. The recaptures to date have been about $3,000,000 but this is only a start. The maximum single contractor's profit reflected on any one of the reports that have so far been considered amounted to $570,891.47 and represented 27.45 percent of the contract price.

The large appropriations for national defense purposes are causing the work to flow into the Bureau of Internal Revenue in such volume that an increase of force is absolutely necessary to do the work imposed by the Vinson-Trammell Act and to protect the interest of the Treasury. The Budget submitted an estimate of 7 new employees at headquarters here, 100 field agents and 25 clerks with a combined salary roll of $360,240 to perform the duties of the Vinson-Trammell Act. We allowed the headquarters personnel 75 field agents and 15 clerks, a total of 97 persons with salary and other expenses aggregating $281,840 and we believe that with careful administration this provision will be sufficient.

The total amount carried in the bill for the Bureau of Internal Revenue is $104,968,760, an increase of $2,822,060 over the current 1940 appropriation and $360,900 under the budget request. The principal cut in the budget estimate is $539,500 which had been set up for administrative promotions, $55,500 in Washington and $484,000 in the field.

INCREASE FOR TAX REFUNDS

We approved the full budget estimate of $42,000,000 for refunding ordinary internal revenue collections, although that amount is $4,000,000 above the 1940 appropriation. However, a deficiency of $29,000,000 for 1940 is indicated which brings the total amount for this fiscal year up to $57,000,000. Expenditures during the first 5 months of the present fiscal year ran at an annual rate in excess of $65,000,000. It is good business to pay these refunds as soon as possible since under the law they draw interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum. The Government can borrow money at a fraction of that interest rate and accumulated refunds pile up a charge on the Treasury that can be avoided by prompt payment.

GRATIFYING DECREASE IN DRUG ADDICTION

Our subcommittee was well pleased with a report by H. J. Anslinger, Chief of the Bureau of Narcotics, showing a marked decrease in drug addiction, and we allowed the Bureau the full amount of its estimate for operating purposes so that its good work may continue. Testifying in regard to the progress that has been made in controlling this evil, Mr. Anslinger stated that in 1924 there was 1 drug addict to every 1,000 population in the United States, whereas there is today, at most, 1 to every 3,000 of the general population. I quote as follows from Mr. Anslinger's testimony as shown on page 431 of the hearings:

So far as opium, morphine, heroin, and cocaine are concerned there is a very decided decrease in the number of addicts. About the year 1880 there was 1 drug addict to every 400 inhabitants. At that time there was hardly a family that did not have a drug addict somewhere in the connection. Opium was the popular method used in committing suicide. Infants were fed soothing sirup containing opium. At that time 350,000 pounds of opium were imported into the United States for a population of only 47,000,000. Today we import 150,000 pounds for a population of 130,000,000. In the United States the consumption of drugs has decreased from 53 grams per capita to 8 grams per capita. Whereas at one time we received 5 tons of illicit heroin from one European country, we do not receive any today. European governments have now enacted legislation and do not export drugs unless an importation authorization is issued.

Mr. Anslinger recommended amendatory legislation providing heavy penalties for dope peddlers, ranging as high as 10 years in the penitentiary to take the confirmed offender "out of circulation," as he expressed it. He gave the Harrison Act, passed in 1914, credit for reducing drug addiction 50 percent.

A very important service is the Coast Guard.

Recognizing that the Coast Guard has very trying duties to perform, both in its regular and emergency activities, we have been very liberal with it in framing this bill, in respect to both its A and B budgets. Its A budget is its regular budget and its B budget has reference to its duties in enforcing the neutrality law. We have found Admiral Waesche, the head of the Coast Guard, to be a very alert and capable official who knows how to take care of his own in his battles for adequate appropriations. Although on general principles we are averse to a merger of separate appropriations we have granted a consolidation of eight titles in the Coast Guard appropriations under the new head of "General expenses, Coast Guard." The titles consolidated are "Outfits," "Fuel and water," "Rebuilding and repairing stations," "Communication lines," "Contingent expenses," "Repairs to Coast Guard vessels," "Repairs to Coast Guard aircraft," and "General expenses, Lighthouse Service."

LARGE SAVING PROMISED

We have approved this consolidation rather hesitantly, but on the promise of the Coast Guard Commandant that he will guarantee a saving of $960,800 a year as a result of it and his further assurance that he will make as complete a detailed annual statement to the Appropriations Committee of his operations and expenditures as he has heretofore made. The advantage claimed for the consolidation is that it will make possible greater flexibility and efficiency of administration.

The total amount recommended in this bill for the Coast Guard A and B budgets is $41,463,035, and while that seems a large amount, compared with former appropriations, it is a reduction of $3,594,035 below the Budget.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I was just wondering if the gentlemen could tell us whether or not, in his opinion, the United States is going to be able to enforce this neutrality zone regarding which agreement was had with the South American republics?

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota that that is the theory on which this B budget has been submitted to the committee and the theory on which these appropriations were made: That the Coast Guard had a function to perform in the enforcement of our neutrality. I am not prepared to say that its function extends as far from shore as the limits of the zone which the Panama Conference sought to establish.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. My purpose in asking that question is because the gentleman, as everyone knows, has been a real student of international relations. I am wondering if the gentleman, in his opinion, feels that we are wise in attempting to implement the Coast Guard with funds to enforce a neutrality zone of 600 miles.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman, I take it, wants my individual opinion on that.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman is qualified to give an opinion on this subject.

Mr. LUDLOW. I cannot speak for our subcommittee, but I myself do not believe it is a wise policy. It is inconceivable to me that we should voluntarily assume the obligation and the hazard of enforcing a neutrality zone of such width, but I understand the funds in this bill would be needed for enforcement of neutrality regardless of the dictum of the Panama Conference.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. Certainly.

Mr. MAHON. In making this appropriation we do not propose to limit the work of the Coast Guard to enforcing any particular neutrality law. There is a lot of other work irrespective of this neutrality zone, additional work that the Coast Guard must perform. Is not this true?

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman is absolutely correct. The B budget, as my colleague knows, is based on the enforcement of our neutrality. That embraces many duties besides patrol work, although that is, of course, important.

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. It is not entirely devoted, of course, to patrol work, for there are many other functions, as the gentleman from Texas so well says, in connection with the enforcement of neutrality for which money is provided. The neutrality patrol is cooperative between the Coast Guard and the Navy. I think this answers the gentleman's question.

The Budget Bureau recommended a large appropriation, amounting to $2,199,000, for additional Coast Guard airplanes, with which it was proposed to purchase eight long-range seaplanes at a cost of $1,520,000 and seven intermediate planes at a cost of $679,000, for enforcement of neutrality. We felt that this estimate was excessive in view of the fact that naval airplanes in large numbers are actively engaged in neutrality patrol work. We reduced the item from $2,199,000 to $500,000 without seeking to apply the lesser amount to the purchase of any particular type of aircraft, but leaving that to the discretion of Admiral Waesche and his associates.

UNDERWATER SOUND DEVICES DISAPPROVED

One Coast Guard item which we disallowed was an estimate in the amount of $1,820,000 for the installation of underwater sound-detecting devices on 70 Coast Guard vessels, 21 cutters, and 49 patrol boats. The unit cost of these proposed installations would be $40,000 per cutter and $20,000 per patrol boat. While I am sure that all of the members of our subcommittee believe in adequate preparedness, it seemed that this estimate was a little extreme. My personal reaction to it was about the same as that of Chairman VINSON of the Naval Affairs Committee when he was moved the other day to disapprove the expenditure of half a billion dollars for naval vessels for which there appeared to be no real necessity. Admiral Waesche, Chief of the Coast Guard, testified—page 671 of the hearings—that he would not have suggested this appropriation for sound-detecting devices if he had not been asked to do so in a letter from the Navy Department. I call attention to the following testimony on page 671:

Admiral WAESCHE. I would not say that if it were to be used exclusively for regular work we would be justified in asking for $1,800,000 for the use we would get out of it in the peacetime work of the Coast Guard.

Mr. LUDLOW. You would not have suggested this if it had not been for the Navy, would you?

Admiral WAESCHE. No, sir.

The Navy, which cooperates with the Coast Guard in patrol duty, now has 281 vessels equipped with the underwater sound-detecting device and it will soon have 168 more, or 449 in all. It was testified by Admiral Johnson—see page 668 of the hearings—that it would require only about 15 days to equip a vessel of the first-class type with one of these devices. In case of war, or an emergency approaching war, the Coast Guard would immediately become a part of the Navy automatically, and the Navy would have funds available to make these installations out of naval appropriations. The brief time required to make the installations would indicate that the item can be deferred without jeopardy. It seemed to your subcommittee that under these circumstances it would be the part of wisdom to hold the Coast Guard for the present in a peacetime status, as far as this equipment is concerned, and allow developments to demonstrate the need of a future program.

WE BELIEVE OUR BILL IS SOUND AND JUST

This bill, as I stated at the outset, covers a vast latitude of governmental operations. The United States Postal Service is the largest civil organization anywhere in the world.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Will the gentleman tell me whether consideration has been given to the air-mail pick-up service; will the gentleman tell us something about this?

Mr. LUDLOW. I may state to my colleague from Iowa that adequate provision has been made to continue the pick-up service. The reports of the Post Office Department officials were quite flattering as to the success of this service. It has been experimented with only a short time, of course, but there is every disposition and intention on the part of the Department and on the part of the committee to continue the experiment, because we feel there is something good in it and that a continuation of the experimentation and of the appropriation is justified.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Will experiments be continued on additional routes?

Mr. LUDLOW. This, of course, has been left to the determination of the Post Office Committee. In our bill we did not try to specify any of the routes.

If there are no further questions, Mr. Chairman, I will conclude. I have discussed only some of the high lights of the bill, as obviously I could not do more. We have prepared a bill which we believe to be sound in principle and reasonable and just in its details. In commending it to your consideration I wish to thank you for your patience in listening to me for so long a time. [Applause.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 23 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, representatives of the Canadian Government are here in Washington today. They are in conference with representatives of our State Department, discussing a subject of vital importance to the people of this Nation. That subject is the consummation of an agreement between the United States and Canada looking toward the completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway, a project which I want to designate today as the master project of the North American Continent.

Mr. Chairman, on the 11th day of January this year in the city of Detroit, Mich., a part of which I have the honor to represent as a portion of my congressional district, the Seventeenth of Michigan, the General Motors Co. held a celebration of the building of the twenty-fifth millionth automobile by that company. On that occasion Mr. Charles F. Kettering, noted and famous engineer, inventor, and manufacturer, delivered a very stimulating and appropriate address. Among other things, he said:

The world isn't finished. In fact, it isn't started, because we are just now learning how to get out of the great difficulties which most people think we have gotten ourselves into. We have an excess of men, money, and materials not because we have too much engineering, not because we have too much technological development, but simply because we haven't enough. With excess of men, money, and materials, what on earth can cause that but a lack of projects? We haven't enough projects.

This appeal for more and new work coming from so distinguished an authority will focus anew fresh attention to a project that has been justly described as the master project of the North American Continent, namely, the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway, with its great potential power possibilities incidental thereto.

When this mighty venture has once secured the approval of the Canadian Parliament and the Congress of the United States it will undoubtedly be administered by a two-country—United States and Canada—Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin commission.

Regardless of objections and obstacles raised by interests which may not clearly comprehend the great importance of this proposed undertaking to a vast inland empire comprising more than one-third of the population of our country, there is a steady and forward march toward the time when the Governments of the 2 countries named will have consummated an agreement which will make possible the final act to complete the last link of 48 miles in a water highway of a thousand miles. It will open the neck of the bottle in a deep-sea waterway that will lead directly to the markets of the world. It will make a dream that has stirred men's vision for two centuries come true. Then for the first time will move unvexed to the seven seas the enormous production of farm and factory of the Middle West and the Great Lakes States. Duluth, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Cleveland, Toronto, Buffalo, together with some 75 other lake ports in both Canada and the United States, will become ocean ports with direct communication to the seaports of the entire world.

There is no comparable area on this earth that includes so many of the requisite qualifications for a master project as the Great Lakes region of the United States. In it is found a temperate but invigorating climate, unlimited quantities of iron ore, coal in abundance or near at hand, oil and mineral salts, varied but fertile soil conditions, adequate rainfall, immense agricultural areas, numerous industrial and commercial cities, ample labor, skilled and unskilled, boundless tracts of virgin timber, unnumbered square miles of recreational expanse, and in the center of it all, an all-wise and generous Providence planted five deep blue, fresh-water seas, the Great Lakes, to provide low cost transportation for raw materials and fabricated products, totaling more than the combined foreign tonnage of all the seaports of the United States. In the latest report of the Chief of the Army Engineers it is shown that the total commerce of the United States for the fiscal year 1938 amounted to 467,000,000 tons, while the total commerce of the Great Lakes was more than 98,000,000 tons, or 21 percent of the entire commerce of the United States moved on the breast of the fresh-water seas, while our total foreign commerce amounted to but 89,000,000 tons.

This vast region, the Great Lakes Basin, embracing the granary and the pantry of two friendly nations, is entitled to consideration, for in it are included 17 States or parts of States of the Union; inhabited by 35 percent of our population. Compared to the total wealth of the United States it produces 38 percent of our manufactured products; 32 percent of the agricultural products; 50 percent of our live stock; 52 percent of our dairy cattle; 72 percent of our hogs; 66 percent of the butter; 45 percent of the eggs; 76 percent of the corn; 64 percent of the wheat; 82 percent of our oats; 33 percent of our wholesale trade; 40 percent of our retail trade; 45 percent of the wages paid to industrial workers; and 41.6 percent of the wages paid to wage earners.

These figures are taken from Senate Document No. 116, Seventy-third Congress, second session, and may therefore be considered as official and reliable.

This mighty seaway with its incidental potential power possibilities—the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence—this master project of the North American Continent will, when completed, create a new seacoast with 3,576 miles of shoreline connecting the very heart of the continent with all the commercial arteries that lead to the ports of the world.

It is indeed a master project. It will serve to stabilize many important industries in their present mid-western location, anchor them there for the benefit of the railroads as well as the utilities which will be supplied with greater power facilities, and for the benefit of all other public conveniences which thrive in prosperous communities.

The people of this country owe a debt of gratitude and an obligation of sincere thankfulness to the pioneer railway builders, and to courageous men and women who risked their capital in the development of private power facilities.

Westward the course of Empire took its way, but not in reality until the indomitable will and courage of American pioneers stretched the lengthening bands of steel, the railroads, and penetrated that boundless domain.

The resulting material profit and progress to the whole country cannot be overemphasized. Cultural values followed in the wake of these daring pioneers, but progress and development have outgrown the limitations of the landlocked period of the Great Lakes Basin. It has reached a stalemate in its history. There can be no standing still in the growth and progress of a region. When progress ceases, decay begins. This great midwest section needs new transportation facilities for further expansion, and that facility is the master project which I am discussing.

Its size and international character challenge the attention of the world. It will provide navigation for large seagoing ships and accommodate 85 percent of all the ships on earth along this international boundary of 2,700 miles. Its cost is moderate when compared with other Government spending. After deducting the sale of power, which will be developed as incidental to the main project, $18,000,000 a year for 10 years has been estimated sufficient to complete the project.

The time allotted to me does not permit a detailed statement of all the economies which might be marshaled to justify this undertaking, but I shall register a few trite illustrations to show the tremendous importance of low-cost water transportation to an immense section of the country that is now being stifled and retarded in its growth and expansion.

Once the St. Lawrence seaway is opened, more of the manufactured products of the Great Lakes industries, and more of the agricultural products of the Prairie and Midwestern States will reach intercoastal and foreign markets which are now denied to them.

A new market for goods is created only when the cost to reach it is reduced, and the sale of a product is achieved often in the saving of its transportation costs, no matter whether it comes from the factory or the farm.

As an example of the low cost of water transportation a ton of coal can be shipped from Buffalo, N. Y., to Duluth, Minn., a distance of 1,000 miles, for about the same cost required to move it from the curb in front of your home to your cellar window.

About two and one-half million bushels of American apples reached European markets last fall, but not one bushel came from my State of Michigan, a great apple-producing State. Why? Because the cost of transportation to the seaboard is prohibitive. Just as soon as ships can be provided for this trade into the Great Lakes, there will be new markets opened for Michigan apples, and the railroads will lose nothing in freight, for they never had this business. On the contrary, the railroads will gain new business shipping apples to the lake ports once they have been transformed into seaports.

Bread is the staff of life, therefore I consider it most appropriate and fitting to consider wheat. During the crop year 1939 the United States produced 754,971,000 bushels of wheat. This is a decrease in the amount produced in 1915, in which year the United States harvested 1,025,000,000 bushels. Last year the United States exported 63,000,000 bushels of wheat and nearly 8,000,000 barrels of flour. But that was less than the amount exported in 1920 from this country when we exported approximately 218,000,000 bushels of wheat and nearly 20,000,000 barrels of flour. This loss of foreign markets for the "staff of life" is one of the underlying causes which has necessitated Government aid, and last year our Government loaned $114,000,000 on approximately 164,000,000 bushels of wheat. The statement of December 15, 1939, of the Commodity Credit Corporation shows that we purchased outright 1,300,000 bushels of wheat with Government funds.

I do not argue, neither do I advance the theory, that the present railway structure is alone responsible for the drying up of American wheat production and export of that commodity. We must all recognize that the production of wheat outside of the United States has increased in recent years, but it is also true that if the St. Lawrence waterway had been opened from Duluth to the markets of the world, we would have been able to compete on a more equitable and fair basis with the rest of the world in maintaining our markets in foreign fields for that commodity.

Sugar-beet factories in the Great Lakes area, now operating 60 to 90 days per year and many of them entirely shut down and dismantled, might operate all the year round, or a large portion of the time, by utilizing Cuban raw sugar in the off-season period of the year for beets, if the shipment of that commodity could be economically justified by water transportation.

Some consideration and thought might be given to the probable plight of the Michigan petroleum refining industry, when the Michigan oil fields become exhausted. We all know that oil fields do cease to yield and those in Michigan undoubtedly will be no exception, because we know their formation of limestone, low porosity, thin sands, and low rock pressure. I do not believe that it is an unreasonable journey in the field of speculation to say that the St. Lawrence waterway would enable the petroleum refiners of Michigan to bring in oil from Texas by tanker for less than the pipe-line price to Chicago.

Living costs would be reduced for the people in the Great Lakes region and Midwestern States when this seaway is once in operation. Perhaps the Members of the House are not all familiar with the fact that studies of rates on commodities generally consumed in that great midwestern section are now being made in a survey conducted by the Department of Commerce in relation to the economic aspects of the waterway. Honolulu pineapples, California and Florida oranges, Central American bananas, and Texas grapefruit would be consumed in increased quantities if the cost of transportation of these commodities could be reduced.

IT WILL HALT COSTLY DECENTRALIZATION

With the automotive industry that is now undergoing the same experience of every basic industry—decentralization—it is vital to capture for the future all the adverse experience of the past in order that every helpful economy in transportation may be availed of without delay. If this is not done, that industry may gradually diminish and eventually disappear from its present location.

New business blueprinted as a gift of the completed St. Lawrence seaway, cannot be charged as a loss to other types of transportation. There would be no expansion into uncharted markets except for the low-cost water transportation. The St. Lawrence seaway is a transportation unit that will carry its own rewards with market terminals dependent upon relief in freight charges that it alone can offer. When a ship from the Great Lakes region has once reached the Atlantic coast, any port on earth may become its destination.

I desire to point out that in addition to the new local business developed for the railroads and trucks in and out of the lake ports, that will have been transformed into seaports, there would be an increased volume of east- and west-bound rail traffic for more than 5 months of the year when a part of the St. Lawrence waterway is closed. Traffic experts contend that it is impossible to enhance the trade of a region for a part of the year without automatically creating an increase for the remaining portion of the year. When production is speeded up for a portion of the year, there is a natural overlapping of the freight demanding movement into the remainder of the year which, in the case of the St. Lawrence seaway, can be handled by the railroads, and would be handled by the railroads alone.

Chicago is nearer to New Orleans via the St. Lawrence route than New York is distant from San Francisco by way of the Panama Canal, through which passes more than 30,000,000 tons of freight each year. The Mississippi River, with all its tributaries and channels that range from 6 to 9 feet in depth, handles approximately 100,000,000 tons of freight annually. The tonnage of the present 14-foot St. Lawrence-Great Lakes seaway channel going to or coming from lake ports is indeed not very impressive, compared to the two water routes mentioned. However, the best unbiased experts estimate that the increase in the volume of trade from the Great Lakes Basin through deepening the St. Lawrence canals to 27 feet for ocean-going ships, would be so great that both routes would be needed and utilized to their capacity. One is the complement of the other.

When a suit of clothes becomes too small for a growing boy, his parents do not hesitate to provide larger garments. That is precisely the predicament of the Great Lakes region of the United States. It has reached the stage when its commerce requires more room at the throat, and that room can be provided only by loosening and deepening the depths of the St. Lawrence River.

Surely, the vision of Mr. Kettering, proclaimed by him in his recent speech in Detroit, should serve as an inspiring stimulus to the final authorization and completion of this continent's master project—the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. HOBBS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 8068, the Treasury-Post Office Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1941, had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 24, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rt. Rev. John Z. Jasinski, D. D., Bishop of the Polish National Catholic Church of America, Buffalo, N. Y., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Our Gracious God and Most Merciful Father, we humbly stand before Thee in worship and supplication. Let us feel the inspiration of Thy presence. May Thy kingdom come more perfectly in our hearts, as we grow in years, may we grow in the beauty of holiness and human kindness. In the days of prosperity may we not forget Thee, and in the days of affliction we know that Thou will not forget us. We thank Thee for Thy watchful providence in the past and for the promise of Thy guidance in the days to come. Enlarge our hearts that we may have a great vision of national righteousness, of civic integrity, of social service, and conquest of international sin.

O God, exalt our purpose; make divine activities of our vocation. O Lord, in our discouragement, speak to us; in our encouragement, speak to us; in our culture, speak to us; in our ignorance, speak to us; in our gracelessness, speak to us; in our graciousness, speak to us.

O Lord, increase our faith in our American institutions, and encourage us to form our plans and assume our duties and responsibilities in accord with Thy holy will. Almighty God, bless our country, make it great for good and liberty. Make us all good, so that we shall all be after God's manifest nation of greatness.

Our dear Heavenly Father, the high and mighty Ruler of the universe, we beseech Thee most heartily, bless Thy servant, the President of the United States, the Members of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-sixth Congress and all others in authority; and so replenish them with the grace of Thy Holy Spirit, that they may always incline to Thy will, and walk in Thy way. Grant them in health and prosperity long to live; and finally, after this life to attain everlasting joy and felicity. Through Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 419. Joint resolution to extend, for 3 additional months, the time during which articles imported free of duty for exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition or the New York World's Fair, may be sold or abandoned.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6505) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto," disagreed to by the House and agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HUGHES, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. AUSTIN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY and Mr. BENDER asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article from the Pacific Rural Press of January 13, including a tabulated diagram.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Washington Post entitled "A Lincoln Memorial."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by the Honorable John W. Bricker, Governor of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an excerpt from Brian Hooker's translation of Edmond Rostand's Cyrano de Bergerac, as printed in the San Francisco News under the title "Borah Might Have Said It."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

FINNISH RELIEF

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know what disposition the Speaker has made of the letter sent to the Speaker by the President of the United States about Finnish relief. May I ask if the Speaker has referred that letter to any committee of the House?

The SPEAKER. The communication to which the gentleman refers was not a message addressed to the Congress; it was merely a communication addressed to the Speaker of the House. In view of its importance and of the general interest in it, the Chair had it read immediately to the House of Representatives for its information, and the communication was published in full in the RECORD. The letter has not been referred to any committee of the House.

Mr. FISH. Does this mean, then, Mr. Speaker, that any proposed legislation affecting Finnish relief may be considered by various committees of the House, such as the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Committee on Banking and Currency, and so forth?

The SPEAKER. Any measure that may be introduced touching that subject will be referred by the Speaker to the appropriate committee.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the call of the calendar may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8068) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, may I ask the ranking member of the committee on the other side if it is agreeable that we continue general debate throughout this afternoon, without limitation?

Mr. TABER. I believe that will be desirable. I think we should conclude general debate this afternoon and perhaps read the first paragraph so that we may be started on reading the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill may run throughout the day without limitation as to time; the time to be equally divided and controlled by myself and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], and that at the conclusion of the general debate today the first paragraph of the bill may be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8068, with Mr. HOBBS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have today introduced a bill to repeal the National Census of Housing Act of 1939, an act that, if permitted to be administered as now contemplated, will violate the most sacred rights of a free people. It is such a flagrant violation of the sanctity of the home and the intimate affairs of the individual that I absolutely fear that many loyal citizens will refuse to answer these prying questions, thus bringing about thousands of criminal prosecutions, involving fine and imprisonment.

Too frequently under this administration Congress has been urged to delegate its powers to the executive branch of the Government. Invariably when this has been done the language of the acts has been so construed by the Executive as to distort and expand the powers far beyond the intent and purpose Congress had in mind. It would be deplorable if this Congress were to permit a law passed by it to be so construed and administered as to almost force self-respecting citizens, for their own protection, to disobey it.

It is the good citizen to whom we must look for law and order in this country, and this Congress should be the last department of government to unwittingly become the abject tool of totalitarian technique and tyranny.

The housing census should not have been authorized. Its expressed purpose, namely, to aid in the formulation of a housing program, has ceased to be its true objective. Its real purpose stands revealed. The best evidence that it is not to serve as the basis for a housing program is the fact that the so-called housing bill was defeated the day before this census bill came before the House for consideration. I would call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that notwithstanding the defeat of the housing bill, there was enacted the following day this subversive housing-census bill, carrying an authorization of $8,000,000 to inaugurate a snooping program unworthy of this free land of America. It is, however, not unlike the coercive invasion of home and personal privacy which has become the order of the day in Russia and other countries under the tyrannical rule of dictators.

Mr. Chairman, official business made it impossible for me to be present the day this census bill was under consideration; but having heard rumblings that there might be some legislation of a snooping character brought to the floor of the House, I left a pair in opposition to any such bill should one come to the floor for a vote.

I have had the honor to represent a typical American constituency for many years. I claim for those whom I represent every attribute of character and loyal service to our country which one would expect to find as the backbone of true Americanism. They are not averse to answering questions propounded by public officials in the interest of good government, but they resent—and properly so, as free people—the invasion of their private rights and personal privacy by being compelled to reveal information such as is now sought to be obtained under the Census of Housing Act and the question regarding income which is asked for the first time in the population census.

Mr. Chairman, I have received a large volume of mail from my constituents, men and women of whom this Nation may well be proud, who have protested with all the vigor at their command and urged, as true Americans jealous of their rights should do, that this totalitarian program be not put into effect. I wish to quote from a few of these letters which fairly represent the sentiments of my constituents. One citizen writes to me as follows:

We who are fortunate enough to pay income tax have given personal and intimate information to the Government, but not to every Tom, Dick, and Harry in the village, or even among our close friends and acquaintances.

I genuinely object to giving him, or any local person, the amount of my income, for instance. I feel that the Government is getting too close to regimentation in asking for the intimate information required to be asked for when the census is taken. I am voicing this objection, and wish there were some way that this phase of the law could be changed or the information refused.

Another constituent advises me that he has no desire to obstruct or hinder any necessary function of government, but, he says:

I feel that if I am compelled to answer these disagreeable questions it is a violation of my rights as a citizen and householder. I think now that rather than allow this thing to go on I shall choose to be put in jail rather than answer these questions, which can be of no possible use to officials except to further regiment and regulate us.

Summing up, an able newspaper editor advises me:

The American people, it seems, object strenuously to divulging their incomes, mortgages, and other private matters to local enumerators, male or female, and they do not intend to do so unless they are compelled.

In quoting from these letters, I express the hope that no constituent of mine will subject himself to a fine or jail sentence by refusing to answer the questions which the housing census will require unless that act is repealed. I further hope, however, that the House of Representatives will take immediate steps to prevent the army of 120,000 census enumerators from invading the privacy of our 30,000,000 families under the guise of supporting the so-called housing program that has already been defeated by the Congress.

Why spend $8,000,000 on this hastily mobilized horde of men and women to stir up resentment and bitterness in the hearts and minds of the loyal element of this country? It is so un-American and does such violence to our traditions of freedom and our liberty as guaranteed in the Constitution that it is a challenge to the Members of this House—who have taken a solemn oath to preserve, protect, and defend every provision of the great charter of our liberties—to take immediate legislative action to repeal this offensive, threatened violation of the letter and spirit of the Federal Bill of Rights.

Mr. Chairman, it may be that many Members of the House have not examined the many obnoxious questions which appear for the first time in our census history. I say "obnoxious," which is a mild word to apply to the interrogatories that some local appointee will submit to the self-respecting citizens in every congressional district in the United States. I would call attention further to the fact that back of every one of the questions is the threat of a severe penalty or a jail sentence if the individual deviates so much as a hair's breadth from the facts which he is required to reveal. I would invite my colleagues in the House to take these blanks and examine them with considerable care because on April 1, or soon thereafter, unless you repeal the act, each of you will be called upon to explain why you supported this inquisitorial invasion of the personal liberties of the people whom you represent.

I invite your attention to a few of the questions to stimulate your interest:

Aa. Present amount of outstanding indebtedness on first-mortgage or land contract; on junior liens.

Bb. Frequency and amount of regular payments on first-mortgage or land contract.

Cc. Do these regular payments include principal reduction? Yes or no. Real-estate taxes? Yes or no.

Dd. Interest rate on first-mortgage or land contract?

Ee. Type of holder of first-mortgage or land contract: Building and loan associations, commercial bank, savings bank, life-insurance company, mortgage company, H. O. L. C. (Home Owners' Loan Corporation), individual, other.

Mr. Chairman, aside from this housing census, the Secretary of Commerce has injected into the regular population census for the first time, by his own admission, questions demanding to know:

Amount of money wages or salary received (including commissions) for the past 12 months.

Did this person receive income of $50 or more from sources other than money wages or salary? Yes or no.

I call attention to the specific provision of the law which places limitations on the power of Secretary Harry Hopkins to frame questions under this census of population. The act of June 18, 1929, specifically and emphatically provides:

SEC. 4. That the fifteenth and subsequent censuses shall be restricted to inquiries relating to population, to agriculture, to irrigation, to drainage, to distribution, to unemployment, and to mines. The number, form, and subdivision of the inquiries in the schedules used to take the census shall be determined by the Director of the Census, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly obvious that the Congress, when it enacted that law, provided with meticulous care that the census powers granted to the Secretary of Commerce did not delegate more power than specifically set forth in the act but restricted the extent of inquiry which he might pursue. Of course, it was not the intent of Congress that the Secretary of Commerce should have the power to pry into the incomes of our citizens. Consequently, no such question was asked in the census of 1930, nor has it ever been asked before.

Now, I would have the membership of the House refresh its recollection with reference to some of the philosophy that has been in operation in the departments of Government since 1933. I do so because it has a very important bearing on the subject under consideration. There has recently gone out to 5,000 communities an appeal from the Department of Commerce asking that committees of civic leaders be set up to urge cooperation in the coming census. With the appeal there is a report in the nature of a sedative to quiet the nerves of the people who are alarmed and aroused by the questions now to be asked, under penalty, for the first time in our history. You will find in that report this statement:

Census facts have taken on a new value since the Federal Government has embarked on a program of social planning.

Bearing in mind that none other than Mr. Harry Hopkins is head of the Commerce Department and that the Secretary of Commerce is required by law to approve every census question, it is interesting to note the methods suggested by Professor Tugwell for carrying out social planning. I quote from Professor Tugwell:

We begin with small unnoticed changes and end by not being able to resist vast and spectacular ones. * * *

The first series of changes will have to do with statutes, with constitutions, and with government. * * * It will require the laying of rough, unholy hands on many a sacred precedent, doubtless calling on an enlarged and nationalized police power for enforcement.

Mr. Chairman, I know and every Member of the House of Representatives is aware that this country has at last become aroused to a degree where it will no longer tolerate or submit to the technique of planned economy which has been so adroitly, skillfully, and disastrously used by the dictators of Russia and Germany. We know that the planned economy of Russia and Germany required controls which could only be attained by a complete surrender of individual rights. There has been disclosed in recent investigations sufficient evidence to convince the American people that the time has come when every subversive individual and every vestige of his communistic work should be eliminated from every branch of this Government. [Applause.]

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. BENDER. I happened to be here on the day the legislation referred to by the gentleman was adopted, and when the $8,000,000 additional was appropriated I called attention to the fact that practically all of this information was available to us across the street in the Library of Congress and that it was not necessary to carry on this work. I also pointed out that this money would be used for the purpose of employing New Deal political hacks to go out and do the very thing the gentleman from New York has pointed out; that the Government's money would be used to oil up the New Deal machine.

I have in my hand here a letter dated December 29, 1939, addressed to Miss Mary E. Rhodes, Huntsburg, Ohio. The letter reads as follows:

DEAR MISS RHODES: Replying to your letter of December 27, addressed to Senator _____ in regard to census work, you should secure the endorsement of your Democratic ward and precinct committeeman and place your application with your district supervisor of the census. We do not have the address of the census headquarters, but you will be able to ascertain that locally.

Very truly yours,

Secretary to Senator _____.

This information is being gathered by political workers whose sole object is to keep on the pay roll. These jobs are regarded as a part of the Democratic Party's patronage. The homes and the personal affairs of the citizens are being pried into in order to pay political debts to these local workers.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, but I want to say this, however: It runs much deeper into the social and political life of this Nation than the mere taking of the census by a party through its appointees. I say to you that this is a part of a set-up of social planning and regimentation. There is no rhyme or reason in asking these questions, and I say to you that he has no power under the authorization of the law itself, in the regular census, to inquire into the income of people. [Applause.]

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

CROCIFIXION OF POLAND

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, the history of Poland covers almost 1,000 years, of which the last 200 are a story of persecution and cruelty. About the same time that the Colonies which now compose the American Union became independent States, Poland was partitioned for the first time. After the partition of 1772 came the partition of 1796 and then the partition of 1798, when Poland lost its independence and became divided into three parts. One part, the largest, went to Russia, another part next in size went to Austria, and a third part went to Prussia and later became a part of the German Empire.

In 1815, at the end of Napoleon's era of conquest, an attempt was made to resurrect Poland, and around the city of Warsaw European powers created what was known as Congress Poland, and which was given to the Czar of Russia to be united in a personal union, by which the Czar of Russia became also the king of the new Poland. But even though the Czar of Russia continued to call himself the king of Poland or sometimes Czar of Poland, nevertheless no attempt was made to rule the country for the benefit of the Polish people, and little by little all the liberties which Poland was able to salvage after its union with Russia were thrown into the scrap heap. In 1830 and again in 1863 the Polish people rose against the Czar and sought to reestablish their independence, but after each attempt to resurrect Poland new and graver tortures were inflicted on the unhappy people of that country, and finally at the end of the nineteenth century every vestige of independence was taken away from it and Congress Poland became to all intents and purposes a part of the vast Russian Empire, governed for the benefit of the Czar and his satellites.

When the Great War broke out in 1914 Poles served in the armies of three nations, namely, Russia, Austria, and Germany. Austria and Germany were united in interest and waged war against Russia. Polish soldiers were obliged to fight against their own brethren on the other side of the border. Glowing promises were made to the Poles by both sides to the conflict. The Russians promised to reestablish Poland within its old boundaries if Russia were successful and won the war against Germany and Austria. Germany and Austria also made promises to the Poles to reestablish the old kingdom if they were successful in their war against Russia. However, it was necessary for Polish soldiers to fight against their brethren if they were to achieve national independence. The Czar of Russia, of course, wanted to become the king of the enlarged Polish kingdom, which was to be established if Germany and Austria lost the war. The Austrian emperor and the German emperor each had their sons or other relatives in mind as prospective rulers of the new Poland which was going to be set up should Russia be defeated in the war.

What happened in 1917 is well known. The Russians threw away their arms and refused to fight and the Central Powers were engaged in a life-and-death struggle with France and Britain. This was Poland's opportunity, and for the first time in almost 100 years another Polish state was formed with Pilsudski at its head. This state refused from its very inception to live at the mercy of either Germany or Austria or Russia. The Poles decided that the time had come for them to lead their own national life unhampered by any sovereignty not their own. It was then for the first time that it was possible to speak of a modern Poland. It was during the 100 years when Poland was the plaything of other countries that a real Polish national consciousness was developed and a new Polish state was finally created.

The constitution of the new Poland was a very liberal one. Poland became one of the pioneering democratic republics of Europe and sought to create a national life without any distinction of race, class, or creed. This state of affairs, however, did not last very long. Soon dissensions developed, both from within and without. It was Poland's misfortune to number a very large group of non-Polish races within its borders. These racial minorities could not very well become welded into a uniform Polish state. Somehow or other Poland missed her opportunity to create a new nation out of these diversified racial elements. Perhaps there were too many of them. Perhaps there was too much of a racial consciousness among the various Polish minorities. It is very rare for racial minorities to have a real love for a country which treats them as minorities, and the example of Czechoslovakia is perhaps the most interesting of them all.

Here was a country which was organized definitely with the view of giving each national element proper representation and the proper feeling that they were all part of one united community. But apparently this experiment was not destined to succeed. Czechoslovakia came to its doom, not so much because of Hitler's pressure, although, of course, this contributed to Czechoslovakia's downfall, but primarily because its many minorities did not consider themselves truly a part of the state. The same trouble was found in Poland. Unfortunately, its many nationalities did not pull together. As a result, there was an inherent weakness in the Polish state which could have been solved in only one way, and, as I said before, the Polish people missed a glorious opportunity to become a truly united nation. If Poland had felt that all its races and nationalities were entitled to the same treatment and did not consider them as minorities who were merely tolerated, Poland would have had a glorious future, and I doubt very much whether the combined powers of Hitler and Stalin could have destroyed the Polish nation.

Unfortunately, as I said before, Poland missed its opportunity. Perhaps it was not allowed to live long enough to make this experiment successful, but I hope and pray that if Poland is resurrected that it will bear in mind that all its races and minorities are one and that all members of one state are entitled to equal treatment. Should Poland do this and create a truly unified state, it will result in a thoroughly unified nation and the day of national minorities will have passed and the day of national rivalries would cease to be.

This, however, is a matter for the future. At the present time Poland is overrun by the enemy in the east and west. In the east it is Russia, which has carved out for itself a large slice of what we knew as Poland; in the west Germany has occupied the most important sections of the country. By its occupation, Germany, in particular, saw fit to transplant its philosophy of hatred to the Polish Commonwealth. Germany now persecutes all who are not German, and particularly the Jews, whom she is seeking to exterminate in every possible way.

Much as the Jews had cause to complain about the treatment which was accorded to them by the Polish, much as they resented the fact that in the institutions of learning separate ghetto benches were provided for Jews and that a good many occupations were closed to them, and that there were very few Jews who saw the inside of a government office, nevertheless Jews are ready to forget their Polish persecutions in the light of what is being done to them by their German oppressors. German oppression threatens Jew and gentile alike. Poles of all races and ages are being treated like slaves and an inferior race. Perhaps this common danger and common suffering which Jew and gentile are alike exposed to will result in a greater love of one branch of the nation for another. Perhaps out of this crucible there will arise a new and united nation which will face the future with more confidence than Poland has heretofore done.

Mr. Chairman, the press has been furnishing information about the atrocious conduct of the German and Russian authorities which are now in occupation in what used to be Poland. While all our sympathies at present are centered on the valiant struggle which the brave little Finnish nation is waging against overwhelming odds, we cannot forget the Polish situation, and it is my duty as a Member of the House to bring to your attention in as detailed a manner as I can what is going on under the Nazi terror in Poland.

His Holiness Pope Pius XII caused a statement to be issued which appears in the New York Times of January 23, 1940, and which is substantially to the effect that while conditions are bad under both the Soviet and the German regime in former Poland, conditions in the German-occupied part are infinitely worse. And, sad as the plight may be of all the inhabitants of Poland, the plight of the Jewish members of that community is infinitely worse.

Let me quote to you from the New York Times of January 23:

TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND JEWS LISTED AS DEAD IN POLAND—REPORTS TO JOINT DISTRIBUTION COMMITTEE COVER PERIOD SINCE OPENING OF WAR—HEAVY TOLL IN EPIDEMICS—ECONOMIC LIFE IS "COMPLETELY STRANGLER," IT IS SAID, AND THOUSANDS LACK SHELTER

More than 250,000 Jews have been wiped out in Poland by military operations, disease, and starvation since September 1, according to an estimate released yesterday by the Joint Distribution Committee on the basis of reports it has received. It added that 80 percent of the remaining 1,250,000 Jews in the German-occupied area have been "reduced to beggary."

Typhus epidemics are raging in Warsaw, Lodz, and many other towns, and their virulence is augmented by the widespread starvation and exhaustion, the committee said. Economic life has been "completely strangled," and hundreds of thousands of families, uprooted from their homes, wander along open roads, seeking a shelter. Women, aged men, and children are "subjected to countless indignities."

Although the suffering from starvation, epidemics, pogroms, persecutions, and wholesale expulsions is most acute in the German-occupied territories, there is also great hardship in the Russian-occupied section, where 600,000 Jews have taken refuge, and among the refugees in the bordering countries, according to the report of the committee.

TWENTY-FIVE HUNDRED SUICIDES REPORTED

In Nazi Poland 2,500 Jews are reported to have committed suicide, and their number is being increased daily, according to the committee, while "many hundreds" have been summarily executed. Hundreds of others have been and still are being held for ransom, the report says. The wearing of a yellow arm band bearing a six-pointed star has been instituted in many cities.

"Not the least of the hardships confronting the Jews of Poland are their fears for the future," the report says. "The institution of a ghetto in Warsaw, which would have crowded 350,000 people into a few square blocks, half of whose buildings were destroyed by bombardment or fire, was officially ordered, but has been delayed because of fear that epidemics might spread to the rest of Warsaw's population."

"The search for corpses in the debris of the bombed Jewish sections of Warsaw continues even today. Rumors that the Nuremberg racial laws are shortly to be introduced have added to the panic of Poland's Jews."

The committee's statement confirmed previous reports that the German authorities have decreed that Lublin is to become the hub of a Jewish reservation where not only all of Poland's Jews but the Jews of old Germany, Austria, Bohemia-Moravia, and Slovakia are to be concentrated. At the end of 1939 more than 40,000 Jews had been dumped into Lublin, the committee said, and no organized help is permitted in behalf of these refugees.

The borders between the German- and Russian-occupied areas, as well as between the German area and Lithuania, are "peppered with 'no man's lands,' where small groups of Jews are huddled under conditions of the utmost misery, unable to advance or retreat," the committee said. It praised the self-sacrifice and devotion the small Jewish communities of these districts were said to have shown in aiding the refugees.

HOUSING CONDITIONS BAD

There are about 900,000 refugees in the Russian-occupied area of Poland, 70 percent of them Jewish, according to the information reaching the committee. Housing conditions were said to be especially bad, with 300,000 homeless refugees crowded into Lemberg, 120,000 in East Galicia and its Provinces, 100,000 in the cities of Rovno, Lutsk, and Kowal, and 60,000 in Bialystok.

Although food is distributed under government auspices in public soup kitchens in this area, the number of such stations is insufficient and it is difficult for a refugee to get the single meal a day to which he is entitled, according to the committee. There are severe shortages of warm clothing, shoes, medicine, and fuel, and there is a lack of medical attention for the numerous cases of typhoid.

The situation of the 25,000 Jewish war refugees in Lithuania, most of whom are located in Vilna, was said by the committee to be "severe," but the situation of several thousand other refugees in Rumania, Hungary, and Latvia "has now been brought under control" with funds supplied by the joint distribution committee. The report told in detail of relief work done by the committee in the other stricken areas.

As far as any real news items from Poland are concerned, Poland, whether occupied by the Soviets or by the German Army, is a great blank spot. The press is virtually excluded. Very few persons are allowed to go into the country and make a real study of conditions on the spot. It is therefore with great interest that I was able to collect material from news items cabled by the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, and I feel that it would be of interest to the House to submit this material to you as a part of my speech.

RAPE BY TROOPS, HANGINGS, EXPULSION OF THOUSANDS RELATED IN LETTER FROM LODZ

PARIS, January 10.—Rape of Jewish women by German soldiers and officers, hangings of Jews, and expulsion of thousands to the Lublin "reservation" were described in a reliable report which reached this correspondent from Lodz, Nazi Poland, today. Some of the events related in the report are unprintable. The account, which is dated January 1 in Lodz, describes the situation in that city as follows:

All Jews of Lodz were originally ordered to leave the city by January 15, but the Nazi authorities, realizing that this would be impossible, postponed the dead line to March 1. Meanwhile the Gestapo is packing thousands of Jews daily into cattle trains directed to Cracow, Warsaw, and Lublin. The Lublin Jewish community has been ordered by the Gestapo to prepare barracks for 15,000 persons. The expulsions are officially explained by the Nazi authorities as punishment for the refusal of the Lodz Jewish community to supply women for the military brothels.

Twenty-four members of the Jewish Community Council were arrested in connection with this refusal. After being held in prison for several weeks, they were sent on December 28 to Cracow, seat of Dr. Hans Frank, Nazi civil governor of Poland.

Despite the Nuremberg "racial purity" laws, Nazi soldiers and officers drag Jewish women from their homes to military trains, where they are raped. The whereabouts of many of the women remain unknown, but a large number of them are known to be held in military brothels. Jewish parents, anxious to protect their daughters, are exerting all possible efforts to send them to Warsaw and Cracow.

Meanwhile, in order to mislead public opinion abroad about the treatment of the Jews, the Gestapo forced 400 Jews into a synagogue, where they were directed to don their prayer shawls and pray while they were photographed with moving-picture cameras. They were then led into a restaurant, where food was abundantly laid out on white tablecloths and were ordered to sing and look merry for the benefit of the photographers, but were forbidden to touch the food. After the filming was completed the Jews were taken away for forced labor.

A number of Jews and Poles were hanged for "conspiring against Nazi interests" and their bodies remained suspended for 48 hours in the Balut quarter, the poorest section of Lodz.

Panic among the Lodz Jews was described in the report as "unimaginable." Many Jews pay as much as 1,000 zlotys for a taxicab to take them to Warsaw, 2 hours away. The fare by train would be 10 zlotys if they could obtain tickets.

The Jewish community council, which received the order to clear the city of Jews by March 1, can hardly cope with the task. Under the Gestapo's supervision the council daily packs thousands of Jews into cattle cars going mainly in the direction of Warsaw and Cracow, but the trains move very slowly, sometimes taking 8 days or longer, during which the Jews suffer from cold and lack of water and food. One such train reached Warsaw with eight children dead. The trains from Lodz to Lublin are few. Their number is expected to increase when the barracks in Lublin have been completed.

Jews are given 3 days' notice to vacate their apartments in Lodz and directed to leave behind their furniture and other property. These apartments are then given to Germans repatriated from Baltic countries.

The report emphasizes that the 70,000 Germans in Lodz are cooperating completely with the Gestapo and are receiving confiscated Jewish enterprises as compensation.

NAZIS ORDER POLISH JEWS TO SET UP NEW COMMUNITY COUNCILS

PARIS, January 10.—The text of a decree issued by Dr. Hans Frank, Nazi civil governor in Poland, requiring establishment of new Jewish community councils to carry out orders of the German authorities, reached Paris today. The decree follows:

"1. A Jewish representation is to be formed in every Jewish community.

"2. This representation, to be called the Judenrat, is to be composed of 12 persons in towns of population up to 10,000 and of 24 persons in towns where the population is over 10,000. These persons must be local residents and are to be elected by the Jews of the given community. In case one member of the Judenrat departs, another is to be elected immediately.

"3. The Judenrat is to elect, from among its members, one person as the head and another as the substitute.

"4. The list of members of the Judenrat must be submitted to the regional and municipal authorities, who will decide whether the composition of the Judenrat is acceptable. They are also authorized to change the composition of the Judenrat with new persons.

"5. The Judenrat is obligated, through its head or through his substitute, to receive the orders of the German authorities and is responsible for the carrying out of these orders to their full extent. All Jews and Jewesses must obey the provisions contained in these orders.

"Governor General FRANK."

Here is another dispatch, this time dealing with the typhus epidemic:

NAZIS ORDER POLISH JEWS TO DECLARE PROPERTY; TYPHUS DEATHS MOUNT IN WARSAW

PARIS, January 12.—The Nazi authorities in Poland have ordered Jews owning more than 2,000 zlotys in cash and property to declare all possessions by January 19, it was reliably reported today.

The decree, climaxing the confiscation of Jewish property through collective fines and expropriation of Jewish businesses, was interpreted as foreshadowing the final pauperization of the Jews in Nazi-occupied Poland.

Included in the inventory which Jews must declare are all household goods, furniture, silverware, clothing, and movable possessions. The measure was apparently prompted by the fact that Germans repatriated from Baltic countries, who were being moved into Poland, were arriving without household goods and clothing reserves.

The French radio yesterday broadcast a report quoting the Berlin correspondent of a Dutch newspaper who described persecution of Jews in Poland and asked: "Why is not the world taking any cognizance of the plight of the Jews in Poland?"

A report received by the J. T. A., correspondent from Nazi Poland, said that confiscation of Jewish property was proceeding at a rapid pace, with the Jews denied any recourse to the courts.

It was also declared that mortalities from typhus were mounting among Warsaw Jews. The Warsaw Jewish hospital now has 1,200 typhus cases. During November alone 800 Jews in the former Polish capital died of the disease. The Jewish hospital lacks sufficient medical supplies and is unable to provide adequate treatment. In some Jewish sections, where typhus is particularly prevalent, signs have been posted: "German soldiers prohibited from entering this street because of typhus among the Jews."

(The typhus epidemic has resulted in a "great number of dead among the Polish population," it was reported by Sonia Tomara in a Bucharest dispatch to the New York Herald Tribune. Refugees from Poland were quoted as reporting a grave fuel shortage in Warsaw, Cracow, Lwow, and other cities, with typhus resulting from an intense cold wave.)

In spite of the fact that the Germans are very proud of their racial laws, they do not very seriously object to raping Jewish girls. Here is a dispatch from Paris:

NAZI TROOPS RAPE 40 JEWISH GIRLS IN WARSAW

PARIS, January 14.—Authenticated reports of rape of Jewish girls by German soldiers and officers in Nazi-occupied Poland were received here today. The seizure of Jewish girls was carried out despite the Nuremberg racial laws, which prohibit relations between Aryans and non-Aryans.

One incident, details of which have been checked, occurred in Warsaw. German army officers took over an apartment at 8 Piusa Street which had belonged to M. Szereszewski, prominent Warsaw Jew, who is now a refugee outside Poland. Officers and soldiers then carried out a raid, in broad daylight, on Jewish houses in a nearby street and seized about 40 girls, most of them between the ages of 18 and 20, and transported them to this apartment. The girls were then stripped and were ordered to perform nude dances. Afterward all of them were violated, and they were held in the apartment until the early hours of the morning.

Reports said this was only one incident of many occurring in Warsaw daily. It has become dangerous for a Jewish woman to be seen on the streets of the former Polish capital, it was said. Similar accounts were received from the Polish provinces.

And here are a few miscellaneous items:

VIENNA JEWS HELD IN OPEN SPORTS FIELD; MANY DIE OF EXPOSURE

BUCHAREST, January 14.—Several thousand Jews in Vienna are being held in an open-air sports stadium, where many are dying of exposure and ill treatment, according to reliable reports reaching Bucharest. Most of these Jews are Polish citizens or stateless.

Their families are informed, at an average rate of 50 weekly, to call at the stadium, where they are given the prisoners' corpses on payment of 300 marks each.

It was also reported that 1,700 Jews had been transferred from Vienna to the Lublin Jewish reservation in Poland during December, of whom only about 300 remained in Lublin and the rest fled, barefoot and half naked, across the Soviet border. Another transport waited in Vienna for several days for shipment to Lublin, but instead its members were interned in a concentration camp in Vienna where the Jewish community was obliged to feed them.

GHETTO EDICT IN VIENNA

AMSTERDAM, January 14.—The Nazi authorities in Vienna have issued a new order to concentrate the city's Jews in a few ghetto districts, it was reported here today. These districts are the Leopoldstadt, Alsergrund, and Brigittenau. Jewish owners of flats in these districts were ordered to accept as lodgers Jews evicted from apartments in other districts. No room in a Jewish flat may be occupied by fewer than two persons, except for the owner of a flat, who is allowed to have a room for himself.

NAZI RACE THEORY HELD QUINTESSENCE OF TYRANNY

GLASGOW, January 14.—The Nazi theory that nothing matters but the development of the race and the success of the state was described by Sir John Simon, Chancellor of the Exchequer, as "the quintessence of tyranny." Sir John spoke at St. Andrew's Hall here yesterday.

(The Associated Press reported from Berlin that the Jewish ration cards for the period of January 15 to February 11 have been invalidated with regard to "coupons for a total of 125 grams (almost 4½ ounces) of meat and all coupons for podded vegetables, such as peas, beans, and lentils." The dispatch, which confirms J. T. A. reports dated from Paris and neutral cities in recent weeks on discrimination practiced against Jews in rationing, adds that Jews have also been denied certain general ration cards recently issued to Germans enabling them to obtain extras when the Nazi regime is able to make allotments beyond the regular daily ration.)

Polish sources in Paris reported that in Radom, Poland, where Poles and Jews were imprisoned in camps, a system of four categories for distribution of food had been set up, with Jews in the last group and receiving virtually no food at all. Those in the first category received less than half a pound of bread and a soup mixture per day, it was said.

Reliable information received by this correspondent from Warsaw said the Jewish community of Lublin, principal city of the Jewish "reservation" in Poland, was unable to construct barracks for 15,000 Jews as had been ordered by the Gestapo, and feared the consequences if the barracks were not ready at the end of the time allotted.

In Warsaw the Jewish community was ordered by the Gestapo to submit a report on the present situation of the Jewish population and on the activities of workshops where Jews are being trained for new vocations. The Gestapo has also demanded of this community a report on the Zionist movement in Poland.

NAZI TROOPS SHOOT 83 JEWS IN DRIVING 400 OUT OF POLISH TOWN

PARIS, January 14.—German troops have driven some 400 Jews out of the Polish town of Hrubieszow, near Lublin, shooting down 83 who were not able to flee quickly enough, it was reported here today. The expulsion was ordered by the new military commander of the town, who previously had carried out a mass execution of Jews in the public square of Kalisz.

The commander ordered all Jewish males of Hrubieszow between the ages of 16 and 60 to gather in the public square. Many of them, fearing such a massacre as occurred in Kalisz, instead fled from the town, and only 400 appeared in the square. These were then driven by German troops to the outskirts of the town and from there into the fields. Eighty-three who did not run fast enough were shot and the remainder hid in the woods.

Local Polish Christians, horrified by the event, sent a delegation to the commander to appeal for mercy for the Jews, but he replied that he considered the expulsion and slayings as a warning to the town's Jews to hasten their departure.

To speed the expulsion of Jews from the Polish provinces, apparently to make place for repatriated Baltic Germans being sent into occupied Poland, the Nazi authorities have ordered Jewish small traders and artisans to apply to the economic department of the Gestapo for renewal of their licenses.

While in Warsaw some Jews succeed in obtaining licenses if they can prove that they have stocks of merchandise, the issuance of permits to Jews in the provinces is much more restricted.

That these are not sporadic instances, but that all of them are part of a diabolical plot to destroy Jewish population in Central Europe, can be seen from the following dispatch:

HITLER DEMANDED EXTINCTION OF JEWS IN HUNGARY, RUMANIA, YELLOW BOOK REVEALS

PARIS, January 16.—Annihilation of Jews in Rumania, Hungary, and other countries was stressed as a primary German objective by Chancellor Hitler and Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop in conversations with Czechoslovakian Foreign Minister Chvalkovsky a week before the Nazi occupation of Prague, it is asserted in a Yellow Book issued this week by the French Government.

The assertion is contained in a report made from Prague on February 7, 1939, by V. de la Croix, French Minister to Czechoslovakia, to French Foreign Minister Bonnet, and is based on talks between De la Croix and Chvalkovsky.

"From the impressions gathered by Chvalkovsky in his talks with Hitler and Ribbentrop," the report states, "the most striking thing appears to be the importance which Hitler and Ribbentrop attached to the Jewish question, which was out of all proportion to the importance of the subjects under discussion. The German Foreign Minister, as well as the Chancellor, both emphatically declared that it was impossible to give a German guaranty to any state which did not eliminate the Jews."

According to Chvalkovsky, the German leaders made the following declaration to him: "Do not misunderstand our sentimentality and slowness in handling this problem. Our good will emanated from weakness, and we regret it. This vermin has to be eliminated. The Jews are our sworn enemies, and there shall be no Jew left in Germany at the end of this year."

"It is not the French, nor the Americans, nor the English who are responsible for the difficulties which exist in our relations with Paris, London, or Washington. The responsible ones are the Jews. We shall give similar advice to Rumania, Hungary, and other countries. Germany will try to create a bloc of anti-Semitic states, because she will not treat as friendly any state in which the Jews, whether through their economic activity or their high public functions, have any influence whatever."

This is a sample as to how the German Government is treating the Jewish population in the section of Poland which the German Government itself designated as a Jewish reservation:

STARVATION FACES 35,000 LUBLIN JEWS AFTER 3-MONTH NAZI REIGN OF TERROR

COPENHAGEN, January 1.—Eyewitness accounts of a Nazi reign of terror against the 35,000 Jewish residents of Lublin, hub of the reservation, were related here today by reliable persons who have just arrived from the territory.

For more than 3 months the city's Jews were the victims of pogroms, systematic plunder, and torture. Those of the regular residents still left in Lublin are stripped of all their worldly possessions and are doomed to starvation, the refugees said.

Twice the Nazi authorities imposed huge collective fines on the Jews. The first was for 500,000 zlotys ($100,000 at pre-war rates). This later was reduced to 320,000 zlotys and collected in 3 days. The second fine was 300,000 zlotys in cash plus 500,000 zlotys' worth of gold. This was imposed after a secret wireless station had been discovered in a Polish students' hostel. In this connection, also, 6 priests and 30 students of the Lublin Catholic University were executed.

All Jews, irrespective of their age or sex, were forced to wear on their overcoats a yellow Mogen David (Jewish star) 10 square centimeters in size. Not a single trade or profession was left open to the Jews. Pogroms were repeatedly staged. Hundreds were subjected to torture, many dying of their wounds. Virtually every Jewish shop, house, and apartment was stripped of fixtures, furniture, and valuables.

Synagogues, including the famous Maharschalschul, were similarly plundered and used to accommodate deportees from other parts of Poland and the Reich who were being dumped into the reservation. Jews living in non-Jewish sections of the city were evicted from their apartments on half an hour's notice. Their apartments were turned over to Poles evacuated by the Nazis from Silesia and Pomerania. The Jewish community was ordered to register all Jews from the ages of 18 to 55. No reason for the registration was given.

The buildings of the famous Jewish religious college, Yeshivat Hahmei Lublin, were transformed into a barracks for Nazi storm troopers and a frightful torture chamber. Torture of Jews caught in the streets adjacent to the college was a daily occurrence. Not less than 60 percent of the younger generation has fled from the city.

A similar reign of terror prevailed in the city of Chelm, second largest in the Province, with a Jewish population of more than 25,000. All Jewish notables were arrested and a number of them, including the physicians Zuckerfein and Ochs, were shot. Pogroms and plundering of Jewish property were conducted repeatedly. On one cold December day more than 2,000 Jews were rounded up in the market place and ordered to leave the city. They were driven to an unknown destination, reportedly the Soviet frontier. Many perished of torture and exhaustion.

Another dispatch describing conditions in the "reservation":

THIRTY THOUSAND DUMPED IN "RESERVATION"

COPENHAGEN, January 1.—More than 30,000 Jews have been dumped into the Jewish "reservation" in the Lublin area of Nazi Poland, it was reported by newly arrived refugees from that territory. Of this number, 12,000 have come from the old Reich, 3,000 from Austria, 4,000 from Bohemia-Moravia, and 10,000 from Polish areas, including 7,000 from Kalisz, 2,000 from Sieradz, Koin, Kolo, and Unijow, and 1,000 from the Suwalki region.

According to the arrivals, the "reservation" embraces the districts of Lublin, Chelm, Grubiezow, and Wlodawa, but the majority of the deportees are brought to the city of Lublin. Each is allowed to have 25 marks and 25 kilograms of luggage. The deportees are put off the trains during the night. Often the trains are stopped in the field between two stations and the passengers are ordered off and told to find their way in the intense cold and darkness to some settlement.

There is none to assist the deportees, no arrangements for their reception, no organized help of any kind, no housing accommodations, and no food stations. The completely ruined and plundered Jewish community of Lublin is unable to do anything for the new arrivals.

The more fortunate of the deportees are taken into congested Jewish flats, which frequently shelter as many as 10 families. There is no bedding. Hundreds sleep in synagogues where no services have been held for more than 3 months.

The New York Post of January 22, 1940, contains the following story of conditions in the "reservation":

ONE THOUSAND NINE HUNDRED JEWS SLAUGHTERED BY GERMANS IN POLAND—SURVIVORS OF 4-DAY MARCH DRIVEN INTO RUSSIA, THEN BACK ACROSS BOUNDARY

GENEVA, January 22.—Authenticated details of the massacre of a number of Jews conservatively estimated at 1,900, who lived in Chelm and Hrubiaszow in the Lublin Province of Nazi-occupied Poland, near the Soviet border, were received here today.

The slaughter occurred during a 4-day enforced march of several thousand Jews to the Bug River, which divides German and Soviet Poland at that point.

The official German news agency issued only this report on the massacre:

"An attempt of the Jews to revolt in the Chelm and Hrubiaszow districts was ruthlessly suppressed."

The actual events were as follows:

On Thursday evening, November 30, the Nazi authorities in Chelm ordered all Jews between the ages of 15 and 60 to appear at 8:30 o'clock next morning in the market square. No reason for the order was given. To insure compliance, the Nazis took 20 prominent Jews as hostages.

Many Jews, fearing the worst, fled on Thursday evening and Friday morning. But the majority of the Jews appeared at the specified time.

When about 2,000 Jews had assembled, they were surrounded by Nazi auxiliary police, Elite Guards, and a small detachment of soldiers armed with machine guns. Gestapo officers addressed the Jews, informing them that the Jews of Chelm had been sentenced to be deprived of civil rights and expelled from the town.

The Jews were then ordered to sing Jewish songs and were kept in the square until 12:30 p. m. Their wives, mothers, and sisters, who had collected in adjacent streets, were repeatedly dispersed by the police, and many were beaten. Their desperate cries for the return of their loved ones were ignored.

At 12:30 the Jews were ordered to line up in military formation. They were surrounded by Nazi soldiers riding lorries and motorcycles and were marched off on the highway in the direction of Hrubiaszow. The women were forbidden to follow and those disobeying were driven back.

TWENTY ARE EXECUTED

A few kilometers from Chelm, near a military hospital situated in the woods, the party was halted and told that 20 would be executed. Twenty were then picked out and were marched off into the woods, from where shots were shortly heard, accompanied by screams.

The rest of the party was then driven on again at a quick pace. Those falling from exhaustion were shot dead on the spot. The bodies of those thus executed were later found scattered along the road. Two Polish peasants hired by a Chelm Jewess to follow the party and determine the fate of her husband counted more than 600 bodies between the wood where the first execution occurred and the township of Bialopol, 36 kilometers from Chelm on the road to Hrubiaszow.

On Friday evening the remnants of the Chelm party reached a village 2 kilometers from Hrubiaszow and were ordered to camp in the fields. The camp was lit up with searchlights to prevent any from escaping.

Meanwhile the Nazis in Hrubiaszow issued a similar order to local Jewish males between the ages of 15 and 60 to appear on Saturday morning at a specified place outside of the town. Unaware of the fate of the Chelm Jews, more than 2,000 Hrubiaszow Jews assembled between 7 and 9 o'clock on Saturday morning.

VALUABLES CONFISCATED

Four hundred were freed and were told to return home. The others were lined up and were told they had been sentenced to expulsion. Their documents and valuables were confiscated and they were told they would be taken to the Soviet frontier.

At 9:30 a. m. the remaining Jews from Chelm arrived and joined them. It was estimated the party now included 1,100 Jews from Chelm and 850 from Hrubiaszow. Before being marched off they were told that those who returned would be treated as spies and executed.

Although the frontier was only 4 kilometers distant, the Nazis took the Jews by a roundabout route, covering more than 50 kilometers, chasing them across fields, woods, and marshes from Hrubiaszow to Mieniany, Cuchoburze, and Dolbyszow.

Every 5 minutes the Nazis ordered those who were tired and unable to continue to stand aside. These were shot dead and their bodies were left lying in the fields. During the march, Jews were not given food or drink, and those trying to leave formation to take water from ditches were shot dead.

TOLD TO CROSS RIVER

When Dolbyszow was reached, the survivors were divided into 2 groups, one numbering about 550 and the other about 400. Thus, 1,700 in all had been shot between Chelm and Hrubiaszow and between Hrubiaszow and Dolbyszow.

The larger party of 550 was marched off toward the frontier town of Sokal, and the party of 400 toward Belzy. Of the smaller party, only a few were shot before reaching the bridge over the Bug River, but of the larger party 250 were slain.

Thus, during the 4-day march a total of 1,950 were killed.

The 2 parties reached Sokal and Belzy, respectively, on Monday, December 4. At the Sokal bridge the 300 survivors of the 550 group were counted and were told that anyone failing to cross the river, either over the bridge or by swimming, within 20 minutes would be shot. Before crossing the Jews were allowed to have a meal of dry bread and water brought by Christians of Sokal.

On reaching the Soviet side, the Jews had to wait 3 hours and then were given the decision of the Soviet authorities that they had to return to the German territory. Despite desperate resistance, they were taken across the frontier by the Soviet guards and turned over to the Germans.

ORDERED BACK ACROSS RIVER

At 7 o'clock in the evening the Jews were told by the Nazis that they would be shot unless they crossed the river again, at their own risk, at 6 o'clock the next morning. A number swam across and succeeded in entering Soviet territory undetected. The rest were arrested by the Soviet authorities but were not sent back. A few found refuge in neighboring villages on the German side.

The 400 brought to Belzy crossed into Soviet territory, though they were not admitted at first. A number of Jews at both Sokal and Belzy were drowned in attempting to swim across the river. Many who succeeded in crossing were taken to Soviet hospitals, where several died.

During the 4 days of the march the Jews were given only 1 loaf of bread daily for each 30 men.

LXXXVI—40

Among those killed was Isaac Lewenfuss, 55 years old, who had been the bookkeeper of the Hrubiaszow People's Bank. He was completely exhausted and unable to carry on after arriving 15 kilometers from Hrubiaszow. When he was ordered to lie down, which was the prelude to execution, his 20-year-old son, Mendel, offered to die in his place, but the offer was refused.

The youth then declared: "Then shoot me together with my father."

A storm trooper said: "Oh, you are volunteering to die. Very well, it's very nice of you."

Father and son were then shot together while locked in embrace.

Among others executed were three members of the well-to-do Chelm family Lewenstein.

To summarize: German brutality knows no bounds. The Hun is on the rampage. Will the civilized world sit idly by and offer no protest against these intolerable conditions?

It almost seems that the conscience of mankind has taken a holiday.

Mr. Chairman, I know that what I have said and may say about the plight of former Poland may not seem so important to some people of this country preoccupied with Finland. I want to call their attention to the fact, however, that I, too, am sympathetic with Finland, as well as all the other persecuted people of Europe. Naturally we have no business there, and we cannot go and fight other people's battles, but we are a great democracy which should try to help those in distress. It is known all through the world that we fed the unfortunate abroad during the last war and during many other wars, and much has been said about Finland and about what we are trying to do for that great little country, which is putting up such a great fight. However, little has been said about the destruction of the little democracy of Poland. In the last war we were responsible for creating that country or that Polish state. In this war Poland has been raped by both the Nazis and Communists.

I wonder how many Members of this House know the number of people that are being slaughtered every single day in the week by the Nazi government. I wonder if anyone in this country has raised a voice to God and to humanity and to this great democracy to do something for the suffering, poor, unfortunate people who are dying of starvation by the thousands when we have such a plentiful supply of food in this country. There are many millions of American citizens who would be glad to contribute to a fund to provide food and care for these unfortunate victims who are being tortured to death.

I have some very important information that came to me, Mr. Chairman, a few days ago from the inland of Poland, in a city under the Nazis, where they practically destroyed every Protestant and Catholic church. I do not need to repeat what they have done to the Jews. They have been on the first-line trenches, and until a week ago, if my figures are correct, they had slaughtered one-hundred-and-some-odd-thousand women and children in cold blood and without any justification whatsoever. The Nazi police in Poland have thrown Catholics, Jews, and Protestants into concentration camps, and in many instances have shot them at sight. When the Nazi police are forcing pure women to become prostitutes and forcing decent women to have illicit intercourse with these so-called Nazi police they do not discriminate between Catholics or Jews or Protestants. I say to you and to the American people that today in Nazi Poland every girl over 10 years is forced into prostitution unless she wishes to die by a bullet.

Civilization is quiet. Why? We talk so much about Finland, and we have so much sympathy for other minorities, yet the world does not know what is going on with two or three million people in the territory of the former Poland. Yes; it is true, my people are getting the worst of it. They do not even give them a chance to turn around before they shoot them. Not only have they confiscated their property and pauperized them, but they are killing them at the rate of an average of two or three hundred a day. The Pope in Rome, in an article in yesterday's New York Times and today's New York Times, which I will ask permission to include in my remarks, has made a protest to the world against the persecution, prosecution, and destruction of humanity. The American people, this great democracy of ours, this great humane Government, this great Congress of the United States, ought to make some gesture to the world. There ought to be some way by which we can bring pressure upon the Nazi Government to stop this prostitution by their police, and stop the killing of hundreds of thousands of people daily.

VATICAN DISCLOSES MORE REPORTS OF GERMAN ATROCITIES IN POLAND—WHOLE WEIGHT OF PAPACY BEHIND DENUNCIATION—PERSECUTION OF CLERGY AND EFFORTS TO SUPPRESS RELIGION DESCRIBED

ROME, January 23.—The Vatican City radio station made two more broadcasts today, adding many details to the atrocities that supposedly are being committed in German-occupied Poland. It is now clear that the Papacy is throwing the whole weight of its publicizing facilities into this exposé of conditions which, yesterday's broadcaster said, "profoundly pained" the Pope.

The material for these talks, it is now learned, forms what amounts to an unofficial Blue Book compiled by the office of Cardinal Hlond, archbishop of Gniezno and Posen, here in Rome. It is in the form of a memorandum of 40 pages, or about 12,000 words of material, that the cardinal feels has been fully authenticated.

Only the surface of this mass of facts has been scratched by the three broadcasts thus far made, and it is most likely that other talks will be given. Some of the material, it is stated, is too horrible to be given over the air or printed.

The memorandum was compiled from information brought to Rome not only by Polish priests who escaped into Rumania or Hungary, but also by civilians and through diplomatic channels.

COPY WENT TO POPE

Of these, one went to the Secretariat of State and was automatically passed on to the Pope. That explains how the radio announcer yesterday was able to say that the Pontiff had been shocked. The second copy went to Father Vladimir Ledochawski, superior general of the Jesuits, who is a Pole, and the third copy was turned over to Father Soccorsi, head of the Vatican radio, for use in the broadcasts.

Both of today's talks were in English, one at 2:30 p. m. and one at 8 p. m. They were the regular news broadcasts and not confined solely to Poland, but each talker devoted about 10 minutes to the subject. They started by repeating what was said yesterday and then added many new details. Here are some of the facts presented by the speakers:

In Gniezno, for instance, a majority of the clergy were arrested, most of the schools closed, and worship limited in the churches to only 2 hours weekly. Religion cannot be taught in those schools that are remaining open and crucifixes have been taken down from the walls.

Since September all churches in the districts of Inowroclaw, Szubin, Znin, Wyrzysk, and Wrzesnia have been closed. Later many priests were imprisoned, others sent to concentration camps, and still others sent into Germany or to the suburbs of Warsaw and forced to do manual labor. Troops are quartered in the seminary of Gniezno.

In Posen the cathedral and the parish church have been closed. The Collegiate Church of St. Mary Magdalene is being turned into a dance hall.

DEPORTATION DESCRIBED

"The unhappy population had to make room for Germans who arrived from other countries," said this evening's speaker. "We would not refer to this if the forced immigration had been carried out in a loyal way, but here, too, loyalty forbids us to remain silent.

The systematic transportation of Poles from Posen, Pomerania, and Silesia to the so-called Central Government protectorate began in November.

"People were told to leave their homes at 10 minutes notice. They were not allowed to take anything with them. After being escorted to the station, they were locked up in trains and driven to some small station in the neighborhood of Warsaw and left there to their fate. Some of these rides took place in open cars while the temperature was several degrees below zero. Others were transported in closed train cars and were only allowed to leave them after 3 days.

"On November 9, 300 families were transferred from Gniezno. On December 3 an additional 150 families followed. At Inowroclaw, on the night of November 30, about 1,000 families were assembled in the market place and packed into goods trains, which left for an unknown destination. In the middle of December 1,500 persons were in a like manner transported from Znin, and all these people and many more were left in the direst poverty with the specter of famine before their eyes."

VATICAN DENOUNCES ATROCITIES IN POLAND; GERMANS CALLED EVEN WORSE THAN RUSSIANS

ROME, January 22.—An outspoken denunciation of atrocities in Poland was made over the papal radio station this morning. Germany, as well as Russia, was strongly criticized in this authorized talk, which spoke of the Pope as being "profoundly pained."

While these broadcasts are not official, they are delivered by a priest and carefully controlled by the papal Secretariat of State. One may take it for granted that today's attack expresses a view that the papacy is willing to see presented over the Vatican's own radio. As is always the case, however, authorities would not say who composed the talk or whether the pontiff sanctioned it.

"It is no longer a secret that His Holiness has been profoundly pained by reports that were recently received at the Vatican, and all too completely confirmed, of the martyr's fate reserved once more for his dear Poland, on whose inevitable resurrection he continues to count with such confidence," said the speaker.

After referring to the Pope's September 30 speech to the Polish residents of Rome, in which he expressed his hope "that Catholic life will be able to continue abundantly," the broadcaster went on:

"These modest hopes of the Holy Father for the Polish people he tenderly loves have been grossly deceived, we regret to announce, and the misgivings that accompanied them have been abundantly justified. The new year, with its frail but refreshing promise of peace, brings us almost daily from Warsaw and Cracow, from Pomerania, Poznan, and Silesia, a tale of destitution, destruction, and infamy of every description which one would be loath to credit if it were not established by the unimpeachable testimony of eyewitnesses to the horrors and inexcusable excesses committed upon a helpless and homeless people, as peaceful and unpretentious as any in Europe.

"These are not confined to the sections of the country under Russian occupation, heart-rending as news from that quarter has been. Even more violent and persistent is the assault upon elementary justice and decency in that part of prostrate Poland that has fallen to German administration. The richest part of western Poland is being unceremoniously stolen from the Poles and deeded over to the Germans as the real proprietors are packed off in foul-smelling trains to the war-torn region of Warsaw, which the Holy Father only last week described as 'a desert where once the smiling harvest waved.'

DEPORTATIONS CALLED BRUTAL

"A system of interior deportations and zonings is being organized in the depths of one of Europe's severest winters on principles and by methods that can be described only as brutal. And stark hunger stares 70 percent of Poland's population in the face as their reserves of foodstuffs and tools are shipped to Germany to replenish the granaries of the metropole. Jews and Poles are being herded into separate ghettos, hermetically sealed and pitifully inadequate for the economic subsistence of the millions destined to live there.

"But the crowning iniquity of an administration that has never ceased to proclaim that it has no designs against religion lies in the cynical suppression of all but the nearest suggestion of religious worship in the lives of this most pious and devoted of the peoples of Europe. An administrative decree applied with varying effectiveness throughout the government protectorate restricts public religious services to a bare 2 hours on Sunday.

"It adds up to a fearful total and a tremendous responsibility, one more grievous affront to the moral conscience of mankind, one more contemptuous insult to the law of nations, one more open thrust at the heart of the Father of the Christian family who grieves with his dear Poland and begs for a peace with decency and justice from the throne of grace."

I should like to see at least this democracy raise its voice and to join this great Pope Pius XII and others in an appeal to the world. Something should be done to bring to the attention of the world and particularly to the attention of the American people the fact that thousands of innocent human beings, without any justification, with no crimes having been committed by them, are being forced into prostitution by this Nazi Government, which is so proud of its Aryan purity. Women and children are the innocent victims. Little is known about that, because some people are afraid to know the facts and other people do not give a care about them. Who could lead public opinion more than the democracy of these United States? We are practically the only civilized nation today that can bring pressure by public opinion to stop this wholesale slaughter of human people.

I should like, if there was any way possible, to send some food to those who are still living, to give them the chance that God gave them to live if they can maintain themselves with at least one meal every 2 and 3 days.

If my information is correct, and I know it is correct, they have robbed the food of every housewife in the jurisdiction of the Nazi police, and left them almost frozen on the icy streets of Warsaw. They do not even bury their victims any more. They just throw them into the river. They do not even take the trouble to remove them from where they shoot them when the women refuse to submit to this dastardly prostitution by force and violence.

Civilization, where are you? O God, where are You? We have heard many talks on this floor and in the other body about Finland. What about Poland, my friends? Poland, with 40,000,000 or more people is being annihilated, in the most cruel way possible. There have been more bullets used to kill the civilian people of Poland today than there was in the Ethiopian War between Italy and Ethiopia.

My friends, I wish I could paint a stronger picture, because the facts warrant it. So that we may in some way relieve humanity, I propose to introduce a resolution calling upon this Congress to at least express its hope that this continued slaughter of human people, be they Jews, Catholics, or Protestants, should be stopped. I am sure it will receive the attention of the world. I am sure it will receive the attention of the American people. My friends, we do not have to go to war for other people, but they are just as human as we are and the least we can do is to show our sympathy. At least, as a great democracy, we can present the facts to the world as they now exist.

I do not want to take any further time. I think you should read the record. I do not think history can produce anything worse than I have presented to you in this speech.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for giving me this opportunity at this time. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, on page 49 of the bill are two items concerning the Territory which I have the honor to represent in this body. The first one reads:

Star route service, Alaska: For inland transportation by star routes in Alaska, $150,000.

The next one is:

Powerboat service: For inland transportation by steamboat or other powerboat routes, including ship, steamboat, and way letters, $1,270,000.

While the residents of large areas of Alaska are vitally affected by the amount of the first item for star-route service in Alaska, which is set down in the bill for $150,000, the item to which I desire to address myself now is the second one, powerboat service, in a total of $1,270,000, to cover service both in the 48 States and Alaska, an item that has been reduced below the Budget estimate, according to the report, in the exact sum of $75,500, and all of this deduction coming from the Budget estimate for service in Alaska.

The cuts mentioned are explained in the committee report accompanying the bill, pages 27 and 28, as follows:

TRANSPORTATION OF MAIL BY STEAMBOAT OR OTHER POWERBOATS

The amount recommended for this form of transportation of the mail is $1,270,000, which is an increase of $45,000 over the 1940 allowance and $75,500 under the Budget estimate. The increase allowed for 1940 includes $25,000 additional to cover increased costs arising out of an enlarged volume of mail between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands, and $20,000 to provide payment for five additional weekly trips for carrying the mail to Alaska. Under the present contract for service to Alaska, the contractor is paid for not more than 55 trips, whereas there are 72 round trips annually on all of which mail is carried.

The Budget estimates requested payment for 65 out of 72 trips and the committee has approved payment for 5 additional trips, which will allow payment to be made for 60 of the 72 weekly trips. The disallowance of $75,500 from the Budget estimates consists of the $20,000 just referred to in connection with the Alaskan service, and an item of $55,500 designed to establish boat service on the route from Seward via Kodiak Island, the Alaskan Peninsula, the Aleutian Islands, and points on Bristol Bay and return. At the present time there is an existing mail contract under an annual rate of $70,000, which sum, together with $55,000 requested, would provide $125,000 for the proposed service. The request was based not upon the needs of the mail service but upon the needs of these communities for regular boat service. The frequency of travel is not sufficient to induce the contractor carrying the mail to provide a boat of sufficient size for passenger needs. The committee felt that while the situation was an appealing one, being urgently pressed by the Delegate from Alaska, that they were not justified in adding this character of charge to the Postal Service.

I have nothing to say at this time about the reduction of $20,000 for mail service between Alaska and the United States, but the remaining cut below the Budget, $55,500, is of grave import to several thousands of the residents of Alaska. I am not here asking anyone to go beyond the Budget. I know how difficult it would be to convince the committee or to convince any Member of Congress that the Budget ought to be exceeded; the reasons would have to be grave. I do say, however, that once the Budget has passed upon and approved an item of this kind, anything said in support of the Budget estimate ought to be given sympathetic attention.

The $55,500 cut out of the Budget estimate by the committee was designed to give transportation service to between 8,000 and 9,000 of the residents of Alaska who reside in an area about 2,200 miles long, on both sides of the Alaska Peninsula and into the Aleutian Islands, and also extending into the main body of Alaska to a point called Goodnews Bay in the southwestern part of the Territory. The people of a considerable part of the area, who numbered 2,231 in the 1930 census and who number now, according to our best estimates, between 3,000 and 4,000, are entirely without any regular means of transportation, and during the winter period most of them are cut off from any transportation facilities whatever. They had transportation up until June 30, 1938, transportation supplied by the mail carrier. The carrier owned a steamship called the Starr. This boat plied once a month over the route from Seward, which is situated in about the center of the main body of Alaska on its southern coast, and which is the northern terminus of the main steamship line running between Seattle and Alaska, thence extending to the west and southwest along the Alaska Peninsula to Unalaska, to Umnak Island, the Aleutian Islands, to Bristol Bay, and thence to Goodnews Bay. This boat would carry about 50 passengers and 500 tons of freight, and the people were reasonably adequately served. With the expiration of the old contract, however, on June 30, 1938, the then carrier, the Alaska Steamship Co., refused to put in a bid on the new contract. The Post Office Department advertised three times and finally one bid was received, and one only, that of the present carrier who operates a motor ship called The Fern, a small boat, an old boat licensed to carry only 12 passengers and having only very small capacity for freight. Without the backlog, if I may use this term, of the mail contract money it is not possible for anyone to enter successfully into the business of carrying freight and passengers in this particular area.

The boat of the present mail contractor is too small to give the people much service, and the result is that the people are left without any substantial transportation service whatever, except for a short interval during the summertime.

There are several reasons why men engaged in the steamboat business would not bid on this mail route in 1938. In the first place, during the winter period the region is frequently stormy. The waters of this area are sadly lacking in navigation facilities, such as lights and buoys. Insurance rates for ships on the route are about 15 percent—and 15 percent yearly on a $300,000 or $400,000 vessel is a substantial sum; it almost equals all that can be now given under the mail contract. At the expiration of the 1938 contract there were other reasons why steamboatmen did not care to undertake the job. One was the rise in power and influence of the maritime labor unions, which made steamship operation much more expensive; but the one thing that absolutely prevented our securing a vessel on this mail route that would carry a reasonable number of passengers and a reasonable amount of freight was the passage by Congress of the safety-at-sea law. The result of this law was that many of the vessels which were then running to Alaska and along the coast of Alaska were put out of service because they could not comply with the safety-at-sea law and most of them had to be scrapped; in fact, the Japanese bought most of them and scrapped them. They scrapped the steamship Starr, which had formerly operated in this area.

Faced as we were in Alaska with a total absence of facilities for transportation in this area, there was only one thing to do, and that was to appeal to the administration and to the Congress for relief. We made this appeal. I personally took the matter up with the President, but he was at first reluctant to have anything added to the duties of the Post Office Department that did not directly concern the transportation of mail. At the President's suggestion a conference was held with the various departments of the Government which have a particular interest in Alaska—Navy, War, Coast Guard, Post Office, Interior, and, most important of all, the Maritime Commission. We had hoped that at least the United States Maritime Commission could supply a vessel for the route, and a careful study was made of the entire subject. Several conferences were held and it was discussed in detail, but in the end it was discovered that there was no practicable way under our laws through which transportation facilities could be granted to the people of this area, except by using the mail service and requiring that the vessel that carried the mail should also carry a reasonable number of passengers and a fair amount of freight. A bill to this effect was introduced in the House and a similar bill was introduced in the Senate by the junior Senator from Washington. These bills were referred to the respective Post Office Committees of the House and the Senate and carefully considered.

Mr. Chairman, the Post Office Committees, like the Appropriations Committee of the House, hesitated to impose this burden upon the Post Office Department. The argument was advanced that what we asked did not directly concern the carriage of mails; it was a sort of subsidy. And there was no exact and precise precedent for all that we desired, although there was precedent to authorize the Postmaster General to make special contracts without advertising for the carriage of mails by railroads. After an exhaustive hearing on the subject in the House, the authorizing bill was unanimously reported out of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. A similar bill was unanimously, as I understand, reported out of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and the bill was passed by both the House and Senate by unanimous consent.

I make no particular point of the passage of the bill by the two Houses of Congress by unanimous consent, because I know from my experience here that many bills are passed by unanimous consent concerning which the majority of the Members know very little; but I do suggest to the Members of the House, and I suggest to the members of this Committee, that the reporting of this bill by unanimous vote of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and a similar unanimous report from the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is entitled to very serious consideration. It cannot be claimed, and it will not be claimed, that the members of those committees were neglectful of the interests of the Government and that they disregarded proper procedure. As I said a moment ago, they did not wish to report such a bill; they tried to find some way to avoid reporting it, and yet give the relief sought, a relief which is much needed in Alaska; but no such procedure could be found, and the bills were reported by the committees and passed by the Congress. We therefore have the authorizing legislation. The bill was reported by the committees and passed by the Congress with the full approval of the Bureau of the Budget, and it also had the approval of the President of the United States. I happen to know that the President was fully informed as to the nature of this legislation, as well as the merit and desirability of it.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes. I wonder if he will yield a minute to me, not for a question but for an observation?

Mr. DIMOND. Gladly.

Mr. LUDLOW. All of us know the diligence, thoroughness, and conscientiousness with which the Delegate from Alaska represents his Territory. His ability as a pleader sometimes inclines us to do things that we doubt whether we should do and this is one of those times.

May I suggest to the gentleman from Alaska that there is a service in existence which is preeminently devoted to life saving. I understand one of the humanitarian features advanced in connection with this proposition is that it would be impossible for the citizens or residents of that locality to be taken to hospitals in the case of an epidemic or other illness.

The agency to which I refer is the Coast Guard. After discussing the matter with the gentleman, I believe some reorganization of the Coast Guard schedules might be effected whereby this service could be obtained. As chairman of the subcommittee that handles the Coast Guard appropriations, without committing any other members of the subcommittee, may I say I would be inclined to do what I could to obtain extra money if it required a little extra money under that head to furnish the service. I wonder if the gentleman's procedure would not be to take up this matter still further with the President of the United States and with the Commandant of the Coast Guard to see if something may not be done along that line to furnish the relief which his people so sorely need? There was no lack of sympathy on the part of our subcommittee toward the gentleman's problem. We were intensely sympathetic with it. But certainly we are reluctant to fasten upon the Post Office Department an almost irrelevant function. It would be imposing another nonpostal obligation on a service that is already heavily burdened with duties that have little or no connection with the Postal Service. I wonder if the gentleman could not find a way to proceed along the line I suggested.

Mr. DIMOND. I am deeply grateful to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], for the suggestion he has just made, and especially for the careful thought and sympathetic consideration he has given to our problem, a consideration that is evidenced by the report on this bill, the relevant matter appearing on page 27, and by remarks made in the course of his exceedingly fine speech in Committee of the Whole yesterday, which appears on page 609 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I only wish that the services and facilities of the Coast Guard could be utilized for our relief.

Mr. LUDLOW. Has the gentleman discussed with Admiral Waesche this particular problem, and whether or not some way may not be found to have Coast Guard vessels, which are all the time cruising up in that vicinity, organize a schedule so as to furnish a more regular service into that region?

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, to answer the gentleman's question specifically, I have discussed the subject briefly with Admiral Waesche, and I have discussed it for hours at a time with representatives of the Coast Guard who were designated by Admiral Waesche to give attention to this particular matter. The Coast Guard officers, including Admiral Waesche, say that it is not practicable for them to give the service that is desired, because, in the first place, Coast Guard vessels are not fitted to regularly transport any considerable number of passengers. Of course, the Coast Guard vessels would and could haul passengers in case of a disaster at sea or any similar emergency. I suppose the newest and latest Coast Guard ships could carry two or three hundred people. But I am told by the officers of the Coast Guard themselves that it is just impracticable for them to undertake the service which we desire here. They state, moreover, that the Coast Guard vessels are designed by Congress for a different purpose; that is, not to give a regular transportation service on any particular route, but to give the service required by law whenever and wherever such service may be needed.

Mr. LUDLOW. That may be true, but it certainly would not be any more irregular for the Coast Guard to take on this service than it would for the Post Office Department.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, further referring to the gentleman's suggestion, it appeared after all of these conversations we had about the matter that it would be simpler and easier to have the service undertaken by a private individual rather than to have it undertaken by any official Government carrier, such as the Coast Guard vessels. Mr. Chairman, I admit that what we asked is not a part of the regular Postal Service. It is equivalent to a subsidy given to a vessel in order to furnish certain transportation. But the use of subsidies in the Post Office Department is not a new one. We are granting large subsidies through the Post Office Department for the extension and the operation of our foreign air mail, and, as the gentleman from Indiana pointed out yesterday, we also do it for the carriage of newspapers. These are straight-out subsidies from the Treasury of the United States.

In the case of newspapers and magazines, I suppose the subsidies serve the worthy purpose to which General Washington adverted—that of spreading intelligence. In the case of foreign air mail, there is another worthy and a highly desirable purpose—that of promoting trade and promoting good relations with the nations of South America and lately with the nations of Asia and Europe. Both of these subsidies are for economic purposes, however. What we ask for here is a subsidy largely for humanitarian purposes. The purpose is partly economic, it is true, because the operation of a vessel along the Alaska Peninsula for the distance where the people can get no other service, approaching 800 miles, will serve a useful function in transacting business. Freight can be carried, and persons traveling on business will be able to go from one place to another. However, the principal purpose is to serve the people who must travel on account of illness.

Between Seward at the east and Unalaska on the west is a distance by air line of something more than 850 miles. By the way the boat travels it is 1,467 miles. In all that area, for more than 1,300 miles, there is no operating hospital. We have a hospital at Unalaska, and there is another one at Seward. Another hospital is now partly constructed at Kodiak. However, the only hospitals operated at the present time are at Seward at the east and Unalaska at the west. Consequently, when people in that region become ill enough to require hospitalization, it is necessary to go to one or the other of these hospitals. No physician resides at the present time between Kodiak and Unalaska, and that is a distance of approximately 800 miles by the usual sea route.

When the present mail carrier first started its service and for about a year thereafter it carried no passengers whatever. The boat was not licensed to carry passengers or freight, and the owner hesitated a long time before putting the vessel under license. Finally he did put the ship under license, so it is now eligible to carry 12 passengers and no more, being a freighter and not a passenger vessel; and it is little fitted for carrying any passengers on account of its limited capacity and facilities.

This is a serious situation for the people who live in that part of Alaska. A majority of them are natives of Alaska, either of whole or of part blood. They are a sturdy, self-supporting, resourceful, independent people; but they are poor people. They are not able to purchase or operate a steamship. Most of them are engaged in fishing or in trapping or in the raising of fur-bearing animals. Their income is meager at best, and so they are unable to undertake any such financial operation as would necessarily be involved in the purchase or charter or operation of a vessel sufficient to accommodate the people of that area.

But poor as they are, they are not objects of charity. Not a single dollar has been expended out of the Federal Treasury for relief of any of the inhabitants of the region mentioned, except that in the winter of 1938-39 approximately $12,000 of W. P. A. money was used to aid in the construction of a still unfinished hospital at Kodiak. But west of Kodiak and between that place and Unalaska, a distance, as I have said, by steamship route, of about 800 miles, and containing, I believe, a population in excess of 3,000—and these are the people who are in principal need of the relief asked—there has not only never been an expenditure of relief funds but to the best of my knowledge and belief there has never been an application for relief funds from these particular citizens of Alaska. And so if the appropriation now requested should be made, and the Budget figures restored, no disproportionate benefit would be conferred upon these people over and above the benefits conferred by W. P. A. and other relief agencies upon many millions of other people of the United States. All they ask—and in my judgment their demands are modest and reasonable—is that the Government of the Nation aid them temporarily to maintain their homes which they have so laboriously built up by providing minimum needs for transportation, particularly for the aid of those diseased and ill. The transportation facilities required are modest enough, namely, the operation of a substantial, seagoing vessel making one round trip a month along that rugged coast.

This is no demand for any personal bonus from the Federal Treasury. Not a dollar of the money appropriated, if it is appropriated, will go directly to any of the inhabitants to be served. If the desired transportation facilities are provided, they will still be obliged to pay for the service rendered them and the charges for that service will be well above any similar charge made for transportation an equal distance in the States. The charges for service will necessarily be high on account of the expense of operation of a vessel and by reason of the hazards involved. Even at best it will not be a lucrative operation, but as sensible men we know that the operator must at least break even or he cannot continue long to render the service.

The suggestion has been made, Mr. Chairman, that air-transportation facilities be established in order to afford the requested assistance. A careful consideration of all of the factors involved shows that such a service would be well beyond the means of the local residents to pay. The coast of Alaska Peninsula is a rugged and, at times in the winter, a stormy area. The Alaska air pilots are daring, but I know they would consider a scheduled operation along the Alaska Peninsula in the wintertime, with facilities almost entirely absent, an unduly risky venture. If we had the appropriate flying aids and facilities the problem would be a simple one, but no such aids or facilities exist at the present time. To attempt to give the service by air under present circumstances is simply out of the question.

We had hoped at first that the Maritime Commission would and could furnish us with a ship for the purpose. If Alaska were not a part of the United States, it is likely that a ship could be supplied and operated by the Commission. But the service in question is a coastwise service and, after careful study and consideration, the Chairman of the Commission, Admiral Land, has reported to the President that it is not practicable for the Commission to secure and operate a vessel over this route. My own judgment is that the decision of the Commission is the correct one under the law.

At one time it was thought that perhaps the Indian Service vessel, the North Star, could be operated over the route during the winter period when the vessel was not otherwise engaged, but soon it was found that could not be done. The appropriations made for the operation of the vessel are just sufficient to take care of its necessary work for the Indian Bureau, and under the Permanent Appropriations Repeal Act all of the money received by the Indian Bureau from private individuals for services rendered in the operation of a vessel go direct into the Federal Treasury and cannot be used as a revolving fund to pay expenses of operation; and so there is no money with which such expenses can be paid. Moreover, the services which could possibly be rendered by the North Star would, in any event, be comparatively limited and, therefore, inadequate. From March until November of each year the vessel is necessarily engaged in the ordinary work of the Bureau. At the end of that period an overhaul is always required. So under the best of circumstances it seems probable that the North Star would be available for the route for only about 2 or, at the most, 3 months of each year. Of course, all possibility of using the North Star during the present winter was ended when the vessel was assigned to the use of Admiral Byrd in his current South Polar expedition.

I have stressed, Mr. Chairman, the humanitarian aspects of the desired service which can only be given if the Budget figures are carried in the bill. But there is another feature of the subject that is deserving of consideration and that is the economic aspect of it. People who live between Kodiak and Unalaska and who number several thousand cannot long survive in their present places of residence unless they are supplied with some means of transportation.

While they are few in number, they are a valuable part of our population. It is obviously in the national interest to have this land peopled, particularly with such a sturdy, self-supporting, and enterprising citizenry. It would be a tragedy, indeed, not only for the people involved but for the United States, to omit to do anything in reason in aiding these citizens to maintain their homes where they are at present, this aside from any considerations of sickness or of health. The local industries are slowly but surely expanding and developing. The present condition has arisen not by any act of omission or commission of the people affected, but entirely by factors and circumstances beyond their control. And the most important of those factors, as I have said, is the passage of an act of Congress commendably designed to make safe travel by sea, but in our case—the case of residents of the Alaska Peninsula—making any such travel all but impossible, since the vessels which might have furnished it are no longer usable.

At the far western end of the area to be served, on Umnak Island, a comparatively new industry has been developed, that of raising sheep. The present operator has built up his flocks until they now number about 13,000. It has been found that the region is admirably suited for the grazing of sheep. But in order to operate at all it is necessary that transportation be furnished for the convenience of the employees of the ranch, to bring in supplies, and to take out the product. The size of the business is not sufficiently large to justify the chartering of a vessel, and so it seems certain that unless the transportation aid which I am asking for is given, this particular industry will be obliged to liquidate and all similar undertakings will be impossible.

The suggestion has been made that if the appropriation requested is now given it will necessarily go on and on forever. I firmly believe that such a conclusion is not warranted by the facts. The steady increase in population during the past years indicates that within a comparatively short period there will be enough business in the area to be served to justify the operation of a privately owned vessel without any subsidy from the Government. This condition would be brought about at a much earlier date if adequate navigation facilities could be supplied to the area. Such facilities would result in a marked reduction of marine insurance, and marine insurance, as I observed a few minutes ago, is one of the bigger items involved in operating a ship in that region.

Moreover, our experience in Alaska has indicated that costs of carrying mail simply do not rise or remain stable forever. One illustration of that is to be found in the cost of providing star-route service in Alaska. The bill now before us carries $150,000 for that purpose. Yet it is only a few years ago that the amount was much larger, $208,000, and at one time $220,000. Moreover, for the $150,000 carried in the current bill we will obtain much more efficient service, to more people, and over a larger area than we ever obtained for the higher sums paid. Moreover, the present service will be given in only a fraction of the time required for the service of years gone by.

In the hearings on this item and other items of appropriation for carriage of mails in Alaska and between Alaska and the States, the question was asked as to whether the Alaska service was self-sustaining. Of course, Mr. Chairman, the receipts of the Post Office Department in Alaska do not nearly cover the expense of carrying mail to and from Alaska and within the Territory. By far the biggest item of cost, and approximately one-half of the total expenditure, is that of transporting mail between Alaska and the States. But in this connection it is only fair to say that the Alaska service, if not entirely self-supporting, is probably much more nearly so than most people may think. There is no possible way of finding out now how much postage is paid on mail carried into Alaska, and no attempt has ever been made to get that information. The only facts that we have are those which show the receipts of the Post Office Department in Alaska, which for 1939 amounted to $277,337, and all of the disbursements of the Department connected with the Alaska service and the service between Alaska and the States which during the same year amounted to $971,097. Those figures alone and without further inquiry would indicate that the Federal Treasury paid a substantial sum over and above its receipts to provide the citizens of Alaska with mail service. But that is not the whole story. The records of the Department show that the weight of the mail going out of Alaska and the weight of the mail coming into Alaska are startlingly disproportionate, in that, of the total volume carried, 80.41 percent enters Alaska and 19.59 percent leaves Alaska. It is that 19.59 percent of the total volume, plus the inconsiderable local mail, which provides the Government with $277,337 in a year. It is not unreasonable to assume that the mail entering Alaska, which is in weight more than four times as great as the mail going out of Alaska, also furnishes the Government at the several points of origin with a substantially proportionate sum. If this be correct, then the volume of mail going into Alaska and out of Alaska and being transported from one point to another in Alaska would bring into the Department approximately five times the Alaska receipts or a sum in excess of $1,387,000. While it is undoubtedly true that the mail which is carried from the States to Alaska costs the Department something for transportation between the various points of origin and Seattle, that cost in the very nature of things, with the lower general expense of transportation in the States, cannot be very large. Therefore, it is no exaggeration to say that the mail service for Alaska is probably as nearly self-sustaining as that of any other part of the United States, with the exception of the more densely settled regions.

It is worthy of note here that in the hearings on the bill Mr. J. W. Cole, Deputy Second Assistant Postmaster General, as shown on page 215 of the printed record of the hearings, stated that the revenue from postage in one of the great States of the Union would not of itself pay for the service in that State. I venture the suggestion, Mr. Chairman, that the revenues from postage in more than one-half of the States in the Union would not pay for the mail service in those States. Alaska pays its way for mail service as for other things, when we consider that if there were no Alaska the Government would be deprived of the hundreds of thousands of dollars of postage which it now receives in the States for mail carried into Alaska.

My argument today is not advanced, Mr. Chairman, with any thought or to make any suggestion that the appropriations subcommittee or the full committee failed to give this particular matter careful consideration. When I appeared before the subcommittee to urge the granting in full of the amount set up in the Budget estimate, I was most courteously received, and no suggestion was made that I be limited in time in the presentation of my views. From what was said then, from that part of the report accompanying the bill to which I referred a little while ago, and from the most kindly and sympathetic expressions of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], the chairman of the subcommittee, I know that it was with regret that the subcommittee determined not to give the desired appropriation, for all members of the subcommittee realized the merit of the request for assistance aside from its connection with the Postal Service. Greatly as I respect the members of the committee and richly deserving as they are of respect, it is my duty to say to them that others equally intelligent, equally patriotic, and equally eager to support and maintain proper legislative processes, and after even more careful study of the entire subject, have arrived at a different conclusion. The House Committee on Post Office and Post Roads, which reported out the authorizing legislation unanimously, said in effect that the desired appropriation should be made. The Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads unanimously agreed that the desired appropriation should be made. The Bureau of the Budget, after going into the subject thoroughly, has approved the requested appropriation. The Postmaster General, who is so eager to make the best possible financial showing for his Department and thus to avoid imposing upon the Postal Service anything not directly connected therewith, has realized that the human aspects of the problem call for the solution which I am now pressing upon this House through the appropriation of the necessary funds. And the President of the United States, who has a considerable knowledge of the subject despite the multitude of affairs of national importance pressing upon him daily for attention, has approved the requested appropriation.

Over and above all that is the fact that the authorizing legislation passed both Houses of Congress by unanimous consent. Surely if there were anything radically wrong or evil from a legislative view in this request and authorization for an appropriation, somewhere along the line someone would have been found to veto the proposal or in any event to make public protest against it. The only objection now made is based upon the undesirability of carrying a particular nonpostal subsidy on the vehicle of a Post Office Department appropriation bill. May I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that with a request of the conceded merit of the one here made, to forbid the granting of the relief asked just because of the form which the request takes—a form approved by eminent committees of Congress, by the Budget, and by the President—is a sacrifice of essence and of substance to mere form, a sacrifice little in consonance with the higher spirit of reason and the more admirable aims of efficiency which should enlighten a democratic government.

While each man must be the guardian of his own conscience and the author and master of his own judgments, it is always consistent with the highest degree of independence in thought and action to take counsel with the reasons and to give studious thought to the decisions of others who are similarly well informed and similarly of unquestioned integrity. My people are deserving of the aid they ask, and this is the best way, the only practicable way, of giving it.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

IN WHAT DOES OUR NATIONAL DEFENSE CONSIST?—FARM APPROPRIATIONS SHOULD BE ANNEXED TO THE WAR AND NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, there are too many men connected with the Government of the United States who speak publicly out of turn on the question of Government economy and a curtailment of Government expense. One official recently said: "We probably will have to cut out all appropriations for water conservation, roads, and bridges until the Budget is balanced." If that advice were to be followed, we would be in a worse situation than we are now. These enterprises create work and enable thousands of families to take care of themselves. In areas where irrigation is feasible and practical, and where the return warrants the expenditure, it enables families in those areas to get off of relief. If, on the other hand, we pay no attention to providing them with the means to work out their own living, we will be forced to continue relief and make our citizens dependent, and not independent as they ought to be and as they would like to be.

There is one fact which we can all agree on, and that is that every citizen has the right to live as long as he obeys the laws of the land. Fortunately, the people do not go off and die to favor the balancing of the Budget. What we do not expend for water conservation and irrigation in the West, we shall have to spend 10 times that amount on relief. In the North Central Western States the annual relief cost per family is over $700 per year. If this Congress will provide the unemployed people—the hungry people, the ragged people, the homeless people—with the means by which they can work, the relief question will be solved.

When an irrigation matter is pending before this House that will release thousands of farmers from the dole system, many Congressmen work and vote against the proposition for fear that these hungry people might possibly raise something that will compete with the farmers of their own States. Wisconsin can be relied on to assist in killing any irrigation project in the West, because the Representatives in Congress fear someone out west will raise a pound of butter or learn the obnoxious habit of owning and milking a dairy cow. As the matter works out, there is no competition in fact. The people on relief have no buying power—none whatever. Unless they acquire it, they cannot buy Wisconsin products. If that buying power is reestablished, they will buy where they used to buy. Wisconsin was getting along all right when the people of the West had buying power. We bought their butter, cheese, and machinery products produced in Wisconsin. Now we are worthless as customers. When North Dakota loses its buying power, Wisconsin and all the other States producing products we normally buy feel the pinch. Finally, they will be in no better position financially than we are. If foreclosures have not already started in Wisconsin, you can take my word for it that they will start.

A Member of this House from New York stated to me that he would go along with the farm program of the West for the reason that he fully realized that unless we had buying power in North Dakota and the other Western States that New York would lose a good customer. That is the spirit that should prevail here, and not the spirit of looking no farther than your own back fence. New York is more friendly to the Western States than many States in close proximity. Mention irrigation, and Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan, who ought to be friendly to us, rise up in their might and vote down the proposition.

The stock argument is about as follows: Why spend money for irrigation in the West when the farmers of the East are required to reduce their acreage under the agricultural program? Why put more land in cultivation when at the same time elsewhere we are taking it out of cultivation? Whatever merit there may be in this argument, the fact is that North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Colorado, Utah, and Idaho are not responsible for the program. We live where we are; many of us do not intend to give up the civilization of 60 years; we do not intend to leave our schools, our churches, our homes. It may not be the best place on earth to be, but to us it is. We live there; it is our home; and when science and engineering indicate we can provide for ourselves by the use of water by a loan from the Government, we should have the right to do it. We do not ask a gift; we ask for a loan and a loan which will be paid back from the project itself. Now if you want us to move, as thousands have moved when foreclosed upon and driven out, where will we go? None of the other States want us, because we have no money and no property; and if we go to your State, you will have to feed us. California is an example; people from all the drought States flock to California because it is warm. California and the Government of the United States have to feed these people.

It seems to me, from a selfish standpoint, every State would be willing to help the people of the West to work out their own salvation and not be mulched in debt by feeding those who cannot feed themselves. If Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois, and Michigan will not vote for water conservation in the West, they will pay 10 times that amount, nevertheless. They will pay it in lost business; they will pay it in national Government relief appropriations; they will pay it in feeding those who move to those States. The matter reduces itself to this: Pay it our way or pay 10 times that amount your way. Which do you want? Take your choice. We are trying to talk sense, but we are answered by nonsense.

Answering further the argument against putting new land into cultivation will increase the surplus crops, I wish to state that if the people in North Dakota and elsewhere received enough to eat, enough clothes, and proper houses to live in, there would be no surplus of staple crops in the United States unless it was cotton. We are not burdened in the United States with overproduction, but we are victims of underconsumption. What we are seeking in water conservation is not to raise surpluses but raise enough to eat under a decent standard of living for ourselves and for every citizen in the United States. Do not be afraid of any surplus we can produce in the Western States. If there is any, it will be sold and the proceeds will go east to purchase what we need to maintain a decent standard of living. You to the east will benefit more by this increased purchasing power than you will by playing dog in the manger and destroying that power.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is it not a fact that the so-called irrigation projects so largely proposed in the Western States or in the Great Plains States are those of a subsistence type, which contribute to the subsistence of the people who live there?

Mr. BURDICK. The gentleman is correct.

Water conservation, irrigation, grasshopper control, seed wheat, and crop loans should be under the control of the War Department. If it were there would be no fight in this body about our western problems. As soon as the War Department shows up in this Congress it can get any appropriation it wants. It can get a billion, two billion, or any multiple of billions, even though at the present time they have unexpended millions on hand and apparently do not know what to do with them.

Those same States which vote against water conservation for the West vote in goose-step fashion for any war appropriation. There is where I would like to see the entire farmer's program—under the War Department—and if it were, Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois, and Michigan would vote "yes" without a whimper. Just remember the password "War Department" and the farmer's program would go through.

While I am on the subject, why not put the farmer's program under the War Department? I mean it; I advocate it. The War Department should be concerned with our national defense. In what, I ask, does our national defense consist? Does it consist alone in guns and ships? Not at all. That is a small part of it. It consists in the spirit of the people, in men, and in food. Hungry people do not make good fighters. Napoleon said, "An army traveled on its stomach." He found that out when he marched into Russia. Idle, unemployed people, those without homes to fight for, do not make good soldiers. When everything else—patriotism, guns, men, and ships—is supplied, there is yet another element of national defense that must be considered and must be supplied. That is food. No major war was ever won in the history of the world unless the victor had more food than the vanquished. In the last World War we evidently recognized this fact. Lest you forget the concern of the War Department and every other department about this question of food, I want to present to you the posters used by the Food Administration, by the War Department, and by all other branches of the Government during that period.

This is No. 1:

Hunger: For 3 years America has fought starvation in Belgium.

They want food; they do not want guns and ships.

Here is another one, "Food is ammunition." That poster appealed to everybody. It was hung in churches, school-houses, and homes. "Make every egg count." You bet! "We are at war"; and they appealed to the farmers everywhere.

This is a significant one. See the truckloads of food coming to the front.

Keep it coming. We must not only feed our soldiers at the front but the millions of women and children behind the lines.

It is food that is powerful in time of war.

Corn.

Conserve the corn; make everything out of corn you can think of, because we want to conserve the food of the Nation.

Here the children are pictured raising vegetables to furnish food for the Army and the people behind the Army.

This is not just an idle fancy of my own. We all lived through those times. I have kept these posters ever since the World War, and there they are. That is the appeal they made to us. They came to our county and said:

Plow up that little corner and put it into wheat. Raise ammunition to win that war.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I want to congratulate the gentleman on keeping those posters, because they are a graphic refutation of a libel that has been made against the people of the West in connection with the plowing of the West. We have heard it said many times in the last few years that the farmers of the West were sinners because they plowed up the prairie, yet the gentleman knows and people who reflect know, and these posters are indisputable proof of it, that the plowing of the West was a direct response to the patriotic appeals made by the Government, and the responsibility rests on the Government for the condition of the West rather than on the individuals concerned. The poster the gentleman is now showing on the board, Blood or Bread, is one of the posters that got a lot of land put into wheat.

Mr. BURDICK. I knew the gentleman from South Dakota would be interested in that, because he lived through it. He was right out there where it was done.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the gentleman if the film which has been shown throughout the United States so often during the last 3 or 4 years, and which portrays the plowing up of the West during the World War, in any way indicates to the one who sees the showing that this plowing-up program was a result of Government propaganda or education material such as is now being shown?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; and I think—

Mr. CRAWFORD. The film indicates that the plowing came about as a result of this demand?

Mr. BURDICK. How is that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman mean to say that the film which is being shown by the Department of Agriculture indicates that?

Mr. BURDICK. No; not at all. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does that film indicate it came about through this kind of educational propaganda?

Mr. BURDICK. No; not at all.

I do not know whether you can see this poster or not. We were not asked to send ammunition over there, but "feed a fighter." Can any of you gentlemen think of any major war in the history of the world that was ever won except by those who had the last amount of food?—Not a single war.

Now, here is another final appeal. They did not want us to waste anything—"Don't stop saving food."

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BURDICK (continuing to read):

We must confine our consumption of sugar to not more than 2 pounds per person per month in order to provide the restricted ration to England, France, and Italy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Two pounds per month or 24 pounds per year compares with a normal consumption of about 103 pounds, which is a reduction of about 75 percent.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I call attention to this poster, which reads:

Hunger! For 3 years America has fought starvation in Belgium. Will you eat less wheat, meat, fats, and sugar that we may still send food in shiploads?

I may say that there seem to be some influences in this country that would seek to destroy our domestic sugar industry, which saved the situation during the World War, not only for the United States but for other nations.

Mr. BURDICK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would like to have the gentleman point out in the Record that that poster saying "Your sugar ration is 2 pounds a month" was issued under the sugar regulations of the United States Food Administration during the World War.

Mr. BURDICK. That is right.

This is a proclamation against having any sodas during the war:

Don't use the sugar by drinking soda, but put that sugar into food to win the war.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I would like to call attention to the inscription on this poster:

Sugar means ships. The consumption of sugar-sweetened drinks must be reduced. For your beverages 400,000,000 pounds of sugar were imported in ships last year to the United States. Every ship is needed to carry soldiers and supplies now.

I think the gentleman will agree with me that the domestic sugar industry, including the beet-sugar industry, which has been the target for various and repeated attacks, was one of the things that helped win the war for the United States and its allies.

Mr. BURDICK. That is right.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I appreciate very much the gentleman's having mentioned the problem which California faces today as a result, very largely, of the general agricultural problems of America. There are now hundreds of thousands of people in our State who are simply seeking a place where they can make their homes, and their main or basic reason for having come there is on account of the fact they have not been able to stay on their land where they used to live. The problem faced by the State of California is of such magnitude that I am afraid few Members realize it. So I appreciate the gentleman's reference to that and I appreciate also the emphasis he puts on the general agricultural problem of the country as one of the things that we need to do to help meet this situation. I would also like to reemphasize something which he has said, namely, the importance of the development of other lands where some of these people might be able to find a home, because, after all, they are farm people, and unless that is done I do not know where they are going to go.

Mr. BURDICK. I thank the gentleman from California for his contribution.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit, the RECORD should show that while 25,000 people may have moved from the Dakotas 1,500,000 remain and it is far cheaper and more sensible to rehabilitate them where they have their homes. As a matter of fact only a small amount is needed to set up a complete program of water conservation that will put the area on its feet. Much is being done; that work should go forward.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. I am very much interested in the explanation there about the importance of sugar and I join with the gentleman in the hope that we may have an increase in domestic-sugar quotas. In my State, for instance, we produce less than 1 percent of the sugar made in the United States, and we have about 4,000,000 acres of land in the Florida Everglades that all the sugar-growing experts officially claim is the finest sugar land in the world, and yet under existing laws we make but one-half of the sugar that is used in the State of Florida, because we are prohibited from doing so by law, and during this time of emergency or apparent war emergency, it seems to me would be the time for us to abolish the quota-plan law and extend this development. Permit unlimited sugar production in continental United States. I favor this.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I presume the gentleman from Florida is complaining about the tremendous imports of sugar and its effect on domestic sugar.

Mr. GREEN. I was not necessarily complaining, except in this respect: I think in continental United States, where we have these areas peculiarly adapted to sugar production, there should be no limitation by law on the amount of sugar a man can make.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. In other words, the people can consume just so much sugar, and every pound of sugar coming in here from another country displaces that amount of sugar that you can produce here. Is not that right?

Mr. GREEN. Obviously so.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Then, if that is so, the gentleman believes we ought to cut down the importation of sugar?

Mr. GREEN. From foreign countries.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman believe we ought to cut down other kinds of imports affecting the industry of this country?

Mr. GREEN. I am afraid we are getting on to another matter.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Do you believe in that? Let the gentleman answer that question.

Mr. GREEN. I regret to transgress further on the generosity of the gentleman from North Dakota, but my views are fairly liberal on tariff matters. I am for American industry and American agriculture above all others.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Is the gentleman in favor of a continuation of the trade treaties as at present carried on?

Mr. GREEN. I have made no declaration on that as yet, but Florida is deeply interested in unlimited production of sugar in the United States; and unless we can get relief, the reciprocal-trade agreements will be more obnoxious to Florida.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BURDICK. If I am going to be chairman of this committee, you will have to speak in turn. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I do not know how the gentleman from California [Mr. Voorhis] stands on the question of protecting the American market, but I am quite in sympathy with what he has to say about providing places for these people to make productive homes for themselves. We are going to have a matter here in a few weeks to give away some more of our American markets to foreign producers, and I hope that we may count on the gentleman from California to join with us in providing homes and the means of livelihood for Americans in this country, who want homes in order to make a profitable living for themselves.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I hope the gentleman will join with some of us in trying to push through some of the essential reclamation projects also.

Mr. BURDICK. Now, let me parenthetically insert a small paragraph. [Laughter and applause.]

I think the gentleman from California [Mr. Voorhis] has hit the nail squarely on the head, because when these people are driven off their farms in North Dakota, South Dakota, western Kansas, and Oklahoma, they drift out there with no buying power—no money and no property. They go where it is warm. The next turn of the wheel we find that California and the Government have to feed them. If you want to take care of us that way; if you want to feed your money in through relief, go ahead; but it seems to me, from a selfish standpoint, that you would be willing to help us help ourselves.

I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I did not hear the first part of the gentleman's statement. Are you pleading today for more money for parity payments? I do not want you to appeal to my emotions too much if that is what you are going to ask for.

Mr. BURDICK. That is what I proposed to do when I started in.

Mr. GIFFORD. More production and more parity payments?

Mr. BURDICK. No; I was not talking on that subject at all, but I am appealing to your emotions now.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, do not do that. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I note this poster reads:

Sugar: 1. None on fruits; 2. None on desserts; 3. Less on cereals; 4. Less in coffee and tea; 5. Less in preserving; 6. Less cake and candy; 7. Use other sweetenings. Save. United States Food Administration.

Mr. BURDICK. That is right.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Those were all posters during the World War?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; they were. Now you see how desperate they were to support our Army across the sea. The administration even went so far as to appeal to little children. Here is what it says:

Little Americans, do your bit.

Now, look at that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Would you object to turning the page back a moment so that I can see that?

Mr. BURDICK. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. When was that published and under what administration?

Mr. BURDICK. Under the Food Administration during the World War.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. During the Wilson administration, a Democratic administration?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I hope the gentleman will continue to read that poster so as to get in the point about wheat.

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

Eat oatmeal, cornmeal mush, hominy, and other corn cereals. Rice with milk. Save the wheat.

Do we have too much wheat? We did not have too much wheat. We never have too much wheat. We would not have too much wheat if we had a war tomorrow. We would be out coaxing every farmer to raise more wheat.

Save the wheat for the soldiers. Leave nothing on your plate.

I guess we are going some in appealing to the saving of food.

Now, which would you prefer? Suppose the farmers of the United States were not able to buy seed this spring—which would be the best business proposition? Remember, now, there are a lot of them who cannot buy seed. Which would be the better—to call out a million more men to the colors, or to build one battleship at a cost of $75,000,000, or put $75,000,000 into seed to raise that without which you cannot win any war?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield further briefly?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. If you are going to make these loans to farmers for seed, does the gentleman see any reason in the world why the lending agency that lends it should have to sell bonds first, to borrow some private bank credit to do it with, when we have the largest credit base in the world at the disposal of the United States Government?

Mr. GIFFORD. Let me answer that.

Mr. BURDICK. That is right.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. If that were not done, the rate of interest could be cut in half, could it not?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes. I will say to the gentleman that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford] would be likely to want to answer that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Give the gentleman some additional time. I want to answer that.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to recommend a reading of the last Comptroller General's report, which tells you how much gold we have. We have two and one-half billion. That is all. That is all the Government has.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Well, there is a question about that.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I have already yielded to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Do you recall a bill brought here called planning for abundance? Did you support that bill a couple of years ago, say, in 1937?

Mr. BURDICK. If I thought it would help the general condition of the people of the United States I surely did. I do not recall the particular bill just now.

Mr. GIFFORD. I wanted to read to the gentleman from California what the Comptroller General reports and ask him if he denies that the Government has more than $2,500,000,000 in gold.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The question, of course, is to whom title belongs to the $17,000,000,000 of gold that is now covered roughly by gold certificates. The law says it belongs to the Government. Gold certificates have been used in large measure to purchase it. One school of thought claims that the gold certificates constitute a claim against the gold; but as I understand it this gold cannot be used for the redemption of the gold certificates. Certain it is that it would be a very simple matter to call those gold certificates which are at the present time nothing but Treasury notes in reality, in which case the gold would all be available.

Mr. GIFFORD. I simply want to say, calling attention to the Comptroller General's report, that the President in his message said we had only $35,000,000,000 net debt. The Comptroller General says $37,500,000,000. The President was $2,500,000,000 out of the way. Where does he get these figures he comes here and gives to the House? I have tried to bring out this point before. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BURDICK. In conclusion let me remind you that you cannot talk Budget balancing to people who are hungry, to people who are ragged, to people who have no houses to live in. It is much more important if we want to prepare for war—and I believe in being prepared to defend this country against any enemy—but while this House is voting billions for the Army and the Navy we are permitting the destruction of those factors that produce that without which we cannot win any war. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, for the past 6 or 8 years, every time this appropriation bill has been under consideration, I have taken the floor to call the attention of the membership and the country to the work of a Division of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, the Intelligence Unit. I admit that at times my statements sounded like a detective story. It was because I was restricted in my remarks as the law prevented the Department from giving any information relative to the activities of this important unit. The only time its activities were brought to the attention of the public was when an indictment was returned in a Federal court.

I am pleased to note this subcommittee for the first time has called before it the head of this unit, Mr. Elmer Irey, a career man. I might add, every man under his control likewise has a civil-service status. He testified at length. I invite you to read the hearings.

This organization has no publicity agent, nor information service. It is not on the first page of the papers every day; but, as I have previously stated many times for every dollar it expended in recent years it has brought into the Treasury of the United States annually an average of $30 in addition to expenditures in taxes and penalties.

When law enforcement broke down, especially in the large cities of the country, it was this unit that went in and by its investigations of income-tax evasions brought about indictments and sent some of the most notorious gangsters of the country to the penitentiary. Some of the cases are outlined in his testimony. Mr. Irey was required to tell the Committee on Appropriations what his unit was doing to justify his expenditures, and as a result for the first time an official statement in regard to the activities of his unit is available.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. This unit has many other activities besides that. It makes many investigations of applicants for various appointments in the Federal service, as we all know; so that when the gentleman says it has brought in $30 for every $1 expended, in that expenditure is included a substantial amount for activities not related to detecting those who either avoid or evade the payment of taxes.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is correct. It also investigates the application of every man who applies for a position in the Internal Revenue Bureau—in fact in the Treasury Department. It investigates the application of every lawyer and accountant in the United States who wants to practice before the Treasury Department. It investigates any case that is assigned to it by the Secretary of the Treasury, but it stays within the Treasury Department.

I understand that Mr. Irey testified off the record as well as on the record. If the true story of his activities could be put in book form it would be classed as one of the best sellers in the United States. There is not a section of the country they have not invaded.

It was this unit that demanded, as the hearings disclose, that before the Lindbergh money was paid they must take a record of the numerals on the bills. They did not want to do it, but Mr. Irey and his men insisted, and as a result they discovered at the time the gold certificate was passed at the oil-filling station that it was part of the ransom money by the number on the bill. They stepped into that case because the man who secured the ransom money was required to pay income tax to the Government. That was the only way the Government could get into the case at that time because the kidnapping act of which I was coauthor had not up to that time been enacted into law. Nor had the extortion law of which I am the author been enacted at that time.

As I told you in some of my other speeches, this unit broke up the Capone gang in Chicago and sent Al Capone and his associates to the penitentiary, as well as other big racketeers in New York and other cities.

They turn their evidence over to the Attorney General, and it is upon the evidence which they collect that the Department of Justice prosecutes. There is not only a criminal but also a civil liability against the tax evader. They not only send the man to the penitentiary but they likewise require him to pay that which he owes the Government. No matter what sort of income it may be, even the loot a bank robber might receive by robbing a bank, it is subject to the income-tax laws.

They have comparatively only a small unit, and I have continually urged that when a Government agency can bring into the Treasury of the United States $30 for every dollar it expends, it is sound business practice to give them plenty of dollars so that they will bring in plenty of $30. There is no increase for the unit provided in this bill, but I understand at a future date consideration will be given to the suggestion that additional agents be provided for. I sincerely hope when the matter comes up that the Subcommittee on Appropriations handling the bill will report favorably upon this recommendation, because it is a unit that deserves to be supported in view of its record of the past. [Applause.]

If permitted under the rules, I would include as part of my remarks the entire testimony of Mr. Irey.

Time will not permit me to go into the activities of the Bureau of Internal Revenue as I would like. Too much credit cannot be given to Commissioner Helvering and his assistants for their efficient service. While I believe in economy for this Bureau, which brings in our main revenue, we should be liberal in our appropriations. By curtailing the activities of the Bureau as a whole, many a taxpayer who has evaded taxes escapes, as it is absolutely impossible under existing personnel to cover all the returns made annually.

In speaking today I confine myself to the Intelligence Unit. My attention is directed to one outstanding case settled a little over a year ago. This case has never been brought to the attention of the Congress or the public before. It shows you how far their activities go. Five of the leading distillers of Canada moved with full speed ahead during the prohibition period, shipping through agents along the border an unknown quantity of liquor into this country. Jointly with the Customs Service and the Alcohol Unit of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, a thorough investigation was made, as a result of which a very large assessment with additional penalties was levied against the distillers for violation of our prohibition laws. One would wonder how we could require them to pay. It was possible to refuse them permission to do business in this country if they did not meet the demands. After long discussions it was finally agreed to accept about $3,000,000. This amount was paid. This one item was sufficient to cover the expenses of the Intelligence Unit for 3 years.

The Louisiana cases received considerable space in the hearings. In answer to the questions of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], Mr. Irey explained his Bureau had nothing to do with the prosecution of the cases other than submit its evidence, which it did. It was shown that one man was tried and convicted, while in the second trial another defendant was acquitted. Following that acquittal over 20 cases were dropped. The record shows this was through no fault of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Despite the fact that only one individual was convicted, Mr. Irey showed about $2,000,000 was collected in additional taxes, penalties, and interest. Even if one escapes conviction on the criminal charge, the civil liability is still prosecuted by the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The amount collected as a result of investigations, according to Mr. Irey, does not in any sense represent the sole value of the work of the agents of the Intelligence Unit and the Revenue agents associated with them. Invariably, he said, following a conviction there is a tendency on the part of taxpayers to discover a mistake in their returns and they voluntarily come in, make an amended return, and pay additional taxes, penalties, and interest, fearing they might be the next to be prosecuted. Mr. Irey pointed out that, following the Capone conviction, two Chicago individuals voluntarily filed amended returns, paying approximately $200,000 and $238,000. At the time the agents had no information concerning their evasions.

The story of Kanekichi Yamamoto, a Japanese of Seattle who had long been suspected of illegal narcotic and smuggling activities is interesting. In cooperation with narcotic and customs inspectors, as well as a representative of the Tokyo police, they interrogated Yamamoto, and he boldly stated he found the United States so lax in law enforcement, he said he had found it necessary to have several Japanese killed for the best interests of the Japanese people on the western coast. He admitted he had been in the illegal narcotic business. The man had extorted large sums of money from Japanese people in this country. He was sentenced to the penitentiary and later sent back to Japan. Yamamoto pleaded with the officials not to prosecute him, and promised, if any Japanese again became involved in the narcotic business, he would deliver the individuals to the proper authorities in a sack, and it would only be necessary to bury them.

Another case where the Intelligence Unit cooperated with other agents was in the case of a resident of Switzerland, who was found to have $20,000 in gold eagles in a safe deposit box in the Chemical Safe Deposit Co., in New York City, which had not been reported to the United States as required. With the Secret Service it was disclosed the man had large bank deposits in New York and had made money on the stock market. He had failed to report an income of $200,000. Liens were placed against his money, and taxes and penalties, as well as interest, recovered.

Mr. Chairman, I include as part of my remarks the following part of Mr. Irey's testimony included in the hearings on the pending bill:

The Intelligence Unit was organized some 20 years ago by the then Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Daniel C. Roper, and the then Secretary of the Treasury, CARTER GLASS. It had a twofold purpose: First, to investigate the large-scale evasions of income taxes developing with the increased war rates; and, second, to keep the Bureau itself free of wrongdoing among its personnel. This Unit, now an organization of some 300 agents and clerks, who regularly return to the Treasury many millions more in revenue than they expend.

When I was originally requested to set up the Unit, the Post Office Inspection Service was generous enough to send along with me five of my colleagues whom I considered "tops" in investigational work. They are still in the service of the Treasury.

NATURE OF WORK AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF UNIT IN TAX-EVASION CASES

The principal work of the Unit has been the investigation, in cooperation with internal-revenue agents and deputy collectors, of tax-fraud cases.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939, approximately $39,000,000 in additional taxes were recommended in cases investigated by our special agents, in cooperation with revenue agents and deputy collectors, working on an allotment of a little more than a million dollars from the Bureau of Internal Revenue appropriation, and during the period since the organization of the Unit a grand total of $476,573,129.62 in deficiencies has been recommended for assessment.

In addition, during that time 947 individuals have been convicted of income-tax evasion. Included in that number are many enemies of society, gangsters, and murderers, who have been sentenced to the penitentiaries as the result of income-tax charges, and thus, as an incidental result of cheating the Government, their illegal activities have been cut short. Many dishonest public officials have met a similar fate.

The major amount of fraud work, naturally enough, relates to income taxes. The income-tax cases investigated by special agents represent a group which by their nature would not have developed additional tax except by extensive inquiry and persistent investigation as income is usually concealed by many clever and devious schemes which would not be unearthed in the usual tax examination.

Case of Moses Parshelsky

One such case was that of Moses Parshelsky, of Brooklyn, who had derived enormous profits from the sale of real estate which he had not reported for income-tax purposes, and which had been concealed from the Government in the income-tax returns filed. After an exhaustive special investigation under the supervision of special agents covering a 2-year period, Parshelsky was brought into court on charges of income-tax evasion, entered a plea of guilty, and paid $2,000,000 to the Government in settlement of his liability.

Case of E. M. Smith

Another interesting case was that of E. M. Smith, who prior to 1912 was an oil-field worker in California. In that year he entered business for himself in Los Angeles, and in about 1920 secured control of patents covering a machine for the perforating of oil-well casing and pipe. These machines proved valuable, and through the operation of them Smith was enabled, during the period from 1920 to 1930, to enjoy profits of several million dollars. These profits were in a large measure concealed for income-tax purposes through various schemes which were unearthed by special agents' investigation. Criminal proceedings were instituted, and, following a plea of guilty, Smith was sentenced to the penitentiary for a term of 18 months. He paid $1,300,000 into the Treasury in settlement of the tax liability involved.

Cases of Capone, Gordon, Gleckman, and Torrio

Many other cases involving prominent and influential businessmen could be cited, but better known, perhaps, are those cases in which the Intelligence Unit has been successful in obtaining convictions of well-known racketeers, such as Alphonse Capone, of Chicago; Waxey Gordon, of New York; Leon Gleckman, of St. Paul; and John Torrio, of Chicago and New York.

The cases of Al Capone and Irving Wexler, alias Waxey Gordon, are too well known to require extensive comment. Each was a powerful racketeer in his respective community whose career of violence had gone unpunished until income-tax investigations were instituted by the Intelligence Unit. The special agents gathered sufficient evidence to send both to the penitentiary for long terms. The careful, painstaking work of the agents in the Gordon case was commended by Judge Coleman, who stated in open court as follows:

"It is my firm conviction that never in this court, or any other court, has there been such fine work done, either on behalf of the Government or of any private client, as has been done by the agents and the Government attorneys in this case. These agents, who unquestionably could have received fabulous sums had they been willing to deviate from the straight line of their duty, or even to relax their diligence, have gone ahead and have accomplished a collection of evidence such as is truly astounding."

John Torrio was prosecuted last April on charges of income-tax evasion and pleaded not guilty. This individual controlled racketeering activities in Chicago prior to the rise of Al Capone and left that city in 1925 after he had narrowly escaped death from gangland bullets. He tried to conceal his connection therewith by having the stock held in the names of others. Special agents, previous to the trial, had obtained information that Torrio was connected with the Pendergast-Davies Co., of New York City, and had obtained the testimony of a bookkeeper of the company to this effect. During the trial this bookkeeper suffered a loss of memory and could not recall whether Torrio had been connected therewith. By the application of a chemical to the books of the concern, which was done before the jury in open court, a special agent was able to bring forth next to entries on the books of the concern the initials "J. T.," which stood for John Torrio, and which had been erased therefrom. In the face of this evidence Torrio changed his previous plea of not guilty to guilty and was sentenced to 2½ years in the penitentiary. He also paid $104,000 to discharge his income-tax liability.

Leon Gleckman, prior to 1934, was a power in politics in St. Paul, and had been engaged in numerous illegal enterprises which had caused him to be characterized in the press as Public Enemy No. 1. It was exceedingly difficult to obtain any record of his transactions, due to the caution with which he handled them. This difficulty extended into the criminal proceedings when every legal device was tried in an effort to forestall his trial. He was first tried in April 1934, but the jury was discharged when it could not reach an agreement. In November 1934 Gleckman was again tried and this time a conviction was obtained, for which he was sentenced to serve 18 months in the penitentiary and to pay a fine of $10,000.

In 1937 a special agent had occasion to examine the books of the Republic Finance Co., of St. Paul, owned by Gleckman, and he observed the name of Bernard A. Fuchs, a juror in the first trial and one of those who was holding out for acquittal, as having received unpaid loans of $675. Fuchs was immediately interviewed concerning these loans and finally admitted that he had received these sums from Gleckman the day following the disagreement of the jury in May 1934. Fuchs and Leon Gleckman were tried for contempt of court for jury fixing, and found guilty, Gleckman being sentenced to an additional 6 months in the Minneapolis workhouse.

This case has received wide publicity, due to the prominence of the individual involved and the many legal points which were the source of controversy both in the Circuit Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court. The conviction of Leon Gleckman is one of the outstanding achievements of the Intelligence Unit in recent years.

Case of William H. Malone

In addition to the investigation of racketeers, this organization has been called upon to inquire into the tax liability of public officials suspected of accepting graft. One such case was that of William H. Malone, of Chicago, who for many years prior to 1937 was a member and chairman of the Illinois Tax Commission. Malone was found guilty of tax evasion and was sentenced to 2 years in the penitentiary and to pay a fine of $5,000 for evasion of $59,000 income taxes.

Case of Thomas J. Pendergast

More recently and far more outstanding of this type of case is that of Thomas J. Pendergast, so-called political boss of Kansas City, Mo., who was recently sentenced to jail for 15 months and a $10,000 fine on charges of income-tax evasion, to which he pleaded guilty. The investigation developed that Pendergast had defrauded the United States of income taxes totaling $420,983.13 for the years 1927 to 1937, inclusive. Of the unreported income, the largest item totaled $315,000 which Pendergast had received in 1935 and 1936 in connection with the settlement of the Missouri 16½-percent insurance rate litigation.

In December 1929 the five insurance companies doing business in Missouri applied for a 16½-percent increase in rates, which increase was challenged by the superintendent of insurance for the State of Missouri. In the subsequent litigation the additional premiums were impounded and totaled approximately $11,600,000, of which approximately $9,900,000 was under control of the Federal court. In 1935 agreement was reached and approved by the Federal court for the distribution of the latter sum in the proportion of 50 percent to the five insurance companies, 20 percent to policyholders, and 30 percent to C. R. Street and J. Folonie, trustees for the insurance companies for expenses. It was discovered that in May 1935 Street received $100,500 from the various insurance companies which he had not reported on in his tax return.

I might say, as a matter of information, that that amount was discovered by a revenue agent in the regular course of the examination of a firm of lawyers. This item of $100,000 did not appear in their return. The agent questioned them about it, and their answer was that they were simply putting it through as an accommodation for another person, C. R. Street. That was what led to the development of the case.

When questioned, Street refused to state what disposition was made of it and filed an amended return including the additional sum. In 1936 Street received additional sums totaling $345,582.64, which with the other sums made a total of $460,000 paid him by the insurance companies. Street died while the investigation was in progress.

By intensive investigation the agents were able to determine that this money was distributed at the direction of T. J. Pendergast and that $330,000 had been brought in cash from Chicago to Kansas City by an individual and delivered personally to Pendergast. Of this sum, $250,000 was retained by Pendergast. Altogether Pendergast received $315,000 in this deal and in addition derived considerable other income which he failed to report for income-tax purposes.

Tobacco tax racket

In addition to income-tax cases, special agents of the Intelligence Unit have devoted time to other tax evasions. In 1935 and 1936 a determined drive was made to stamp out a tobacco tax racket in Boston and New York City, in which the Government was being defrauded of thousands of dollars annually.

In Boston and New York a force of investigators, dressed to represent the low-income class, made many purchases of cigarettes which were uniformly found to have either no stamp thereon or washed or reused stamps in violation of law. These activities culminated in simultaneous raids on numerous manufacturers, and in Boston 21 individuals were taken into custody and several factories confiscated. In New York similar simultaneous raids resulted in 25 manufacturers being taken into custody and their property forfeited to the United States.

Cases of evasion of gasoline and oil taxes

Another type of case in which the Intelligence Unit has concentrated its efforts relates to evasion of the gasoline and oil tax of 1 cent a gallon, particularly by those who are producing oil in excess of the production quota and are handling what is known as "hot oil." To date criminal proceedings have been instituted against 25 individuals who have been charged with evading this tax.

Social security tax evasions

Many instances of evasion of the social security tax laws have been referred to the Intelligence Unit for investigation, and to date several criminal prosecutions have been instituted against persons who have failed to discharge their liability in this respect.

Violations of Firearms Act

A discussion of tax frauds should also include those cases involving violation of the National Firearms Act. Seventy-six individuals have been convicted and sentenced to prison for violation of the National Firearms Act since the Intelligence Unit has participated in its enforcement.

Fries & Son Steel Co. income-tax case

One of the odd income-tax cases investigated was that of the Fries & Son Steel Construction & Engineering Co., of Lexington, Ky., which was engaged in the business of construction and erection of jails and the construction of prison cells. This is an example of the old adage that "familiarity breeds contempt." The owners of this concern failed to show on the books of their corporation payments received for the construction of the jails and prison cells; and after an investigation disclosed that they owed approximately $14,000 additional income taxes, criminal proceedings were instituted against them and a plea of guilty entered. Approximately $20,000 was paid in satisfaction of the civil liabilities involved.

Motion-picture stars' tax-evasion cases

We had a situation in California several years ago in which a great many movie stars—I think about a hundred—were involved. Evasion of taxes was current through the State, due to the manipulations of certain accountants, and following our investigation we prosecuted and convicted five such accountants, one a woman, whom the court sentenced to 2½ years.

They were all accountants, and they were suggesting methods of evasion to the movie people. There were 22 movie people who, we believed, had a real intent to evade the payment of income taxes, and they were either convicted or pleaded guilty.

There was a recovery of a little over $2,000,000 from the group.

Activities in the Lindbergh case

Within 2 or 3 days after the Lindbergh baby was kidnapped, Al Capone, who was then in jail awaiting the disposition of his appeal, sent word to Colonel Lindbergh that he could apprehend the kidnapers if he were released.

Colonel Lindbergh telephoned the Secretary of the Treasury and asked for a conference with me. I went to Hopewell, N. J., for that conference. Colonel Lindbergh agreed with me that Capone could not be of any help to him. On the request Colonel Lindbergh made to the Secretary, our organization was assigned to work with him in the development of evidence, which we did, for a period of 20 months.

At the time he paid over the ransom money it was our agents who insisted that the bills be listed as to numbers and that there be included in the package of currency a certain number of gold certificates.

It was the payment to a gasoline-station attendant of one of these numbered gold certificates, as you will probably recall, that led to the capture.

Colonel Lindbergh objected quite strenuously to the listing on the theory of wanting to keep faith. He had indicated in his newspaper advertisements that he would keep faith with the kidnapers, and he felt that keeping such a list might not be doing so.

But we insisted that this be done. It was our thought that unless this list was made we could not continue in the case, as failure to do so might be construed as compounding a felony. Upon our urging, he permitted us to list the numbers.

The night the money was paid over a note was delivered to Mr. Condon indicating that the baby was on a boat at Martha's Vineyard.

Early the following morning Colonel Lindbergh, Colonel Breckenridge, Condon, and I flew from New London, Conn., and down around that neighborhood, constantly looking for the boat; of course, without success.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

IMPORTS OF GOLD AS RELATED TO EXPORTS OF GOODS AND SERVICES

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few observations with reference to some of the testimony which I find in the hearings on the Treasury Department appropriation bill. On page 30 of the hearings, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], seeking information on gold imports, propounded this question to Secretary Morgenthau:

I wondered what your philosophy was to the desirability of purchasing such enormous stocks.

The Secretary replied:

The only idea is that you have just two alternatives. If we want to sell goods abroad, it can be paid for in goods and services, in gold and silver, or we can loan them money.

The policy since I have been in the Treasury is that we will not loan them the money; that is, certainly not to the countries which are in default. As to the countries which are in default, not being able to borrow, we will use all of the goods and services they can furnish, and make up the balance with gold and silver, until somebody can do it in some better way than that.

Then the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. JOHNSON] interrogated the Secretary and asked:

If you did not buy this gold, it would greatly interfere with our trade with other countries; it would stifle that trade, would it not?

Secretary Morgenthau replied:

It would fall off by that amount.

Mr. Chairman, this latter reply of the Secretary is extremely interesting to me, but I cannot believe the Secretary meant to make that statement. On the other hand, when you go through and review the additional pages of the testimony it appears that perhaps he did mean to make that statement.

Referring to the January, 1940, Federal Reserve Bulletin, page 11, we find these interesting comments by E. A. Goldenweiser, Director of Research Statistics for the Federal Reserve Board:

Monetary gold in this country today has mounted to the unprecedented total of 17.6 billions. It has increased by about 13.6 billions since the beginning of 1934. Of the increase 2.8 billions represent the result of the revaluation from $20.67 to $35 an ounce of the 4 billions in gold which we had at that time, and 0.2 billion was gold acquired under the gold buying program before revaluation. The remaining 10.6 billions have been added to the gold stock since January 1934. A little less than 9 billion of the increase represents production and return of coin and scrap gold in this country and 9.7 billions are the result of imports from abroad.

It is estimated that 3.1 billions came out of central bank reserves of other countries, mostly France and England, and 6.1

billions out of foreign mines, largely from South Africa. A half billion dollars more on balance has come from other sources, principally private holdings in India.

Mr. Goldenweiser further comments by saying:

To the extent of 2.2 billions our gold acquisitions represent an exchange of goods and services for gold. This is not, however, the way the matter looks to the people who sold the goods and services.

Going back and quoting the Secretary, he said in answer to the question asked by the gentleman from West Virginia in reference to our trade with other countries, that, "it would fall off by that amount." By what amount? By the amount of the total purchase of gold. Yet Mr. Goldenweiser shows that gold moved as an incident of trade during this whole period to the extent of only 2.2 billion. Deducting the latter sum from the total gold imports of 9.7 billion would leave a difference of 7.5 billion error in the Secretary's answer.

May I also state the Treasury statement shows that during this period up to January 18, 1940, our gold stock did move up to a total of $17,807,000,000. If you will take the hearings and go to page 14 you will find where the Treasury Department shows the acquisition of gold step by step from January 29, 1934, up to November 30, 1939. You will also find that during the year 1939 we acquired in round figures $3,000,000,000 worth of gold in that 1 year.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. What would the gentleman say has been done with the difference between the $2,200,000,000 of gold acquired by trade and the ten-billion-odd dollars which has been acquired during the period of which the gentleman speaks?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think I will answer that question as I proceed, if the gentleman will permit.

The observation has been made to the effect that as the Nation's monetary gold stock nears the $18,000,000,000 mark and with gold imports continuing at a rate in excess of current world production of the yellow metal, the surplus supply of gold remains perhaps the most fundamental of the financial problems confronting the United States. In this connection, it is very interesting to further observe a statement made by Secretary Morgenthau which appears near the top of page 35 of the hearings. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] interrogated the Secretary by asking, "The credit of the Government was never better than now?" Secretary Morgenthau replied, "It is at the top."

Personally, I am very much inclined to disagree with the Secretary in his reply. I seriously question the Secretary's approach not only when he says, "It is at the top," but as well when the Secretary says, in referring to the legal limit of obligations to be issued by the Government, and in answer to a question propounded by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. JOHNSON].

Do you care to express an opinion as to whether or not you think it advisable to go beyond the $45,000,000,000 limit? I mean so far as the Appropriations Committee is concerned—

Secretary Morgenthau replied, "Yes; I think it should be raised to $50,000,000,000."

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] continued the interrogation, and the Secretary observed that—Anything might happen, and if it was up to me, I would recommend, and am willing to say, that the debt limit should be raised to $50,000,000,000.

The Secretary also observed—

That there is no particular danger involved if Congress would raise the debt limit to $50,000,000,000. Beyond that I would not venture an opinion.

But when you go back to page 17 of the hearings we find where the Secretary makes this interesting statement in reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]:

In coming before you at this time, and trying to make such a forecast, I think the conditions are such that I find it more difficult to look into the future and make an intelligent forecast than at almost any other time.

In the light of this statement made by the Treasurer pointing out the difficulty of looking into the future and making intelligent forecasts, I am at a loss to understand why Mr. Morgenthau speaks with such a degree of positiveness with reference to the $5,000,000,000 increase in the debt limitation. Yet, based on those uncertain conditions, the Secretary takes the position that it is entirely feasible, practical, and in order for us to proceed to authorize $50,000,000,000. He does say in the hearings, however, that when we reach $49,000,000,000 he might want to take a look at the picture from that point.

Just what type of yardstick is Secretary Morgenthau using at the present time in his calculations with reference to the $5,000,000,000 increase in the debt limit which he recommends?

In 1939 we had occasion to witness the erratic movement in the Government bond market, which, to say the least, was somewhat startling. The convulsions which occurred were greater than in any year since those of 1931 and 1932, and these convulsions were engendered, not by internal happenings but by circumstances beyond the control of the American people and directly connected with the economic and social affairs of people in other parts of the world. Had there been an internal dislocation on a scale comparable to what has occurred in western Europe, for instance, perhaps the Secretary would not feel that the credit of the Government was at the top or that we would be entirely safe in definitely moving on to the $50,000,000,000 milestone.

Those engaged with the responsibility of managing the portfolios of our banks, which, I am now informed, hold more than $18,000,000,000 of Government obligations, suffered from very serious headaches during the year 1939, when there was a drop of as much as 9 points on the 2¾-percent bonds outstanding of the Government. Of course, it became necessary for the Federal Reserve bank to enter the market and give very substantial support. Further, I understand the Treasury did not offer during the year 1939 any of its direct obligations other than a small issue of $150,000,000 in Treasury bills in October and November for cash until the offerings for cash in November of $500,000,000 of 2-percent Treasury bonds of 1948 to 1950 were put on the market. Had the situation been of such a nature that, while Government two and three-quarters were declining as much as 9 points, it had been necessary for the Treasury to make direct offerings in substantial volume, we might have discovered that the credit of the Government was not "at the top."

We must admit, however, that the timing exercised by the Treasury during 1939 on its refunding operations was very well done. But, at the same time, let me point out that during the year 1939 our purchases and imports of gold were in the neighborhood of $3,000,000,000. As I say, referring to page 14 of the hearings, you will get more detailed information on that point.

Again, excess reserves of member banks exceed $5,500,000,000 at the present time, and I believe last year they touched around $5,530,000,000.

Let us be realistic about this whole matter. Discontinue imports of gold, for instance, and increase the reserve requirements of our member banks sufficiently to absorb present excess reserves down to a manageable proportion, which is being recommended and has been recommended by the Federal Reserve Board, and which is a matter monetary authorities are exceedingly concerned about, and at the same time increase substantially the demand for commercial loans, and then see what demand there would be for governments and see how much the Government credit would stand "at the top." That is the yardstick to apply on this proposition of the readiness and the eagerness of our people to acquire more Government bonds.

Let us consider this phase of it. In 1939, for instance, we, the people, went to the Treasury and absorbed into our possession, roughly, $1,100,000,000 maturity value of baby bonds; but keep in mind that during the year 1939 there was a breathing spell, you might say, during which time the Treasury did not make any extraordinary amount of new offerings.

Students of the market tell me that during the next 12 to 18 months the Treasury will be forced to put onto the market new offerings of somewhere around $2,700,000,000 as compared to the small amount that was offered last year. Suppose those new offerings come along with a discontinuance of imports of gold, which build up excess reserves and all upon a declaration of peace in Europe and on a declining bond market.

And may I say, responding to the inquiry of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] a few moments ago, that, as this gold has moved in, it has built up the excess reserves; and, as the excess reserves build up, the banks demand more and more and more earning power of some kind. In times of international distress there is no inclination on the part of our people to go to the banks and increase their commercial loans unless the price level is materially advancing as it did for a few days in early September. But look at what has happened to the commercial loans since the September spree disappeared. We are now back to a situation where last week, I am informed, the New York banks alone acquired $123,000,000 of governments because of the scarcity of commercial loans, plus increasing excess reserves as a result of additional importations of gold. The program of gold imports will apparently go on for a considerable time unless peace is negotiated, and in that event there might be a reversal of the flow of gold bullion.

It has been pointed out in recent days by experts on the question that to discontinue the purchase of this gold at present prices would precipitate exchange chaos throughout the whole international exchange market, and I have no idea that our present administration will be a contributor to an unsettling of international exchange in the future any more than at present.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Can the gentleman think of any reason, in view of the amount of gold we have on hand in the way of reserves, why gold should not be remonetized and the law repealed which makes it a crime for an individual to hold gold?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I was just going to comment on that point by quoting from an editorial in the New York Journal of Commerce, published under date of January 10, in which the editor points out that—

It may well be that the United States could help effect a stabilization of foreign exchange after the war through lending some of its vast surplus of gold to other nations. It is equally possible, of course, that such loans will not be wanted or that this country will be unwilling to make them. As long as the possibility exists, however, a very strong case can be made for maintaining the status quo.

The editor of the Journal makes another observation which I think is very much to the point when he says:

While thus opposing any limitation upon gold buying by the Treasury or a lowering of the price paid for the yellow metal, Mr. Aldrich does favor the removal of existing restrictions upon hoarding gold and the restoration of gold coin and certificates to circulation. In this way he feels a considerable amount of gold could be disposed of by the Treasury, to be drawn in again only in the event of some future emergency.

He further points out that it is too early even to guess at the nature or the type of settlement which will follow the war now going on in Europe, and that it might be well for the United States to continue the accumulation of gold, so that we would be in a position to exercise more influence in putting the international exchanges on a stabilized basis.

Now, Mr. Aldrich, head of one of the greater banks of New York, points out that it would perhaps be a very sound step for us to take, and sound in that it would relieve this enormous gold burden on the Treasury and now on the member banks of the Federal Reserve System through their excess reserve accumulation, if the laws were changed so that our people could begin to accumulate gold as they did before our present laws prohibited that privilege.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I introduced a bill during this Congress, I think in the first session, to provide that the purchases of new gold should be paid for with gold certificates. Of course, that would imply that it would be legal again for private citizens to hold gold. Can the gentleman think of any reason why we should borrow money to pay for gold when, if the Government wished, it might directly issue gold certificates at face value against the gold that is purchased?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not know why we should issue interest-bearing paper with which to obtain dollar exchange, with which in turn to pay for the gold imports and thereby furnish dollar exchange, to those who desire to acquire securities in our industries at present depressed prices—and I think they are greatly depressed at the present time—and have our people proceed to pay interest on the debt that is created as a result of making that purchase.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to answer the gentleman from South Dakota and say to him that I have urged lately upon the speaker, who knows so much about this subject, to offer a bill in this session of Congress to remonetize gold. Of all the men in this House who could support that argument I think he is the one, and I shall expect him to do it; and while I am on my feet may I ask the speaker if he mentioned before I came in Secretary Morgenthau's proposition to increase the debt limit?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I did.

Mr. GIFFORD. I wanted to suggest to him it would be very embarrassing for Secretary Morgenthau if we do not do that; because, if we should reach the limit, he has already made the statement that he would not honor any more checks. All of us know there are receipts coming into the Treasury every day and he will have some money to pay somebody. If he would have to play favorites, it would be very embarrassing, would it not?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] a few moments ago referred to the financial statement of the United States as of June 30, 1939, as published in the annual report of the Comptroller General of the United States for the last mentioned date. In referring to that balance sheet I find the gold holdings listed as "Gold unencumbered, $2,358,547,588.83; silver unencumbered, $615,085,905.30."

This, in a way, gives the interpretation of the Comptroller General as to who owns the gold which is not covered by the gold certificates and that portion which is covered by gold certificates and which is held by banks.

This balance sheet also shows as an asset "Foreign government obligations receivable, $14,026,099,965.65." It shows a national deficit of $23,703,518,035.46.

If we add to the national deficit here shown the $14,000,000,000 which is set up as a claim against the foreign governments as an asset, it gives us a deficit of $36,700,000,000, and I believe that is the figure which the gentleman from Massachusetts referred to as against the $35,000,000,000 which had been mentioned, I believe, by the Chief Executive in one of his messages.

So in referring to this balance sheet, it seems to me that those who study it, from the standpoint of a going concern, should eliminate at least $16,000,000,000 of the assets, because I do not believe that a professional accountant would certify such doubtful claims as an asset if he were preparing a financial statement for one of our large commercial organizations. Who really believes the fourteen billions will be collected from the European debtors?

The Comptroller General's report, to those who might be interested, gives the details of these claims against foreign governments and also shows the accrued interest chargeable against each receivable from the government in question, and I call your attention to that because I believe you will be interested in using it from time to time.

Now, going back to the question of disposition of some of this gold, Mr. Aldrich has pointed out that—

We must all look forward to the day, and prepare for it, when the world will again find itself at peace. It is too soon to attempt a forecast of the influences which will determine the nature of that peace. But one thing is certain, if peace, when it comes, is to have any real permanency, and that is that the multitudinous barriers which at the time of the outbreak of the war prohibited or unduly hampered trade between the nations of the world must be removed, and that a situation must be created in which goods may move freely and in volume over international borders.

He says further:

We are already the possessors of 60 percent of the world's monetary gold stock. Before peace can be achieved this share may have risen further. In a large sense we are and will be the conservators of the world's monetary system. It is for this reason, as well as for ample reason of our own, that we must take action now to preserve the monetary character of gold. As I see it, our immediate function is to reestablish a free gold market, permitting free movement of gold bars and gold currency both inward and outward, so that the price of gold as here established shall constitute a firm and certain base line from which the values of the diverse currencies of the world can be confidently figured.

It would appear that Mr. Aldrich has some premonitions as to what may happen to gold as a monetary base if the United States proceeds to accumulate from 75 to 100 percent of the monetary gold of the world, and if the central banks and governments of the foreign countries decide to demonetize gold and remove it from the monetary scheme of the world's central banking, currency, and credit systems.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Evidently you refer to Mr. Goldenweiser's paper?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I notice that Mr. Winthrop Aldrich takes the opposite view. He answers Goldenweiser's statement that we must continue to buy gold, lest it might disturb international exchange, by showing that when we return to a gold-coin standard and an open gold- and silver-bullion market, these things will automatically take care of the question of international exchange, and instead of becoming more disordered it will become more ordered. This is my opinion also.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that conclusion is worthy of very serious consideration. This gold problem deserves our attention now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to interject a few remarks after the able statement by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], who has preceded me.

I do not fear, and I do not think many fear, that we will be left "holding the bag" because of our large supply of gold. Some do claim that it may be useless, because gold might be discontinued in the world as a monetary unit. Currencies today are still measured by gold. They are off the gold standard only as to weight. But the point I want to make is this: Our own people desire some hard money. People are getting worried about what some economists call fake money. Briefly, when we go to the bank with a thousand-dollar note, we get $1,000 in money, newly created money. When we pay that note, that credit or created money is marked off the ledger. We have created some $25,000,000,000 by the bond indebtedness of the Federal Government—new money, which when spent simply goes into other people's pockets and returns again to the bank. So that we have that so-called fake money out until the bonds are paid. But they are simply renewed and will not be paid for a long period of time. So that kind of money is piling up in the banks as credits. Many people fear this condition; many people would like to have some of that $18,000,000,000 of hard money for use or for hoarding. Something that we might feel was of a much safer and dependable form of money. That is created money, which is not canceled, is reaching a highly dangerous point. I appeal that we remonetize gold; that we may have something of intrinsic and commodity value, rather than paper promises in such dangerous quantities.

While I have a moment, I would remark that baby bonds have recently been purchased in large quantities. The post offices are selling them in competition with savings institutions. One party stated to me lately, "As everybody is buying them, I have taken my money out of our savings bank and invested in them." I replied, "You are investing money in my salary, in battleships, and Government expenses." The savings banks invested in homes and in business. "But everybody is buying baby bonds. Of course, they must be good." Somebody said, "I don't want to take your note." "Oh," was the reply, "my notes must be good. Everybody's got 'em!" [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I believe there is a great deal of confusion in the minds of the Members of Congress on both sides in regard to the proposed Finnish loan. I suspect that every Member of Congress would like to help Finland if they could do so and be assured it would not be an unneutral act on our part, or involve us in any foreign entanglements and wars. The American people have been thrilled by the gallant and heroic defense of Finland against the red avalanche of communism. Today Finland is fighting in the front-line trenches against communism, on behalf of democracy and Christianity. Those are self-evident facts that every American knows, and there is no wonder that the American people—and this transcends all party lines—are almost united in their sympathy and desire to help Finland and the Finnish people in defense of their liberties and independence if we can do so without involving the United States of America into foreign wars.

I think I am known as an isolationist in this House. At least, I pride myself on being an isolationist from foreign wars. I know of nothing that I would not do to keep America out of foreign wars, except in case of attack by some foreign foe, or violation of the Monroe Doctrine, or invasion of some South American or Latin American country by a European or Asiatic nation. But that does not mean that I am an isolationist from peace, from limitation of armaments, or from promoting peaceful relations among nations and from trying to alleviate distress, suffering, destitution, and starvation in the world.

We all know the serious unemployment situation of our own country. We have 10,000,000 unemployed, and the Congress does not propose to let any of them starve. We face a deplorable economic condition; but in spite of that unfortunate condition we are the richest nation in the world, with the greatest natural resources.

If any nation is to lift even so much as its finger in a financial way to alleviate distress in the world, to help feed and clothe the hungry and destitute in Finland and in Poland who are now—to some extent at least in Finland—fighting our battles, and in Poland dying of undernourishment and starvation, it seems to me we cannot always hide behind the fact that we have some unemployed in America. We cannot evade the fact of our great resources and wealth, and plead poverty and stay aloof from our moral duty to alleviate starvation and distress in foreign lands and do something to lessen man's inhumanity to man as the result of man-made wars.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield, but I have only stated the preface to my remarks so I hope the gentleman will not come to any conclusion as to my recommendations.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I will not, but I was wondering if the gentleman knows of any law on our statute books today that would prevent a loan to Finland by the Export-

Import Bank without restrictions upon the use to which the funds are put?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman has practically taken the words out of my mouth because that is what I propose to speak on. I intend to speak on the President's letter to the Congress in which he advocates that the Congress allocate certain sums of money, unnamed, to the Export-Import Bank for the purpose of affording relief to Finland in their great national emergency. This question of loans to foreign nations is a very serious one and it is one that should be approached with the utmost caution, disassociated entirely from partisanship. I have made no poll on the Republican side of the House, but I have ascertained enough to know that there is a marked division not of sentiment or sympathy toward Finland but as to what should be done or what could be done at the present time. It is very proper that their views have not crystallized in order that they may decide after careful study just what should be done, having in view the best interests of our own country. I am speaking today in a generic sense on the whole proposition of lending money to foreign governments.

Let me preface my remarks by saying that fundamentally I am opposed to lending any money to foreign nations, but there is always an exception to every proposition of this kind. I think most of us find ourselves in agreement on the proposition that we have had a very sad experience in lending money to foreign nations in the past. Very few if any of these nations except Finland have paid back their debts to us. We lent most of the nations of Europe huge sums of money after the World War, not only during the World War, but $2,000,000,000 after the World War for relief purposes, and very little of it has been repaid. We lent money to Latvia, to Lithuania, to Estonia, to Greece, to Rumania, to Finland, and to many other nations; and there is a very deplorable record in connection with all these loans except that with Finland. This is why the Finnish loan should stand on its own bottom. It should be separated from every other loan, first, because Finland paid its debts and stands alone by itself in all its glory, so that today it is known as little honest Finland.

Second, because, as I pointed out, they are actually fighting against the spread of communism and for democracy and Christianity.

I am not in favor of the proposal of the President that we should allocate a huge sum of money as a revolving fund, let us say $100,000,000, to the Export-Import Bank and permit that governmental agency to make loans to any nation in the world, even to Soviet Russia, for there is no legal restriction. There is no restriction on the lending power of the Export-Import Bank as to nations nor as to the sale of arms, ammunition, and implements of war. The Congress should not turn over the control of the purse strings to the Export-Import Bank, and I have the highest regard for Mr. Pierson, the able President of the Bank; but he is an individual, and might die tomorrow, or resign, and we do not know who will succeed him; it might even be some fellow traveler who is friendly to Soviet Russia. The first thing, therefore, I wish to warn the Members of Congress against is not to surrender control of the purse strings and turn over $100,000,000 to any agency of the Government, because when you do that you not only surrender your greatest power, control of the purse strings, but you put in the hands of a bureaucratic agency of the Government the shaping of our foreign policies. The man who controls the money makes the foreign policies, not the Congress of the United States, not the various committees of the Congress, but the single individual who has control of the expenditure of that money, and the lending of that money to foreign lands.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Perhaps it should be said for the head of the lending agency, who is the administrator over the head of the Export-Import Bank, Mr. Jesse Jones, a gentleman I think famous throughout the Nation for his horse sense, that he was quoted in the press the other day as saying that a $10,000,000 loan to Finland would be all right, that he would lend that but he would not be willing to go beyond that without the authorization of Congress. Perhaps, therefore, it is unfair to say that he would be extravagant in this instance or go beyond his power which, I suppose, is that of a trustee; and I suppose ours is the same; we should consider ourselves as trustees without the right to be generous. Neither extravagance nor generosity is permitted to trustees.

Mr. FISH. I am very glad the gentlewoman from Illinois came to the defense of Jesse Jones. I have served for many years in the past as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I know Mr. Jones well and have the highest regard for him and complete confidence in his Americanism and his desire to do what is right. I am opposed, however, to the whole principle of delegating the control of the purse strings to some governmental agency, whether the head of the agency be Jesse Jones, Mr. Pearson, or to somebody else equally good, for when you do that you surrender at the same time the greatest power of Congress, control of the purse strings and the shaping of our foreign policy. If we continue to delegate power to these bureaucratic agencies we might just as well fold up as a deliberative and legislative body and go out of business. I, for one, would prefer to have the Congress take back some of the power we have already surrendered and restore representative government in the United States of America. [Applause.]

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. My point was that in this case we are not confronted with the proposition of delegating power because the gentleman to whom the power would be delegated, Mr. Jesse Jones, says he does not wish to be extravagant. If we wish to be extravagant with our trust that is our own responsibility.

Mr. FISH. I wish I might agree with the gentlewoman; first, because I like her, and second, because she is generally right.

In this instance I have to differ from her, because the proof of the pudding is always in the eating thereof. This is not a new proposition by any means. The Export-Import Bank has already lent China $25,000,000 and we in the Congress have had nothing to say about that. We have never discussed it in the Congress of the United States that I know of. We have never considered lending money to any foreign nation. I do not remember any debate since the World War on whether it should be the policy of our Government to lend money to foreign nations or not, yet you will find that we deliberately lent China $25,000,000 through the Export-Import Bank.

If we can lend money to China, certainly we can lend money to Finland. China has been at war for 2 or 3 years. That loan was not just to provide foodstuffs and agricultural supplies, but also for trucks, gasoline, copper, lead, and so forth. In fact, 500 or more commodities have been bought under that loan. Therefore I say that if we are to lend money to anyone, in view of the fact we made a loan to China we should lend a like sum of money to Finland to buy not merely foodstuffs and cotton but all commodities except arms, ammunition, and implements of war. I am convinced that if we actually put up money for the purpose of buying deadly and lethal weapons we will have committed an unneutral act and will have practically intervened in that war. Japan has never complained because we lent China $25,000,000 to buy everything else, but if we had put up the money for China to buy arms, ammunition, and implements of war, then you would have had a protest from Japan overnight. There is a distinction recognized by all nations between deadly or lethal weapons and other commodities.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. May I say to the gentleman it seems to me the question of neutrality revolves around whether one treats all nations alike that may be engaged in war, whether declared or not. In the case of China, Mr. Jesse Jones, testifying before the Banking and Currency Committee, stated that that was a good loan; that it was lent to certain private individuals which will be repaid regardless of the result of the war. But in this Finnish case he states that any loan over $10,000,000 will not be a good loan. So if we make a loan that is not a good loan, or if Congress passes a law saying that we should make a loan notwithstanding the fact it may not be a good loan, we are going beyond the bounds of neutrality.

Mr. FISH. I think we are talking about different things. The gentleman is arguing about the amount of the loan and whether the loan is a good loan or not. I am not arguing at all about the amount, or even whether it is a good or bad loan. I am arguing about the principle involved.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. So am I.

Mr. FISH. That is, whether we should make a loan to any country, and, second, if we make loans, each loan should stand on its own merits and it should be discussed and voted on by the Congress of the United States. I am sure the gentleman must agree with the premise I am trying to establish that we must not delegate control of these loans to any subordinate officers of the Government.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. In other words, the gentleman does not believe in the policies of the Export-Import Bank?

Mr. FISH. I do not believe in making loans to any foreign nation without the consent of Congress. I might be willing to except Latin America. It is a dangerous policy to engage in to permit the Export-Import Bank to make loans to foreign nations all over the world without getting the approval of the Congress on each specific loan, because it will then become a habit to lend money to every nation, and if we lend to one nation why not to all? And, further, we in the Congress will have nothing to say about it and have no control of the purse strings or in shaping important foreign policies.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. How does the gentleman think this Congress could by specific act authorize a direct loan to Finland under the circumstances the gentleman is describing and not be accused of intervening in that war?

Mr. FISH. Because no war has been declared and we have not officially recognized a state of war to exist. Let me say we are responsible for the acts of our agents. If loans are made through an agency of the Congress, the Congress responsible for creating that agency is therefore, responsible indirectly for the loan to China. There was no complaint from the Japanese on account of that loan and there will be no complaint as the war has not been officially recognized there. However, I want the Congress to control the purse-strings and the foreign policy of our Government and determine each important loan of that kind itself. Soviet Russia and Finland are in a state of war, but they have not acknowledged it themselves by any declaration of war and neither has the President or the Congress proclaimed it to exist officially.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The President has not declared it, consequently under the Neutrality Act there is no requirement of cash purchases, so credit can be extended.

Mr. FISH. That is so.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Finland is not in default on the general obligations of the country, so she does not run afoul of the Johnson Act. The Export-Import Bank does have an authorized capital of $100,000,000 of loaning power which has not been entirely exhausted. Under these circumstances, since the bank has already made a $25,000,000 loan to China and a $10,000,000 loan to Finland, I am unable to see how the Export-Import Bank lacks authority to make a loan to Finland if it wants to. It seems to me the attempt to unload the responsibility on Congress at the present time is entirely unfair.

Mr. FISH. The Export-Import Bank has already made a loan to Finland of $10,000,000. The President proposes that Congress increase the revolving credit fund of the bank, which I am unwilling to do. I want to limit the power of the bank to make loans to foreign nations outside of the American continent.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. In fairness to Mr. Jones, should not the record show that the loan to China was not a loan to the Government of China?

Mr. FISH. The loan to China is guaranteed by the Chinese Bank, but of course the Chinese Bank is backed by the Chinese Government.

Mr. MILLER. The testimony of Mr. Jones was that the loan was made to a private corporation in New York.

Mr. FISH. Yes; but on the guarantee of the Bank of China.

Mr. MILLER. I am just quoting the testimony of Mr. Jones before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the record will bear me out that the loan was made to a private corporation backed by the Bank of China.

Mr. FISH. It is a private corporation in New York City set up for that purpose, and the only financial backing it has is the Bank of China, which is synonymous with the Chinese Government.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit at this point, the table of loans made by the Export-Import Bank as put in the hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill showed that the Finnish loan is a loan to the Finnish Trading Corporation and not directly to the Finnish Government.

Mr. FISH. Yes; but guaranteed by either Finnish banks or the Government. I want to get back to the Finnish loan and discuss for a few minutes the situation in Finland. Other nations not as rich as ours have already donated very large amounts of wheat, coffee, or other commodities to Finland. I have been reliably informed that Sweden has contributed $18,000,000. We should either act now in this emergency or not at all. If we keep dilly-dallying about affording relief and wait 2 or 3 months, it may be too late; and yet these smaller nations have acted immediately.

I again emphasize this one fact: I am opposed to the suggestion of the President of the United States that the Congress increase its revolving fund by a huge sum of money, let us say $100,000,000, which is the sum mentioned in the press, so that either the President or Mr. Jones or Mr. Pierson or some subordinate Government official may take that money and loan it to foreign nations. I want to go on record that I am in favor of the Congress making a loan or a direct gift to Finland immediately, within the next few weeks' time, but I am not in favor of turning over the powers of Congress to the President or some subordinate official to make loans to foreign nations.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. The gentleman has expressed the view about which I intended questioning him, but the gentleman has said that he wants to do nothing that would be unneutral. Would action on the part of the Congress in making a loan to Finland be an unneutral act, in the opinion of the gentleman; and if so, then how could this country or how could the Government come to the rescue of Finland at this time of her great stress without committing an unneutral act?

Mr. FISH. Let me say to the gentleman very emphatically that I do not believe it is an unneutral act at all for this Government or the Congress to make a loan or a direct gift to Finland as long as war has not been declared by either side or the fact that a war exists has not been recognized by this Government or by the Congress. If the Congress recognizes the war, which we have a right to do, or if the President by proclamation recognizes the fact that war exists, the situation would be changed overnight. We loaned twenty-five millions to China and there has been no objection on the part of Japan; but if we sold arms and ammunition, I believe that would complicate the loan and bring forth an immediate protest that we were intervening by furnishing money to buy arms and I believe it would be an unneutral act.

Mr. COX. Of course, we know a state of war does exist.

Mr. FISH. Certainly we know it. There is no question about it. But the nations involved for their own reasons have not made any declaration of war.

Mr. COX. We come right back to the question the gentleman asked some time ago: Does not the whole question revolve around the question of our relationship with all other countries?

Mr. FISH. All I can say to the gentleman is that I do not believe it would be an unneutral act at all under the circumstances, as long as we do not sell arms, ammunition, and implements of war. I hope the Members of Congress will give due consideration to the proposition that the Finnish loan should stand on its own bottom and that we should consider it at once, and if we want to do it, in the wisdom of the Congress, let us make either a loan or an outright gift and thereby retain the control over the purse strings and our foreign policies and not surrender them to some loaning agency of the Government.

Back in 1923 or 1924 I introduced in this House an authorization of $10,000,000 to buy foodstuffs and clothing for the starving women and children in Germany, a few years after the war ended. The bill was reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs and after an all-day or longer debate in this House it was adopted by over a two-to-one vote. That measure provided for an outright grant of $10,000,000 for foodstuffs and clothing to be given to the starving women and children of Germany. I submit that the condition in Poland now is far, far worse than it ever was in Germany in 1923 and 1924.

Literally, in Poland today one-third of the population are starving. They are in the midst of the greatest human agony Europe or our civilization has witnessed during our lifetime. Probably 1,000,000 Poles will die of destitution within the next 6 months or before the summertime comes, and if we are ever to do anything in the way of relief for them we should do it now. Certainly it would not be an unneutral act after all we did for the Belgians when they were under German control; and certainly America, if it has any humanity at all, cannot refuse to turn its surplus wheat and cotton over to feed and clothe the Poles in the midst of their misery and do everything we can, both through the Congress and the American people, to alleviate the distress and destitution that exists among the Polish people who have always been the friends of the United States.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. I am sorry my time has expired.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I will get the gentleman 5 minutes more if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. FISH. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes additional.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I was very much interested in hearing the gentleman discuss the solution of the Finnish question as to finances and he has, I think, delivered a most interesting and important discussion of the question. Just briefly and summing it up, fearing that I may not have the ability to state just what the gentleman has said, I would like to know just what the gentleman's position is in regard to Finland. [Laughter.]

Mr. FISH. That is really a very fair question, because I am not trying to force my opinion on the Members of the House. I have been trying to discuss the policy that we should pursue, and if you ask me what I would do, it is simply this: I have put in a bill to give Finland twenty millions to buy supplies in America.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Just pardon me a moment, but the gentleman has stated he is unwilling to risk the Export-Import Bank on it and he is unwilling to risk the President of the United States on it—

Mr. FISH. That is right.

Mr. MASSINGALE. And he wants Congress to go ahead and do it. Now, what does the gentleman want Congress to do—go to war?

Mr. FISH. No; I do not think this has anything to do with war or I would not be for it. I think a loan or gift to Finland would be a completely neutral act. I do not care a bit whether it is a loan or a gift in this emergency. They either need it now or never.

I say the Finnish proposal stands by itself, but I am willing to change my opinion if any Member of the House proves to me it is better to have a loan than a gift. I am perfectly willing to change my views, but what I insist is that it ought to be discussed in this House and acted upon now in the emergency. I shall not quibble whether it is a loan or a gift, but it should be considered by the Congress and acted upon by the Congress and not by some subordinate agency of the Government. I do not believe the gentleman wants to delegate the control of loans to anybody—to the President, to Mr. Jones, or to Mr. Pierson, or to the finest Democrat in the land, or to any bureaucratic agency. It is not a question of individuals or of Republicans or Democrats. It is a question of the power of the House of Representatives and of Congress. Are we mice or are we men? I do not think the gentleman wants to go on record as being in favor of delegating the control of the purse strings to someone outside of Congress in making loans to foreign nations without the consent of Congress.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I want to go on record to this extent. My sympathies are just as thoroughly with Finland as is the sentiment of the gentleman from New York, but I am not going to take the chance of having the Congress of the United States making a war against the Soviets or Germany or anybody else because of my sympathy for Finland.

Mr. FISH. Although I do not always agree with the majority, I always submit that they have the right to control legislation in this House and it is their duty to do so under the Constitution and not to delegate any of the powers of the Congress to some outside agency, because when you on the Democratic side delegate away the powers of the House you delegate them away from the minority as well. I am opposed to continual surrender of congressional power to bureaucratic agencies, but I have confidence in the Congress, no matter whether it is Republican or otherwise, if it maintains the power over the purse strings granted by the Constitution. I have confidence that it will uphold its own rights and prerogatives and legislate wisely and in the interest of the people. I do not believe in abdicating our constitutional powers to governmental bureaus, agencies, or corporations.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COX. If a loan or a contribution is made by Mr. Jones or by the President and it was held that it would be an unneutral act, would it not be equally unneutral for this Congress to so legislate?

Mr. FISH. Certainly; and I do not want them to do an unneutral act and I do not want the Congress to do an unneutral act, and if I thought it was unneutral to make a loan to Finland I would be against it. I do not see how it could be unneutral under the conditions I have tried to explain.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I understood the gentleman to say that the Export-Import Bank had already loaned $10,000,000.

Mr. FISH. That is quite right.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. They have absolutely loaned that amount at the present time.

Mr. FISH. The loan has been agreed upon, but the money has not been spent. I think only $1,000,000 of the $10,000,000 has already been spent, but the loan has been made.

I hope the Members of the House, before they form their opinions and reach a definite conclusion, will give consideration to maintaining the control of the purse strings and the formation of our foreign policies in the Congress of the United States. Time is of the essence, and we should act now by loan or gift to help Finland in its hour of trial and national emergency. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, on the subject of the Finnish loan, I may say that on October 16, last year, I made a speech with regard to the Russian-Finnish negotiations that were being carried on, at which time I stated:

I am wondering if Russia is completely aware of the strong attachment the people of America feel and have felt toward Finland. We cannot legislate feeling and emotion out of the hearts of Americans. Nor do I for a moment think that any Member of this House believes that we can. The strong feeling of friendship that exists between the United States and Finland should be well recognized throughout the world. This friendship should not be taken too lightly by imperialistic nations bent on extending their power over a smaller neighbor.

We know that Russia has now invaded Finland. We have not joined the League of Nations, but we have adopted the policy that has been expressed by the League of Nations, that is, take action short of war against the aggressor nation. Certainly Russia is the aggressor nation in this case.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I would rather finish my statement. I will yield later.

Accordingly, shortly after the conflict began I conferred with some of the Government officials and whether or not it was because of that conference I do not know, but a $10,000,000 loan was granted by the Export-Import Bank. I do not know whether it was because of that conference, but I do know that the loan was granted.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I would rather yield at the end of my statement, and I will yield to the gentleman later.

Previous to the commencement of this Congress I drafted several bills. One provided for the suspension of their debt which arose out of and in connection with the World War and a refund of the interest paid thereon. After having drafted that bill I realized that there were two parties to the contract when the debt was entered into and that Finland was one of those parties. I therefore conferred with the officials of Finland as to what their opinion was with regard to the cancellation and suspension of the debt or a refund of the interest. I was informed that Finland was not interested either in suspension or cancellation of the debt or even the refunding of the interest. They certainly appreciated the kind offer of help, but said that Finland always paid their debts and would continue to pay them as long as possible. Finland was, however, interested in financial help, of course. The Finns must have help now if it is to do any good. I was informed that the Finnish Government borrowed in the United States in the post-war days, not $9,000,000 but somewhere in the neighborhood of $115,000,000. That was not altogether from the Government of the United States but from private interests and the Government, and all those loans are completely paid with the exception of about $12,000,000. Every payment was made as it became due. I was also informed that negotiations were carried on with other nations of the world for loans to Finland which amounted to approximately $325,000,000.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HOOK. Finland has paid and met those obligations. However, in meeting those obligations they built up a good credit but spent their cash. They did not do as other nations of the world—fail to meet their debts and pile up a fund for their protection in the event of war. No; Finland was a peace-loving nation. She did not want war. She did not prepare for war. She was free, she loved liberty, she loved freedom, she believed in paying her debts so that she would be on friendly terms with all her neighbors. She did not build a war machine. The result is that now Finland has a fine credit standing, but that credit standing is not any good to her in this crisis unless she can put it into effect so she can make some use of it.

Now, with regard to the Russian-Finnish affair at this time may I say this: According to the opinion of some of the most able and outstanding international lawyers of our day, it would not be an unneutral act to loan to Finland at this time. Norway and Sweden have been strict adherents to international law and the laws of neutrality. Norway and Sweden are both aiding Finland, and it is not considered an unneutral act. As my colleague from New York [Mr. Fish] said, we have loaned to China. That was not considered an unneutral act. In my opinion, this is not an unneutral act and would not be an unneutral act, because of the fact that we would just be carrying on friendly commercial negotiations with a friendly neighbor.

Let me propound this question: Are we going to put a premium on aggression by refusing to loan to Finland while we are friendly to her, because the aggressor nation attacks her brutally and without reason? If we are going to put a premium on aggression, then, of course, it would be all right not to grant this loan. I personally am and I feel all Members are in accord with me when I say "We will never place a premium on aggression."

Another point that has been brought up and discussed many times, is that if we loan to Finland, will we be put in such a spot that if Norway and Sweden are attacked, we would then be called upon to loan to Norway and Sweden. Let me make an observation with regard to that.

If Norway and Sweden are attacked, the attackers would be threatening the supplies of iron in Europe, which would be a very serious situation. In that event the western frontier will be moved up to Norway and Sweden. Those two countries will automatically be joined with the Allies, and therefore, under our act, it would be unlawful under law to loan them. But Finland will not join the Allies. There is an independent fight between Russia and Finland. Finland is fighting to maintain her own independence and freedom. Now, if Russia should take over Finland, then, of course, Russia would be of some use to Hitler. But in the present situation, with Finland standing up valiantly and fighting against the "red" hordes of communism, and as long as she keeps Russia at bay, then Russia is of no use to Hitler.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. HOOK. If Finland should be taken by Russia, and Hitler and Stalin, or Germany and Russia, should join together, with the northern part of Europe wiped out and in the hands of Russia joined with Hitler, the totalitarian forms of government would completely envelop Europe and endanger our own institutions.

My feeling is that if this loan is extended to Finland, it should be unrestricted, negotiated in the ordinary channels of commerce between nations. I believe that aid and help to Finland today is the best insurance policy we can have to stop the spread of communism in this Nation.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. FISH. I have just heard from reliable sources—and I think the gentleman would like to know—that Sweden, a comparatively small country, either has given or lent $18,000,000 to Finland.

Mr. HOOK. I did not feel like discussing that on the floor at this time, but I may say that I was informed from a very reliable source at least 2 weeks ago that it is a gift amounting to about 90,000,000 kroner, which equals somewhere around $24,000,000 in our money.

Mr. FISH. From Sweden?

Mr. HOOK. Yes; an actual, outright gift.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. I wish to ask the gentleman a question about a matter I have been trying to understand since I got here, and want to ascertain what is the opinion of the House, if it can be obtained from this discussion: What does the gentleman feel we should do about Finland and how should we do it?

Mr. HOOK. I think we should grant her a $60,000,000 loan in the ordinary channels of commerce.

Mr. PATRICK. By what means?

Mr. HOOK. By authorizing the President and the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate the loan. I have such a bill before this House introduced on the first day of this session—the first bill of its kind to be introduced. It is before the Ways and Means Committee and should be brought out by that committee and voted either up or down by the Congress.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I find myself largely in agreement with what the gentleman from Michigan has said. I take it that in the gentleman's esteem Finland's reputation for truth and veracity has not been seriously hurt by the Soviet charge that she has been feloniously taking, stealing, and carrying away tanks and other implements of war that they have brought into Finland in their invasion. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOK. I thank the gentleman for his observation. Russia did not bring them there for exhibition. The Finns are only using them for the same purpose that the Russians brought them for. [Applause.]

The following is an editorial from the Chicago Daily News:

[From the Chicago Daily News of January 16, 1940]

GIVE THE FINNS THAT LOAN

The Finns' defense of their country against the brutal and indefensible attack by Stalin and his Russian hordes has thrilled the American people as nothing else has for many years. Admiration for a gallant people fighting for their liberty is mingled with hatred and scorn for their Bolshevik foes, to make a well-nigh universal sentiment favorable to extending substantial aid to the Finns. This goes beyond supplying relief for noncombatants. It includes such assistance as we can give to help them win their struggle for freedom.

It is clearly contrary to our own national interests to have Russia overrun and conquer the Scandinavian peoples, a certain consequence if Finland fails to hold the line. Such an outcome would contribute materially to the success of the Hitler-Stalin plan for European domination, a consummation that would immediately threaten our security.

What is proposed is that the United States extend a $60,000,000 credit to Finland, presumably through the Export-Import Bank, and that this sum be made available to the Finns for the purchase of munitions and military supplies.

Since their greatest need is for fighting combat planes, with which to defend themselves against Russian bombers, it is further needful that we give priority to Finland in the delivery of these airplanes, even if we have to wait a little longer for combat planes for our own Army and Navy.

Thus a powerful public opinion has been created that demands that we do something more for the embattled Finns than express our admiration for their courage and our sympathy for their sufferings. By helping the Finns to make a successful fight against Stalin, and all that Stalin stands for, we help ourselves and directly contribute to our own future security.

Finland asks for no gift—what she wants is a loan. We gave her a loan 20 years ago to help finance her fight against Russia then, and among all those nations to which we made similar loans Finland alone has met every installment in repayment promptly. If she survives, Finland will pay.

There is no question of violating neutrality under our curious neutrality law, because Finland has not declared a state of war, nor has Russia. We are using this very pretext for our continued trade in war materials with Japan, which is using them to bomb and kill Chinese women and children. It would be a curious American who would invoke neutrality against Finland under such circumstances.

Finally, under the authority that the Federal Government already possesses, we can determine priority in the delivery of war supplies, including airplanes, to foreign nations.

Surely our need for the immediate delivery of a couple of hundred fighting planes is not so urgent that we cannot yield to that extent in order to give little Finland a chance to save her national existence and win a victory for human freedom everywhere.

There is an excellent chance that continued Finnish success will undermine and destroy the present Russian regime. That would be a world-wide benefaction, in which we would participate.

Under all of these circumstances, it is difficult for us to understand a disposition in some quarters in Congress to oppose a loan to Finland with which purchases of war materials may be financed. Our advice to Congressmen so disposed is to come home for a few days and learn what their constituents are thinking.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gross].

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, on Monday morning on my way to the Capitol from home I picked up a young man hitch-hiking along the highway who told me that he was 24 years old, a high-school graduate, and out of a job. He had the earmarks of a good young man. I asked him what he had been working at last. He said he was working in a steel mill in New Jersey. I asked him why he quit. He said: "I didn't quit; I never quit a job in my life. But the C. I. O. was in control of the plant and my boss told me that he wanted me to stay on the job, and I should go up to the C. I. O. headquarters, join the union, and come back."

He said when he got to the headquarters the man he had to deal with was a big brute, about four times his own size and weight, and he said such treatment as he received there he never saw a white man get. He was told that they already had more union men than they could find jobs for, and whether the boss wanted him or not made no difference. The boss would have to hire the man they would send down. Consequently, he said, he could not go to work even though the boss wanted to hire him.

He has tried several times in factories to become an apprentice to learn a trade. This was impossible because of the ruling of the National Labor Relations Board. He said that personal initiative means nothing and that he was seriously considering suicide. He said that under our present labor laws and rulings there is absolutely no future for a young man.

I know that the Curtis Publishing Co., recently needing apprentices, was compelled to take them on, starting at $43 a week. I am informed that the only charges preferred against the Berkshire Co. at Reading, during that prolonged and expensive strike, was that they were taking on apprentices.

Members of the House, since the days of Horace Greeley, when he said to every young man, "Go west," we have been saying to the young men of America, "Young man, learn a trade." Now it is a fact that the Federal Government forbids the young men to learn a trade, and has been doing so for the last several years, and because of that we find flashed across the headlines of newspapers today the deplorable word that we are short of mechanics and tradesmen all over the country.

The Wagner Labor Act has consigned thousands and thousands of ambitious men and women who wanted to learn trades in the last few years to the ranks of common labor. There many of them found no employment and consequently, in their disgust, have become bums and leeches among society. How the administration is ever going to justify this is entirely beyond me. The Smith committee now investigating the National Labor Relations Board is uncovering irregularities that smell to high heaven. The National Labor Relations Board is well-nigh a national scandal.

Some of the trial examiners, acting in the capacity of judges, admitted that they had no legal training and were never admitted to the bar. One of the lawyers admitted that the only case he ever handled before was a divorce case. In another case, if I am rightly informed, a fellow who 10 years ago was a taxicab driver in New York became first assistant to the chief counsel on the Board. Another case, a young lady, acting in the capacity of a judge, only received her naturalization papers in this country 3 years ago.

With all the evidence at hand, with all the crimes pointed to by the Smith committee and by the Labor Committee of this House, still it seems we must go on hearing the old stories told over and over again, not willing to go ahead and remedy this festering sore. I think it is time for this House to demand that the Committee on Labor come forward with a definite program that will relieve both labor and industry and open the door of opportunity for the ambitious youth that will not make them travel the highways not knowing where they are going to eat or sleep or whether they should rob a bank or shoot themselves.

Even John L. Lewis said this morning that the present Labor Board would defeat this administration in the coming campaign. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, after the interesting contributions we have had on the question of possible loans to Finland, I would like to bring attention back to a few items contained in the hearings on the Post Office and Treasury Department bill. For many of us this is the only opportunity we have to express ourselves on certain activities of the Post Office Department.

The Post Office Department in the United States has the most politically minded executives of any department of the Government, but at the same time has the most faithful group of employees of any department of the Government, a large and wonderfully trained group of letter carriers who, come what may by way of weather, deliver the mail regularly, both in cities and in rural towns and villages. This can hardly be termed a partisan statement in that both parties are equally guilty, and I express the hope that next year the new Postmaster General will not be the official patronage dispenser here in the United States. A new Member can get a great deal of information out of these two volumes of hearings. I suppose there is some reason that has not yet been pointed out to me why we cannot have these hearings about a week before the bill is reported. It is almost impossible to digest the two volumes in the one evening we have for that purpose. I was glad, however, to find in the hearings presented to us yesterday noon the report of W. S. Alexander, the Federal Alcohol Administrator, and to note that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the ranking minority member on the subcommittee, complimented Mr. Alexander for the way he cooperated in living within his appropriation. This Federal Alcohol Control Administration was set up in 1935 to control and regulate the liquor industry in the United States. We are receiving from the liquor industry at the present time a tax income amounting to over $600,000,000. Mr. Alexander has certainly done a mighty fine job in setting up a loyal, efficient organization.

Let me also refer to a matter that is at least vaguely connected with the work of the Internal Revenue Department. I refer to the Executive order issued by the President on January 10 in which he authorized the Internal Revenue Bureau to turn over to the La Follette committee investigating violations of free speech, and so forth, a subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor in the Senate, the income-tax returns of citizens of the United States, not only the income-tax returns of private individuals but of manufacturers.

Congress in the last regular session enacted legislation to do away with the income-tax-list racket that some have carried on for the past several years. When we passed that legislation we felt we were expressing our desire that the information contained in a man's income-tax return should be kept in confidence by the Government. Certainly that was the promise made to our citizens when we adopted the income-tax law. For the President now to order this confidential information turned over to a Senate committee seems a definite violation of the promise to our taxpayers. I am afraid it will have another effect. Many of our citizens feel that there is far too much snooping at the present time by inspectors and investigators employed by the Federal Government. We have been going into the offices of manufacturers and business people of all kinds inspecting their books under the wage and hour law and similar laws, and now in addition to that we are turning their income-tax returns over to a committee of the Senate. These manufacturers, of course, do not at the present time dare come to Washington and testify before the standing committees of the House and Senate. Just this past week a manufacturer in my district told me that he did not dare come down here to express his opinion before the Ways and Means Committee on the continuation of the reciprocal-trade treaties.

It is the fact of these investigators going over his books, supposedly looking for violations of the wage and hour law, or because his income-tax returns are going to be made public, that causes him to have a very real fear of expressing his opinion on any matter in which he knows the administration is interested.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make an observation about one or two activities of the Post Office Department. As most of the Members of this House know, the Post Office Department accepts Christmas cards unsealed, without a written message, for 1½-cent postage. I realize that is not first-class mail, but the Post Office Department, having accepted that mail under certain conditions, certainly owes it to our citizens to make every reasonable effort to deliver those Christmas cards.

In the city of Hartford during the week between Christmas and New Year's on orders of the Postmaster General the postmaster at that city destroyed 7,500 Christmas cards that were mailed in that post office. These cards were destroyed on the ground of insufficient address. Not one of those 7,500 post cards had ever been given the usual directory service accorded first-class mail. I have not seen the figures for every post office in the United States. Hartford, however, is a comparatively small city. Certainly throughout the United States it means that millions of Christmas cards turned over to the Post Office Department were not delivered and were later burned. I believe this situation should be corrected before another Christmas season rolls around. Either the Post Office Department should decline to accept Christmas cards with 1½-cent postage on them or else make a real effort to deliver the cards to their rightful owners. This one item means a loss of millions of dollars when we consider the value of the Christmas cards themselves.

Another activity of the Post Office Department that I think we might look into is the matter of issuing commemorative stamps. In the year 1940 the Post Office Department intends to issue 35 commemorative stamps honoring the memory of famous American citizens, authors, writers, and musicians. While we are glad to see that honor paid to the memory of these distinguished citizens of our country, we want to see that no political abuses or political activity comes into this effort.

One of the stamps to be issued is a stamp commemorating the memory of Samuel Clemens, better known to all of us as Mark Twain. It is the practice of the Post Office Department to turn the sale of the first-day stamps, largely for the benefit of stamp collectors, over to the city or place of birth of the man whose memory they are honoring, although in at least one case the Post Office Department has already ruled that it would not put the stamps on sale in the post office of the place of birth of the citizen, but rather in some other town on the ground that the particular man spent the major part of his life in another community.

Mr. Chairman, in the case of Mark Twain, the memorial stamp is to go on sale first in Hannibal, Mo. I was surprised when that information came from the Post Office Department. I obtained the biography of Mark Twain, published in three volumes and written by a well-known author, a man who spent at least 20 years of his life closely associated with Mark Twain. I found that Mark Twain was not even born in Hannibal, Mo. He was born in a town many miles from Hannibal, Mo., and went to Hannibal at the age of 4 and lived there until he was 9 years old. Mark Twain lived in the city of Hartford, in my district, for 43 years, going there at the time of his marriage and remaining there until the day of his death at the age of 74. Most of his well-known works were written and published in Hartford, including Huckleberry Finn, A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court, and Tom Sawyer.

I laid this information before the Post Office Department, pointing out and offering proof that Mark Twain was not born in Hannibal, but had lived there as a matter of fact only 5 years, between the ages of 4 and 9, that his whole work and his adult life was spent in Hartford, Conn. I asked that we get at least half of the first day's stamps in Hartford, but I was told that I knew how those things came about and there was nothing they could do.

If commemorative stamps are put out, we want the whole program to be fine and aboveboard. If the Post Office Department is going to put them on sale in some one city first, the city where that particular man was either born or spent most of his adult life, let us have such regulations and not leave in the minds of our citizens a suspicion that there are other influences at work in the sale of these stamps than commemorating the memory of fine Americans.

In connection with issuing so many of these commemorative stamps, I wonder if we might not consider the fact that we are spoiling a mighty fine hobby for many young Americans. There are a lot of young men and women in this country and there are a lot of bedridden cripples, victims of infantile paralysis and victims of accidents, who get a great deal of comfort and a great deal of pleasure out of the building up of a stamp collection.

But if we are going to issue every year, as we will this year, 35 commemorative stamps and numerous other issues, we will simply be making the hobby of stamp collecting a rich man's sport instead of something the average citizen can enjoy, particularly those who have the misfortune to spend their lives confined in institutions or in beds at home. I hope something can be done along these lines and that this program can be cleaned up in the very near future.

In the few minutes remaining to me I wish to refer to one item in the Budget under the Treasury Department. This item was mentioned by the President in his Budget message when he pointed out that this year's Budget will call for $1,100,000,000 for interest on the public debt. The President quite correctly pointed out that this was an item that could not be reduced, but he went on to point out that at the present time we are paying about one-third less interest on our public debt than we did in 1926. The average interest rate paid on the public debt for the fiscal year 1926 was 3.9 percent and the present rate is computed at 2.6 percent.

A hasty reading of this quotation from the President's message might indicate an accomplishment on the part of the administration, but I believe the Members of Congress might well recall that the taxpayers of the country are suffering from this reduction in the interest rate on Government obligations. At the present time 71 percent of the money of the American people on deposit in our savings banks is invested in Government bonds and 60 percent of the bank earnings in the United States comes from Government bonds. These figures support the statement recently made by the bank commissioner in my home State of Connecticut that this reduction in savings-bank interest is being felt by many of our elderly citizens who have retired, feeling that they were secure and had an ample income to provide for their declining years. Unusually low interest rates are not in themselves a blessing. It is also a fact that while this year we are spending $1,100,000,000 as an interest payment on our national debt, that is $50,000,000 more than we spent last year and $264,000,000 more than we spent for interest on our public debt in 1926. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, we have heard this afternoon a very interesting debate on a variety of subjects, including the matter of relief for Finland and other questions. I am sure all of us realize that human liberty and free institutions are in some danger today, and for various reasons, and I am sure that everyone of us wants to do everything he can to preserve those values of human liberty and freedom and constitutional government to which our country has made perhaps the greatest contribution of any nation in the world. I want to speak this afternoon to that very point.

There are many Members of the House, I know, who feel convinced that what we need today is a return to what might generally be termed a more natural economic situation.

Members who are deeply disturbed over various efforts on the part of the Government to relieve the needs of people along certain lines and to attempt to stimulate activity along other lines to help agriculture and industry. I myself should like nothing better than to be rid of all this effort. I wish I could believe with some of my more conservative colleagues that if the Government simply abandoned all these efforts our people would go back to work and prosperity would be restored. But I do not believe that. I believe that at least two basic problems would inevitably remain—one, the problem of monopoly, whereby free economic opportunity is blocked and whereby a disproportionate share of the consumers' expenditures of the country go into the hands of certain industries, depriving others, notably agriculture, of their just share; and the other, the problem of the medium of exchange of the Nation. For, after all, it makes no difference how efficiently you produce or how well the farmer tills his field, or how eager the people are to achieve a higher standard of living, if we have a monetary system where, by manipulation in the hands of a few people controlling the flow of that medium of exchange, it is possible to have great changes in the purchasing power of money over short periods of time, inevitably, then, the values of all property and the values of all services will be adversely affected, and money will tend to rule the economic order instead of being, as it should be, a neutral servant of production and consumption.

SUPPLY AND ACTIVE DEMAND MUST BALANCE

As I see it, the main problem we are up against is that agriculture and industry in our country or in any other country must always, in order to operate profitably and well, recover in any given year at least as much through the sales of their commodities as they have previously paid out for their production. Therefore, if through a distribution of income which weights that distribution largely in favor of a few groups of the people, you have a situation where a considerable proportion of what should be the current stream of purchasing power is sterilized into idle savings or hoards, you therefore do not have the active demand necessary to keep industry and agriculture operating at a profitable level.

INCOME FROM PUBLIC BONDS SHOULD BE TAXABLE

In this connection I would agree with all those persons who believe that we should not have tax-exempt securities. I believe that not to have tax-exempt securities would be one of the things that would help in preventing this situation. Indeed, I have each year attempted to secure an amendment to tax bills which would render the income from all future issues of public bonds taxable. But I think you have to go much deeper.

EFFORTS OF PAST FEW YEARS AND INCREASE IN PUBLIC DEBT

In essence, what the present administration has been trying to do in the last few years has been by means of expenditure for public works and in similar ways to compensate the industry and agriculture of America for the failure of the consuming power of America to provide a market for their production. The reason that has been necessary has been the sluggish flow of money and the fact that we have had large volumes, and will have still larger volumes under present circumstances, of such idle savings or idle hoards as I have described. The method that has been tried has been based on increasing public debt. One reason for that is that the present monetary system depends upon borrowing to bring additional money into circulation.

If banks and private borrowers do not get together to increase the volume of active-demand deposits or if those holding demand deposits do not actively use them, the only way under your present monetary arrangement that you can get an additional volume of consuming purchasing power into circulation is for the Government to increase its debt, which it has done in the last few years.

PENSION—TAX SYSTEM A BETTER ANSWER

Another thing that might be done, and in my opinion it would be preferable, would be to have a system of taxation coupled with a system of pensions to our older people whereby we would literally transfer a considerable portion of now stagnant savings into the stream of purchasing power by that means, thus making it possible for the remaining savings to find profitable investment. For after all the only thing that ever makes investment profitable is if the new capital goods created thereby can be efficiently used and if the consumer goods turned out by those capital goods can find a ready market. So that in the end we always come back to the basic proposition that the prosperity of our industry and agriculture ultimately depends on the flow of the purchasing power of the people. And when I say that, I am not talking about the unemployed people alone, although they, perhaps, are affected first. I am talking also about the young people, and about the farming people of America. So a national pension system paying its own way by means of judiciously levied taxes would be one way of meeting this problem.

Another way you could do would be to devise some plan whereby your tax program would actually penalize the hoarding of money. I am not now going into that because it is a rather complicated question and one that almost everybody misunderstands, but I am convinced that a measure of that kind is sound economically and there has been some excellent writing done on this subject.

THE MONETARY APPROACH TO THE PROBLEM

The other thing you can do is to assert the basic, constitutional right of Congress, to be the source and origin of all newly created money or credit in the Nation. I believe that is a function of sovereignty; I believe it is a function of government; and I do not believe it should be exercised by any agency except the Congress of the United States. If Government, in compensating for the failure of consumer-purchasing power to keep up with production or in attempting to compensate for the failure of private-debt money to be created, which is necessary under the existing monetary system, would assume this function of maintaining in circulation a volume of the means of payment commensurate with the flow of production; if that were done so that everybody knew they could depend upon the maintenance of a dollar of stable buying power and a flow of money in the hands of consumers which would match production, under any circumstances, we then, in my judgment, would be very largely on the way to a solution of the worst of our problems.

THE PRESENT OUTLOOK

Now, it is proposed in this Congress not only that we have no Public Works Administration program but that we cut down rather drastically on work for our unemployed people through W. P. A. or the National Youth Administration, and other appropriations which mean jobs to jobless people or a fair income to our farmers. Certainly there will be opposition to an attempt to make parity payments to the farmers.

I am afraid nothing is going to be done in the way of getting a really dynamic system of pensions for our older people, such as I have mentioned. In other words, we are confronted with a situation where this Congress, perhaps, is going to be responsible for causing a greater degree of need on the part of many of the people of the United States.

Now, how are you going to meet it? I am in sympathy with many of the cuts that have been made in these appropriations bills. I think they are all right, but when it comes to this great economic problem, the problem of where the market is going to be found for the goods and services produced by American agriculture and industry, and when it comes to the basic proposition of whether the people of the United States are going to have an opportunity to work, to construct, to grow, especially the young people, that is a different matter, and it is a matter that has a great deal to do with the defense of this freedom and of these free institutions I was talking about.

You can appoint a congressional committee to investigate un-American activities. I think it is a salutary thing to do. I think we ought to know all about these organizations which are essentially against freedom, at least for other people, but unless you meet this need you may have to have more committees.

Mr. BENDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I really have not got to what I wanted to say, but I will yield briefly.

Mr. BENDER. Does the gentleman agree with the President's proposed Budget on the National Youth Administration, the W. P. A., and all these other measures?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No. I am frank to say that I believe that under present circumstances, unless some of the things are done which I am going to talk about right now, it is necessary to keep up employment of our people—on public works, if necessary—to at least the degree it was last year. I would keep every young person in America busy. Therefore, I do not agree with it. I think it is altogether possible that if we make these drastic cuts we will have another decline like we did in 1937, with the consequent necessity of spending more money in the end than if at this moment we seized unemployment by the scruff of the neck and said, "We are going to do the job that has to be done. We are going to actually put to work American people who are not at work."

But the real gist of what I wanted to say is this—

Mr. BENDER. With all due respect for the gentleman, and knowing his influence with the President of the United States, does not the gentleman feel it is desirable for him to have a session with the President and tell him about these things?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Oh, I do not try to tell the President about things. I merely express my own opinion and do the best I can.

LOWER INTEREST RATES A WAY OUT

Now, everybody wants to balance the Budget. I am going to suggest certain measures that could be taken by this Congress that would not require the addition of a single additional dollar to the public debt, which might well mean that you would not have to have a big expenditure for the W. P. A. For example, if the Government lending agencies performed exactly the same operation as a private bank does when it lends money against security, you could reduce the rate of interest on farm indebtedness in this country to half what it is now. You could make money available for loans for housing construction, to individuals or builders, at 2-percent interest. What am I talking about? I will explain.

If a private lender loans money for the construction of a house, he expands on the fractional reserve in his bank and monetizes the property to be constructed, but when a Government agency does that, we say "No." They have no credit. They must go out and sell Government bonds to a private bank, which buys it with figures on its books before they have any credit to loan. Then the loan must be made at a rate of interest high enough to cover the interest on the bonds, as well as expenses of administration and losses. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation did that, and the consequence was that the rate of interest was twice what it needed to be if the agency of the Government had exercised the same right of creating credit as every private bank in America exercises today.

If we wanted to beat this depression without adding to public debt, we might make credit available to small businesses at rates so low as to make expansion of industrial activity almost certain. We could scale down the rate of interest on all farm indebtedness to not more than 3 percent. I have introduced House bill 6850 that would do this. That would help.

If you do not want to use credit in the way I have spoken of it, national credit, I would like to point out this: Surely 40 percent is sufficient gold reserve for any gold "standardite" there ever was in the world. I am not one. I am convinced that the value of money depends upon the relation between volume and velocity, on the one hand, and the flow of goods and services on the other, and that that is all there is to it. But if you want a metal base, look at what you have: $282,000,000 of unobligated gold in the Treasury today. A stabilization fund of $1,800,000,000, much larger than it needs to be. You have $17,000,000,000 in gold bullion, which, according to the law, belongs to the United States Government, against which there are gold certificates outstanding, but those certificates amount to reserves largely.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. May I have 7 more minutes?

Mr. LUDLOW. I will say to the gentleman it is the desire that the committee rise in order to act on a veto message, and I feel reluctant to grant the gentleman further time.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Could I have 1 minute, 2 minutes, 3, 4, 5, 6, or any amount of minutes?

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman. Those gold certificates are no more than Treasury notes, for the law says they cannot be redeemed in gold. Suppose we replace them with Government currency, Government notes, with a 40-percent gold reserve behind them; you would then have a credit based on gold so large that I do not want to name the figure—it might scare someone—but large enough certainly so that an increase in the public debt is unnecessary, in order for you to do this job of putting the American people back to work and stimulating business in this country by making available to the people who need this credit, a credit at such a low rate of interest that they cannot possibly help going ahead.

One more thought: Many people are interested in a restoration of the price level for basic farm commodities to what they call parity. All right. The Surplus Commodities Corporation has developed a universally popular scheme of enabling the American people to consume the so-called surplus produced by our farmers, and enabling the farmers to get paid for their work. Blue stamps are issued for this purpose. Why in the world would it not be logical to redeem these blue stamps in United States Government money until such time as the price level for basic farm commodities had been restored to parity? If you did this you would be doing nothing in the world but exercising the sovereign right of this Nation to control its own money to the extent necessary to restore economic balance. The principle is that of maintaining the relationship between money existing on the one hand and the flow of goods and services of this Nation on the other. It will be a scientific relationship that cannot be had under present circumstances. When you have learned to do that you will have found the answer to the unbalanced Budget and to unemployment at the same time; but these things cannot be successfully solved unless and until we have some such relationship established through monetary reform and some of these other measures that I have brought to your attention heretofore. So I appeal to you to justify yourselves in the eyes of the American people by your long-range wisdom, not by short-range calculations, and see to it that there is opportunity for the youth of America, opportunity for the unemployed people of America to do constructive work in the months and years that lie ahead, and not have to be maintained in idleness. The choice is not between a condition of unbalanced Budget on the one hand and great need for our people on the other. The choice is between taking several scientific measures largely in a monetary field, which will free agriculture and industry, not throttle it, or those other two choices I have just mentioned.

APPEAL FOR NATIONAL SPIRIT AND UNITY OF PURPOSE

Mr. Chairman, I confess that I do not know that I have all the answer to this problem, but I am convinced that if the Members of Congress really studied this question with an open mind much can be done. I am ready to say "I am wrong in this or that respect." Is everybody ready to say he may be wrong? Is everybody ready to take account of every single bit of knowledge he can get hold of? To deal with this thing not on a political basis, but on the basis of a true desire to solve the unemployment problem is to make perhaps the greatest contribution any nation can possibly make to the preservation of freedom and free government. We need, I believe, a greater tolerance. Certainly we need a deeper religious consecration. We need, I believe, to develop—and we can do it here in the House—a sense of national unity, a sense of being "all in the same boat," a sense of trying according to our lights, to solve this most difficult problem, but being under every circumstance unquestionably loyal to the principle of majority rule, the principle that whoever happens to have the burden of conducting government shall have the basic, unquestioned, loyal support of the other people. If we can do our duty in this spirit I have no fear. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOBBS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 8068, the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill, 1941, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, as there is important business to come before the House, I ask unanimous consent that the order previously entered for the closing of debate and the reading of the first paragraph of the bill this afternoon be vacated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—RELIEF OF THE STATE OF OHIO (H. DOC. NO. 576)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, a bill (H. R. 5118) entitled "An act for the relief of the State of Ohio."

In October 1938 the Social Security Board withheld from the State of Ohio the payments that would have otherwise been made to the State under the old-age-assistance provisions of the Social Security Act. The Social Security Board is empowered by law to withhold the certification of any amount due to any State in the event that the Board finds, after notice and hearing, that such State has failed substantially to comply with any provision required by law to be included in the plan.

Investigations made by the Board prior to September 1938 indicated the existence of certain important defects in the administration of the old-age-assistance plan in the State of Ohio. A hearing on this subject was thereupon called by the Board and held on September 6, 1938. The proper State authorities received notice of the hearing, but failed to attend. As a result of testimony introduced in that proceeding, the Social Security Board made detailed findings showing that there had been in the operation of the Ohio State plan for old-age assistance a lack of efficient administration, wholesale violation of the State civil-service laws and rules, delays in the handling of applications for assistance, blanket increases in some awards while at the same time aid was denied to other needy applicants, discrimination in the handling of complaints, a faulty accounting system, and non-compliance with reporting provisions and with the requirement of fair hearings to aggrieved applicants.

In accordance with these findings the payment due to the State for October 1938 was withheld. The State then made October payments out of its own treasury to individual beneficiaries listed by the State authorities. The purpose of the bill under consideration is to reimburse the State for the amount of money thus withheld by the Federal Government.

The Social Security Act constitutes legislation of major importance. It has far-reaching permanent consequences in the interest of the welfare of the aged and the needy. Most of the phases of the Social Security Act involve cooperation between the Federal Government and the States. Efficiency of administration must, therefore, be present both in the Federal and the State agencies. The Congress, in order to secure adherence to proper standards on the part of the State governments, has clothed the Social Security Board with the definite duty of causing a withholding of payments from the States, in the event that they fail to comply.

It is not seriously questioned that the action of the Social Security Board in withholding payment in the present instance was well founded. The enactment of this legislation would in effect render nugatory in this instance the salutary provisions of the Social Security Act which accords the Federal Government the sole means of assuring an effective administration and disposition of funds granted by it to the States under the Social Security Act.

I am withholding my approval of the bill under consideration because of my belief that an expeditious, effective, and nonpolitical administration of the provisions of the Social Security Act is indispensable to the conduct of operations thereunder, and that approval of the measure would be inconsistent with this objective and create a precedent that would seriously endanger the success of the entire Social Security program.

If this bill were to become law it would at least make it possible for a State agency to violate civil-service laws, to give blanket increases to some and deny aid to other needy applicants, to discriminate in the handling of complaints, and to maintain a faulty accounting system, all with the belief that if the Social Security Board were to withhold Federal funds because of this, the State agency could later go to the Congress of the United States and receive a special appropriation in proportion to the amounts the State had put out.

The State authorities would have this bill as a precedent. It is needless for me to say that if I were to sign this bill the precedent of it could be extended to other forms of Federal aid—aid for highways, aid for widows, and aid for dependent or crippled children. It would mean that States no longer would be compelled to maintain the standards set up by the Congress, but could violate these standards with impunity and still get their money.

I do not think that the provision by which the Social Security Board would "ascertain the total of the sums disbursed by the State of Ohio * * * with respect to each aged needy individual eligible" is in any way a practical method of determining at this late date the individual merits of each particular case. Undoubtedly many of the individual payments were proper, but, on the other hand, a very large number were undoubtedly improper or discriminatory—and a still further number of needy persons who ought to have received compensation received none at all. To reopen thousands of individual cases a year and a half later, and to investigate each one separately, would be tremendously expensive.

It seems to me that the disapproval of this bill will serve notice on every State in the Union that all kinds of Federal aid must be conditioned on full compliance with the Federal law and wholly without discrimination or inefficiency.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 24, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill, together with the President's message and accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House and ordered printed.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment.

Mr. Speaker, I did not happen to be active with the Committee on the Judiciary when this matter was considered. I was physically unable to be present last year when the matter was considered.

The statements of the President are very clear. With that observation and the matter having been read in the hearing of the Members, I shall be very glad to yield to the gentleman who asked me to yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How much time will the gentleman yield me?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Five minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the usual and orderly procedure is for the Speaker to first recognize the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, which in this case is the committee that considered this bill. I want the Members of the House to know that heretofore the usual result has been that when the bill is referred to the committee it is chloroformed. It means that the committee will not again give the same bill favorable consideration. Since I have been a Member of Congress I do not know of a single case where it has been otherwise. I want you to know this and vote down the motion so that we may have a chance to consider the possibility of passing this bill over the President's veto.

I do not want to take a lot of time and go into the merits of this case at the present time, but I do want to say to you that this bill was reported out of the Judiciary Committee of the House with a unanimous report. Not a single member opposed it. The Judiciary Committee is one of the strong committees of the House. The bill then passed the House by unanimous vote. Not a single vote against. It went to the Senate and was passed by the Senate of the United States by unanimous consent after an amendment was proposed and agreed to. That amendment is exactly in line with every exception and objection that the President makes in his veto message. Of course, far be it from me to volunteer the statement that the President probably has not been thoroughly advised with reference to this feature; however, that is only my own personal opinion. The Department that prepared and handled the amendment which I agreed to accept and incorporate in the bill recommended to the President that he sign this bill. I think there has been some oversight or misunderstanding, for the President was supposed to be in full accord.

I hope this bill will not be sent to the committee, so that we may have a chance to debate it further. I shall say no more at this time except that the claim is absolutely just and meritorious beyond any question. A failure to pass this bill will be a gross miscarriage of justice. It will be difficult for the old-age pensioners in Ohio to understand why the President refuses them what they know is their own.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if no other Member desires time to discuss the matter, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to refer the bill and message of the President to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was rejected.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 9]

Arnold	Drewry	Keogh	Schwert
Austin	Dworshak	Kerr	Scrugham

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-nine Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day, and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the remarks I made on the floor of the House today on the subject of Poland, a few excerpts from the New York Times, the New York Post, and the Jewish Telegraphic Agency.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend in the RECORD the remarks I made today and to quote from the hearings on the Treasury Department appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole today and include therein some excerpts from the report on the bill and from the hearings before the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF THE STATE OF OHIO

The SPEAKER. The question now before the House is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the veto message of the President be again read, because many Members of the House were not in the Chamber at the time the message was first read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the veto message of the President.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]. I understand the gentleman in turn will yield time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, may I be notified when I have consumed 8 minutes?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be pleased to do that. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it is quite a compliment to any Congressman that it is his privilege to ask the Speaker to do that much for him, and it is not much of an effort on the part of our Speaker to do that because we all on both sides of the aisle know that we have a most beloved and a most gracious Speaker. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, it shall not be my purpose to say anything that will be provocative of undue argument. I shall try to stick to the facts and nothing but the facts.

The President in his message employed much language, but the real reason assigned by him for his veto was that this bill, if enacted into law, would be a bad precedent. In order for you to determine whether or not it will establish a dangerous precedent, you must know the facts. Let me give you the facts with reference to this matter.

The bill under consideration does not ask for any specified amount of money. The bill originally introduced did ask for a certain amount of money, but in negotiations with the Social Security Board we agreed on an amendment. As I said in my opening statement this afternoon, I believe that if the President had had the time to go into this amendment he would not have sent up this veto, because the amendment does exactly what the President says should be done. It removes the only real objection that might be interposed.

Who prepared this amendment? Did I prepare it? No. But I had the approval of it and I approved it. This amendment was prepared by the Chief Counsel of the Social Security Board as it exists today. The Social Security Board is now, as you know, presided over by Governor McNutt. He has under him a corps of fine, high-class lawyers, who come before our Committee on Ways and Means year after year with reference to these social-security matters. They are brilliant, smart men, career men, I presume. They set out to do this one task—to put into this bill language that would give the Social Security Board the right to determine to the last penny just how much money is to be paid under the law and regulations.

Let me read you the amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That notwithstanding the provisions of title I of the Social Security Act, the Social Security Board is authorized and directed to ascertain the total of the sums disbursed by the State of Ohio as old-age assistance (money payments) for the month of October 1938, with respect to each aged needy individual eligible under the State old-age assistance plan, who at the time of such disbursement was 65 years of age or older, and was not an inmate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any individual for such money as exceeded $30, and to certify an amount equal to one-half such total of such sums to the Secretary of the Treasury.

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, pay the amount so certified to the State of Ohio.

"For purposes of estimates and other certifications with respect to the State of Ohio under title I of the Social Security Act, such amount so paid shall be considered as certification of exactly the correct amount payable with respect to such month, without any increase or reduction of amount with respect to any other periods except for recoveries from estates in or for such month.

"Notwithstanding the provisions of title I of the Social Security Act, such amount so paid may be used for purposes other than old-age assistance."

Note this specific language:

The Social Security Board is authorized and directed to ascertain the total of the sums disbursed by the State of Ohio as old-age assistance.

Under this bill, the Board is given that authority to find out for the one month of October 1938 what sums were disbursed by the State of Ohio as old-age assistance. They have that full authority. Their findings shall be conclusive. It was contemplated that the auditors of the Board would go over all the accounts, and when they had concluded their audit the amount that they found to be due the State should be paid. There is no precedent in one paying what he owes.

In the negotiations we had with the Social Security Board to remedy this proposition we came to an agreement that we in Ohio would forget the 5-percent distributing fee, which amounts to about $65,000, and we would consider that as a penalty they were placing on the State of Ohio for having failed to do the things they claimed should have been done. We should not have been required to lose this amount, but since we had not in fact distributed this identical money it could be claimed that we should wait and ask for that amount later. Under this bill, the Social Security Board does not give up one single one of its powers. Since this bill is in effect the present law, there is no precedent involved. It is not consistent with the facts to claim it is a dangerous precedent.

I repeat that I do not want you to be misled in this matter. I have absolutely no charge to make against the President. I only wish I had had a chance to talk with him before he decided to veto this bill. Every person with whom I talked in Congress and in the Senate, who understood the facts, appreciated the equities and agreed that the case was one of merit. I should like to have gone down and explained the situation to him. I am afraid he took the advice of one man. I had the assurance of Governor McNutt's office force that Governor McNutt had taken this matter up with the administration and with the President himself and that the President had agreed that the original bill should be amended so as to retain to the Board the authority to audit the accounts for October fully. The amendment was finally left with me and I did not cross a "t" or dot an "i" in the amendment, but accepted it absolutely. It passed the Senate in the same form as we agreed upon here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, speaking to the gentlemen on the majority side, I want them to know that we relied on that understanding and the amendments went through the Senate with the understanding that the language used would have the right-of-way and a green light to final passage and approval. Somewhere along the line something has happened. Mr. Altmeyer has gotten in his work. The President has listened to him in disregard of the real head of the Social Security Board, and in disregard of the facts and the law and of common honesty.

Do not be afraid that if you vote to override the President's veto that you are offering him a personal affront. He cannot deny you the right to follow your judgment and your conscience. It is more the duty of a Member of Congress to do right than it is to pay blind obeisance for the sake of being politically regular. I helped write the social-security bill in the Ways and Means Committee. We worked on it for weeks, and I stood here on my side of the House and helped pilot it through. I voted for it, and I have always been for it. Especially have I been for its provisions that bring relief to the needy.

Let me go briefly into the reasons why it was ever necessary to have this bill introduced. I do not want to get into the realm of politics at all, but just let me make this statement: There is not a man here who does not know that at the beginning of the second term of the President Mr. Hopkins had a verbal controversy and a severe one with Mr. Davey, our Governor in Ohio.

Mr. Davey was a Democrat. I shall not go into the details and tell you about all the correspondence between them. I have seen it all and I know all about it. I brought it out in the hearings before the Judiciary Committee that gave this bill a unanimous report, and if I could have gotten to the President of the United States, to give me a few minutes' time, I am sure there would not be any quarrel here today. If our good financier over there, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum], who handles our appropriation bills here so efficiently, had 1 minute's time with these quarreling officials he could have adjusted this matter to the entire satisfaction of these people who were quarreling. Now, what was the matter in Ohio? The Social Security Board claimed that the Governor was playing politics with the old-age-pension money, and the Governor claimed that the Board was playing politics with the same money, and there is no doubt that both were right in their claims. In September 1938 the Board paid the full amount in the regular way. It paid in November 1938, after the election, the full amount in the regular way, but they held up the October installment. They held up just 1 month; that is all. They claimed some irregularities, but they did not prove a single substantial irregularity. This is not a serious case of failure to meet the regulations.

This case does not compare in seriousness with the Oklahoma case. The Oklahoma case went along for months and months. It went on for several months and the Board adjusted it. If the Board could adjust the Oklahoma case after a long argument, it surely could have adjusted the Ohio case, which had only run 1 month.

What are the facts relating to this adjustment? Let me tell you just what they are. When the Board refused to pay what it should have paid to Ohio, and, being a member of the Ways and Means Committee, and there being no Democrat from Ohio on that committee, I took it upon myself to take this matter up with Mr. Altmeyer, of the Board. I said to him, "Mr. Altmeyer, this is a just claim and you have no right to do this under the law. You have no right in good conscience to do this and the people of Ohio, to a man, and every Congressman and every Senator and every man who knows about it, is up in arms about it because it is not right"; and I said to him further, "I have great respect for the Social Security Board. I helped create it, I voted for it, and I am for it now, but here is what we have got to do. You go to work and do like you did in Oklahoma and you can find a way to pay Ohio what is justly due her."

If you know of anybody in Ohio that received money illegally, you have a remedy. If there has been any financial corruption, you have your remedy. If there is any substantial disregard of the law, you have your remedy. You know we have about 120,000 old-age pensions in Ohio. It is only natural that there will be many errors every month. You should straighten out these little matters and deduct what is deductible and pay the rest. Do not be scared about this matter. You know what the State has to do. Before every payment made by the Government, the State has to put up the full amount of money first. The State pays the money to the beneficiaries entitled to the same before it receives the Federal money. After the State has paid the full amount due a beneficiary, then the Federal Government's auditors come in and audit the books, and then the Federal Government pays one-half of the amount paid by the State to the beneficiaries. For instance, if Ohio pays an average of $20 per month to 100,000 beneficiaries, it would pay $2,000,000. After the Federal auditors had audited and approved the payments the Social Security Board would reimburse Ohio to the extent of $1,000,000. There is generally about $15,000 a month that has to be balanced off and carried to the next month for adjustment because beneficiaries to whom checks had been sent had died in the meantime. There is no chance for the Federal Government to lose, for it only pays one-half of what the State has already advanced.

Here is what I insisted upon, and if you can find a fairer formula we will take it. I said, "Mr. Altmeyer, just figure out October by the same criteria, or by the same formula, or by the same methods as you did in September and November, and we will be satisfied," but he would not do that. Then I said, "If you will not do that, I have only one recourse. I must go to the fountain of all authority in this Republic. I must go to the group that made you and your Board—I must go to the Congress—which I will do. Tell me how much is the figure. I will not go back to Ohio and ask them, but I will take your figures for it."

He gave me the figures. I put those in the bill. That bill passed the Committee on the Judiciary of this House unanimously, after extensive hearings. It passed the House unanimously. It passed the Senate in the same way.

Now, my friends, be not afraid. Remember you are going to vote this afternoon and you may do an injustice to the great State of Ohio, to the extent of over a million dollars. What did our Governor do when he could not get the money for October 1938? Just before election it was, and he reached over into the general fund of the State of Ohio and he took out this required money and put it in the envelopes of the aged and paid those poor old people off in full for the month. Uncle Sam owes Ohio that amount of money just as sure as you ever owed a dollar in your life. Uncle Sam is honest and he will pay this if given a chance. I say that in all due respect to everybody, because that is a fact. This Congress ought not do an injustice to the great State of Ohio, or to any other State.

It should meet its obligations in an honest way. You who talk about State's rights do not forget that the rights of a sovereign State have been invaded by a Federal bureau without authority. It is said this will be a precedent to some other Governor. Do not forget that our Governors are elected by the people and that there is not much difference man to man between the average Governor and the average President.

Many Presidents have been Governors. When this law was passed it was made to apply to two parties. It provides for a two-party contract. The State of Ohio has rights. Your State has rights. A State has just as much responsibility in this as the Government. When we passed the Social Security Act we said, "We are going to give to the States the right to distribute the money." If our Governor made a mistake in the distribution, who is there over here in this Government to say anything about it? He was elected by the votes of the sovereign people of the State of Ohio. Under our system of government a bureau chief in Washington cannot punish the people of a State just because he cannot agree with their Governor. Because he is not of my political party is no reason why I should abuse or accuse Governor Davey of wrongdoing and, personally, I do not know that he did anything wrong.

When you have a chance to vote today and do the right thing, do not hide behind something that you are going to be fearful of on account of the President. Who is the head of the Social Security Board? Why, Governor McNutt is the head of it. What does he say about this? He has recommended the passage of this bill in line with his agreement. He has put it down in writing. His recommendation is down there in the White House today—right now.

Let us not quibble about this thing as a legal proposition. This Board has no right to punish any State to the extent of a million dollars or of one dollar. Are you going to give that right to any bureaucratic individual to punish the State of Ohio a million dollars—a sovereign State like your State—a great, magnificent State—punish it to the tune of a million dollars? You talk about bureaucracy! I tell you it will not do. We are standing up in our might in Ohio and demanding justice, and we want to ask you, the Congress, fountain of all authority and power, to do simple justice by us and let the Government agency figure out how much money is due, and compel it to pay what it owes like a man who pays an honest obligation that he honestly owes. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 13½ minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it sounds rather strange to hear the eloquent and persuasive intoning of my good friend from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] in behalf of the cause that he is presenting today, and which he presented very fairly and persuasively. If memory serves me correctly, no Member of the House has so regularly and persistently called attention to the fact that the President of the United States and his party in power were wrecking and ruining the country by loose fiscal policies and by permitting waste of the funds of the Federal Treasury.

I appreciate the great personal interest of my friend and I deprecate the circumstances that compel the Congress not to be able to act favorably upon his appeal, because I do not believe the Congress will act favorably upon it.

I cannot conceive of a more severe blow that this Congress could aim at the idea of trying to protect social security, that was and is not a partisan matter, but a bipartisan matter, because no matter what party is in power, social security is going ahead. Our beloved friends on the Republican side have chided us regularly and often and have laid the lash to our shoulders because they claim that so many of the rules, regulations, and policies of the social security would ultimately lead the country to bankruptcy.

Now, what is the issue here today? It is not a question of how much money the State of Ohio paid in October 1938 on account of social security. That matter is res adjudicata, a term which we lawyers understand means "has been decided." It cannot logically be reopened again now. What have we done? In passing the great Social Security Act we have said the Federal Government will go down into its Public Treasury and contribute to old-age assistance and old-age pensions in the different States, provided—with a great big "provided," and underscored—that certain fundamental rules and regulations are complied with; that the States themselves do certain things, not the least of which—and, I think the most important of which—is to keep accounts and to have efficient administration; to carefully scrutinize their payments, and to see to it that the Public Treasury is not frittered away and its funds passed out without undue regard to the justice and merits of the case.

Now, what has happened here? In October 1938 the charge was made to the Social Security Board, whom we have charged under the law with the duty of seeing to it that these rules and regulations are carried out, that the State of Ohio had not complied with the pattern which the Congress had laid down, and which our friends over here voted for, and which they have sustained with their votes. A day was set. The Social Security Board set the case for hearing, and the State of Ohio did not appear. They had their day in court. No claim is made today, even by our friends from Ohio, even by our friend from Ohio, Mr. JENKINS, that the State of Ohio was not guilty of the irregularities that had been charged against it. But our friend undertakes to counter by saying that the matter could be inquired into and their derelictions in that respect supplied if we had a careful audit of the situation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I maintain that there has been no dereliction on the part of the State of Ohio; but that, on the other hand, there has been exactly what the law requires—substantial compliance.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The President in his veto message says—and nobody has denied it:

A hearing on this subject was thereupon called by the Board and held on September 6, 1938. The proper State authorities received notice of the hearing, but failed to attend.

What standing has a man in the Supreme Court of the United States, or the Supreme Court of New York, or Ohio, to come in to answer a judgment in the Supreme Court when he did not even appear when he got notice to appear in the lower court to defend his rights?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman maintains that this is res adjudicata. If it be res adjudicata, it is res adjudicata from the day of the Board's decision, is it not?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Of course.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. All right. Now, if the Board came out to Ohio and wrote letter after letter after letter seeking to open this up after that, then it was not res adjudicata, was it?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not know what the Board did. I know only what the President states, and it is not denied, that a time was set for hearing and the State officials failed to attend. I must be persuaded to believe, I must believe in the nature of logical reasoning, that had there been any substantial defense of these charges against the State of Ohio, not only would the officials of the State but my distinguished and industrious friend and his colleagues in the House and in the other body would have been on the doorstep of the Social Security Board demanding a hearing, and in that hearing showing that the charges made against the State of Ohio were not proper. Whether they be true or not, once the Congress undertakes, by overriding the veto of the President, whether he be this President or any other President—and may I say here that in 17 years I have never voted to override any President's veto, and I am not going to start it today—but once this Congress sets the precedent of saying that States, in relation to the Social Security Act, the Federal Highway Act, or the various other acts through which contributions are made to States for activities, may be treated lightly and afterward, if they have enough influence in Washington, they can come up and overcome it, then God help the Treasury of the United States; that is all I have got to say about it.

Much as I deprecate the fact that the State of Ohio did not press its rights, sorry as I am that they had to go into their own treasury, they have nobody to blame but the great State of Ohio. If the State of Virginia does likewise, I will stand in the Well and make the same plea. I am for social security; I voted for it; but the least the States can do—and it is our duty to see that they do no less than that—is to comply with the pattern that Congress has set. The President did not set the pattern; it is the pattern that you and I voted into the Social Security Act, with which the State of Ohio has not complied; and the Board, proceeding under the authority we gave them, and under the mandate we gave them, had their hearing. I cannot conceive how there is any merit whatever in saying today that this House should override the action of the Chief Executive. I believe we should sustain him, and I express the hope that my Republican brethren, who so frequently remind us of our derelictions, will now at least find a common ground on which we can meet and try to sustain the action of the Chief Executive, an action which is so plainly logical and so plainly right. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECREST].

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, if I thought for one moment that the State of Ohio had failed to comply with the regulations and the standards set up by the Congress of the United States in the administration of the old-age pensions I would not speak today for the passage of this bill.

The State of Ohio was one of the first States in this Union to adopt a system of old-age pensions, long before the Social Security Act had passed this Congress. After it passed we were one of the first to come to our legislature and comply with the terms of that act.

There happened in Ohio an unfortunate thing before the election of 1938. A dispute arose between the Governor of the State of Ohio and numerous public officials here in Washington, a dispute that worked injury upon citizens of Ohio, one of which we are attempting to correct here today. That dispute went to the extent that a warrant was sworn out for the arrest of Harry Hopkins, and he could not come into the State of Ohio in the month of October 1938. A similar dispute arose between the Governor and the Social Security Board here in Washington, not over the standards of the Ohio act but over mere quibblings between the Board and the Governor. The Board, to save its face, set their hearing, realizing that the law of Ohio had met every requirement of this Government; and our Governor refused to attend that hearing. It is said that he had his day in court, that Ohio had her day in court. Ohio did not. The 130,000 people in Ohio who were drawing old-age pensions would have come to the hearing if they could.

To say that Ohio had her day in court and to ask why we did not come over here with the kind of fight that was brewing between the officials of our State and the officials in Washington is as foolish as to ask: "Why did not Harry Hopkins go to Ohio?" There was a warrant out for him. Why did not our State officials come here? For the same reason that a Finn does not go to Moscow for a vacation. Mark you, they stopped paying these pensions on the 30th day of September before election and on the day after election they resumed payment. They paid Ohio for the next month and the months that followed. We only lost one month and that was during the election when they were trying to defeat the Governor of Ohio and when he was trying to uphold his fight with the Federal Government over relief and other matters. When that month was over and they entered into the next month they took no one off the pension rolls of Ohio. After several months the administrator in Ohio resigned due to other pressure, but Ohio was not at fault at any time.

It was purely a fight between officials and not a question of complying with the laws of the United States. In the matter of aid to Federal roads and other things in which the Government is interested; if it is a question of not meeting Federal standards, then certainly the right of this Congress should be upheld, but when it is purely a question of did they or did they not engage in a political fight to the detriment of a State, that is a question for this Congress to decide. The Social Security Board was set up by the Congress to administer this law, and if we adopt a policy today that we should never touch anything that one of our agencies may do, there is just as much danger that that agency will cram down the throats of the States and the people many unfair restrictions as there is for the States to defy a reasonable restriction of the Federal Government.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, I hope this matter will not be voted upon by my friends over here as a party matter. We have the right to decide whether the Social Security Board is asking unreasonable things of Ohio or whether Ohio failed to comply with reasonable regulations. Who else can judge that except ourselves? If there is no court of appeal higher than the Social Security Board itself, that agency could make any kind of a regulation and the State would be bound to lose its money. The decision in this dispute is your duty as well as your right here this afternoon.

The Committee on the Judiciary of the House considered this bill and considered voluminous testimony in reference to it. The committee decided unanimously that Ohio had a fair claim. I hope today that it will be considered that Ohio has a fair claim, because there is no evidence now before the House that was not presented at that hearing. That bill passed the House unanimously. It went to the Senate and was reported by the committee there unanimously. The Senate passed it unanimously. In the Senate report it is stated:

Whether the Social Security Board under the terms of law was free to remove its objection and resume payment in Ohio which it had withheld is the question now involved in the controversy.

And at the end of the month, when that election was over and the personal fight had no more merit, they removed their order and paid the money. That month was the only exception. I hope you will pass this bill over the President's veto. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the Judiciary Committee of the House. Our committee went into this question with very great care. After hearing all of the evidence, our committee was of the unanimous opinion that the State of Ohio is right. She has a just claim against the United States for the $1,000,000 or more that was not paid to Ohio on her old-age assistance claim for the month of October 1938. There was no justification for withholding this money or for penalizing the State of Ohio. In the brief time allotted me I desire to call attention to one or two matters in connection with the controversy.

This situation was brought about by a personal quarrel between Governor Davey, of Ohio, and the head of the Social Security Board here in Washington. Before 1938, Governor Davey, the Democratic Governor of Ohio, got into a controversy with the Roosevelt administration here in Washington, and it is generally understood that the New Deal crowd in Ohio backed Mr. Sawyer, Governor Davey's opponent, in the primary election. Governor Davey was defeated for the Democratic nomination. This intensified the feeling that existed between Governor Davey and the Roosevelt administration here.

It was charged by the Social Security Board here that Ohio was not complying with the Social Security Act, and the officials of Ohio were ordered to appear here before the Social Security Board and answer these charges. Those in charge of administering old-age assistance in the State of Ohio came to Washington in answer to that summons. After they arrived in Washington and before they could appear before the Social Security Board these Ohio officials were, by telegram or telephone ordered back to Ohio by Governor Davey and they did not appear before the Board. The Social Security Board then ordered the payment of old-age assistance to Ohio stopped. Of course, it is understood that the State in the first instance pays the old-age pension benefits and then the Federal Government refunds one-half of the amount and also 5 percent for administering the fund.

The October payment, amounting to $1,338,160.92, was withheld from the State of Ohio, and the Social Security Board having refused to certify this amount to the Treasury caused the gentleman from Ohio, Representative JENKINS, to introduce H. R. 5118, which provided that the Federal Government should reimburse the State of Ohio for this sum of money.

The Social Security Board resumed payments to the State of Ohio beginning with the month of November 1938. The month of October is the only month in question.

Mr. Speaker, a careful investigation showed there was no fraud involved. There was no padding of the old-age pension rolls or the amount paid to the needy old people of Ohio. As I recall, there were 200 less people on the old-age pension rolls in Ohio in October—the month in question—than there were in September, and the needy old people of Ohio received less per person in the month of October than they did in the month of September. There were no irregularities about any needy old people getting money that did not belong to them or that the State of Ohio paid out one dollar that it should not have justly paid out.

The needy old people of Ohio have been penalized and the State of Ohio has been penalized simply because of a political quarrel between the Governor of Ohio and the Social Security Board.

Mr. Speaker, I call to the attention of the Members of the House a provision in the Social Security Act which I desire you to consider very carefully. There is no provision in the law about penalizing Ohio or any other State in any such manner as this. What does the law provide?

The Board shall notify each State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the Board is satisfied that such prohibited requirement is no longer imposed and that there is no longer any such failure to comply.

That law merely means that the Social Security Board may hold up payments until the State does comply. There is not a word in the law indicating that it was the purpose of Congress to withhold any money belonging to a State only so long as that State did not comply.

The ruling of the Social Security Board in this matter inflicts a fine or penalty on the State of Ohio amounting to $1,338,160.92. The Social Security Board had no right to take this sum of money from the State of Ohio and its needy aged.

This same question came up before this same Social Security Board in connection with the State of Oklahoma. There the charge was that the State of Oklahoma had padded the old-age pension rolls and political considerations had entered into the administration of the pension funds. Oklahoma failed to make sufficient response, according to the opinion of the Social Security Board, and the Board withheld payment to the State of Oklahoma until an investigation was made, as was made in the case of Ohio. These payments were denied for 45 days. After that, payments were resumed in Oklahoma under this same law, but the Social Security Board did more than that—they paid Oklahoma for the 1½ months that had been withheld.

This same Board, with no fraud or other wrongdoing shown, refused to pay the State of Ohio for the money which had been withheld for the month of October. If they paid Oklahoma, why did they not pay Ohio? The failure to pay to Ohio what was justly due to her and her needy aged people necessitated a special bill.

Ohio is one of the very big taxpaying States. She is one of the States which pays much more into the United States Treasury than she receives out of the Treasury. Now, why should Ohio be singled out and penalized in this way? If anyone was at fault, it was the Democratic Governor of Ohio in a quarrel with the Democratic administration here in Washington. The taxpayers were not at fault; neither were the needy aged people of Ohio.

Ohio and her needy aged people have a just claim to this money. This was the unanimous opinion of the Judiciary Committee of the House and the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. This bill passed the House and Senate without objection from any source, but the President vetoed the bill, and the question now before us is, Shall we sustain or override the President's veto?

As a matter of right and justice, it affords me pleasure to speak and vote to override this veto.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY].

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I believe I am correct in making the statement that the Democratic Members from Ohio without exception are joining with the Republican Members from Ohio in the House to override this veto. It is no affront to the great President of the United States to override a veto. Vetoes have been overridden before. In my brief tenure in this House I have helped to override vetoes. I helped to override the veto on the bonus bill, and many of you Democrats joined in that action. So it is not fair even by implication to leave the impression that this may be an affront to the great President of the United States. It is not; it is purely a local question. When the merits of the case at issue outweigh the conclusion of the Executive, a veto overridden is proper, in my opinion, under our system of checks and balances.

Neither is the issue res adjudicata, as has been stated by the distinguished jurist from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. The Committee on the Judiciary did not think it was res adjudicata. The House of Representatives did not think it was res adjudicata. The Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate did not think it was res adjudicata, nor did the Senate itself. They had before them all the evidence. I do not believe our friend is sincere, and I say this with all respect, when he says the issue is closed; it is res adjudicata. The Senate report sums up the entire situation in the language written by Senator BURKE, of Nebraska, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, when it states:

Your committee finds the equities in this case with the State of Ohio.

Politics has played a part in this controversy.

I should like now to salute my distinguished friend from Ohio on this side of the aisle, who for 1 year has sought to get strength in this Congress to pass this bill to rectify the mistake. If my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] were here, he would join with us today, because he and I discussed with Administrator Altmeyer the issues involved many times, and also the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] and other Members from Ohio joined with us to point out the equities of the situation. I am sure these legal minds on the Committee on the Judiciary, who weighed the evidence, must be with us today.

Politics was the underlying factor behind this controversy. It had to do with a State administration that played fast and loose for political purposes, and I am sorry to say it was a Democratic administration. The newspapers of my State charged the Governor of Ohio in 1938, and I think with a great deal of truth, with playing politics with human misery, with the old-age pensioners, if you will, sending out literature with the checks sent to the old men and women who were waiting eagerly for their eighteen or nineteen dollars a month. That is a reprehensible crime, and I hope we will have no more of it in this country.

This money belongs not to Governor Davey, the former Governor of Ohio, and not to Governor Bricker, the present Republican Governor; it belongs to the taxpayers of Ohio. It belongs primarily to those almost 200,000 old men and women who are waiting anxiously to get an increase in their pensions, and I think they can get it if this money comes to the State of Ohio.

I believe you Democrats ought to see the equities in this situation and ought to be with us today, and not take the stand, as I said in my opening statement, that it may be construed as an affront to the President. He is leaning on the judgment of one man, Mr. Altmeyer, in this controversy, and is overlooking the judgment of the various committees to which I have referred, as well as overlooking the judgment of this House and of the Senate.

A similar situation may happen in your State tomorrow. It may happen in Missouri, it may happen in Massachusetts, or any other State, even though your State laws conform to the Social Security Board regulations. Some governor or some administrator may play politics and the Board may withhold the grant of Federal aid for 1 month and cause you the same difficulty we are experiencing today in Ohio. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time. I am sorry that it is so short.

Mr. Speaker, there are one or two points I want to develop in the few minutes I have now.

I want the membership from New York to remember that in October 1938 you got from the Federal Government about $3,000,000. Ohio got not one single cent in that month. You did not pay any more proportionately than Ohio did. You paid your taxes and we paid our taxes. You from Virginia, the State of the gentleman who would not vote to override a President's veto, regardless of how far wrong the President may be, got about $750,000. Ohio did not get one single cent, although we paid our taxes. Somebody ought to give back to us our taxes or give us our share of the old-age money.

And, again, it ought not to be right for any one man to have the power to fine a State $1,300,000. I see some Members from Pennsylvania, which got about $1,600,000. Ohio did not get one single penny. I want the membership to think that over and let their consciences guide them that they may deal justly.

Let me go to another proposition I have in mind now—the argument of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. He said that the decision of the Board made in September 1938 was res adjudicata. Nobody but a lawyer knows what res adjudicata means, and frequently they do not know when it applies. What does it mean? "Res" means "the thing," and "adjudicata" means "has been decided." It means the thing has been adjudicated. The gentleman from Virginia stressed that point; it was the meat of his argument. He claimed that the question had been adjudicated. If it had been adjudicated, it had been adjudicated on the last day of September; but it was not adjudicated on the last day of September. The Board did not make what in law is known as a final order. And, besides, the Board continues to negotiate with the Ohio officials after making this order. Whoever heard of a judge, after rendering an opinion, running around after the litigant and saying, "If you do a certain thing in the next 30 days I will change my opinion." Representatives of the Social Security Board in many ways indicated all through the months of September and October that if the State officials would do certain things that they would make the payments. My dear lawyer friend, there is no res adjudicata in this case.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Does the State of Ohio make a large or small social-security payment?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Ohio ranks near the top in old-age payments. We pay an average of about $24 a month now. We were paying $15 or $16 a month for years before the Federal Social Security bill was ever passed. Ohio never violated any Federal regulation in any substantial way. When we had our hearings before the Judiciary Committee of the House we had the deputy State auditor of Ohio before the committee. He is a Democrat and was aligned against the Democratic Governor, so he cannot be considered as being unfriendly to the Federal administration.

The first deputy testified that there was no change in the handling of the work in September and November as against October. The Federal Board paid for November when not one single charge of any consequence had been made. How the President or any other honest man can claim that the Board was right in its action in refusing to pay October I cannot see.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 more minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman from Texas. Let us now consider the law in this case and consider it seriously because this is the crux of the whole thing. We rise or fall on this issue. Any fair-minded judge would rule with us on the law. I wish there was a clear remedy at law in this case for we could make a case in court easily. It is terrible to contemplate that one little professorial bureaucrat can punish a sovereign State to the extent of denying that State her just dues to the extent of $1,338,000 and the State denied adequate redress to the courts. The great State of Ohio will not submit to this injustice. As I have heretofore said Ohio was paying old-age pensions long before the Federal Government passed the social security law. What did the Federal Government provide in the social security law? The Federal Government said through this law that every State must set up a State old-age plan and meet seven different requirements. I am not going to enumerate all of them, but they are set out in section 2 (a) of the act. I shall enumerate some of them by way of illustration. They must not pay anybody who has not reached 65 years of age; they must not refuse to pay anybody because of citizenship; they must not pay anybody unless that person has been in the State 5 out of the 9 preceding years. There are other requirements of that sort. Did the State of Ohio adopt this plan and comply with the Federal requirements? It complied in every detail for months upon months and its work was approved.

The State of Ohio did everything in the world that was required. Any statement that Ohio failed to comply in any substantial way is not justified by the facts.

Now, what does the law say may happen when a State refuses? The language of the law is that if "the Board, after reasonable notice, and so forth, finds that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any plan, and so forth, the Board shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the Board is satisfied that such prohibiting requirement is no longer so imposed, and so forth." Now, listen, my dear lawyer friends, do not go off on a tangent on the law in this case, for as I have read to you, the law is clear. The Board can take no action until the State fails to comply substantially. If the State should fail substantially, can the Board withhold the money forever? Can it confiscate the money? Can it in effect work a forfeiture of the money? I repeat, even if it does fail substantially, can the Board hold it forever? No; emphatically no; let me read the language to you: "The Board shall notify such agency that further payment will not be made to the State until—" Until what? This word "until" is very significant. You see, that means they cannot withhold it forever. They can just hold it until some contingency happens. Let me emphasize it by reading it again: "The Board shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the Board is satisfied that such prohibiting requirement is no longer so imposed and that there is no longer any such failure to comply." This clearly means that when the State complies the money cannot be withheld any longer.

Now, how long was it before they found out there was no failure to comply? The very next month it said, "You have complied." What had the State done to entitle it to the plaudit "well done"? They had the same Governor, the same old-age pension officials, the legislature had not met, and no law had been changed, and the auditor said he did not do anything different whatever.

Ladies and gentlemen, it is absolutely the honorable course for you to vote for this measure and wrong for you not to vote for this measure. Justice and equity cry out to you. Will you render justice? I hope you will resolve the law and the facts and do justice.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one-half minute.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman named the seven requirements on the State. If they are the only requirements, the question of need does not enter into it. There is no requirement of need in the seven the gentleman mentioned in the law.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I can answer that in a way that will please the gentleman absolutely. He is from Texas, where they believe that a sovereign State has rights inherent to itself. It must not be forgotten that the social-security law contemplates two parties—a bilateral arrangement. The Federal Government in effect says to the State: "We will come forward with sufficient money to match your money up to $20 per month as our part if you will do certain preliminary things; for instance, pay nobody under 65 years of age; and if you enter this agreement with us we will leave to you the full responsibility of determining who should be placed on the list. We will leave all questions of need and economic conditions to you. We will consider that so long as we require you to do certain things and match our payments we can depend on you to pass on the question of who shall be on the pay roll." My friends, the State is as much a party to this contract as is the Federal Government. It has its rights and responsibilities. The Board was trying to compel the State to do what it had no right to compel. The Board was petty and small. It invaded the prerogatives of the State. It was far more culpable than the State. It has come to a sorry pass when 1 little man here in Washington can thwart the rights and wishes of 8,000,000 free people. One little bureaucrat appointed to his office because he may have written a magazine article is more powerful than a Congress and a Senate elected by the people. Verily I say let us raise up in our right and in our might and recognize a sovereign State and do justice. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I want to make it perfectly clear that when this bill is passed it still does not relieve Ohio of penalty. Overriding of the veto will still mean that a penalty applies because Ohio will suffer a 5-percent deduction under this bill, and, on top of that, the State has been deprived of the use of this money for a period of about 2 years. Figure that up on the basis of $1,000,000. We will say it would cost the State 3 percent, and that would be $30,000 a year. So there is a $60,000 penalty imposed upon Ohio by not having the use of this money, and on top of that a 5-percent deduction. That is more than sufficient penalty, even if the most extreme claims of the Social Security Board were to be conceded. The people of Ohio are not responsible for this case. They furnished the money, which is now withheld from them. It is Ohio's own money, and it should be returned. For the Federal Government to keep the entire amount is nothing short of ruthless. If any penalty is to be imposed upon the citizens of our State, simply because of a personal and political dispute between Governor Davey and Hopkins, it should be tempered with justice in proportion to the misdeeds which were charged. The corrections demanded by the Social Security Board must have been made promptly because they put through the regular payment a month later. It seems that a 5-percent penalty would be plenty to cover such a condition. If you want to be fair to Ohio citizens, stop there. Do not deprive them of the full amount. Who ever heard of a penalty like that? Why make the pensioners of the State suffer because of the Davey-Hopkins argument? Vote to pass this bill over the President's veto.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER].

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, doubtless most of you are weary of this debate, but I do want to call a few things to your attention, and I want to talk particularly to those on my own side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, what gave rise to us being here today and to this veto was an unfortunate quarrel between an official of the State of Ohio and one of the Federal Government. Are we going to penalize the sovereign State of Ohio and its people because of the views of the administrator of an agency which this body, the Congress of the United States, created?

They talk about res adjudicata—things judicially decided. Why was not that question raised before the two Judiciary Committees of the Congress of the United States? Why did not somebody raise that question when this bill was passed by the House and by the Senate of the United States? That question was not raised because the committees and the two Houses of Congress were imbued with the idea that the equities here lay with the people of the State of Ohio. You cannot, any of you, know when your State may find itself in a similar position. We are not pleading the case of the State of Ohio before the Supreme Court of the United States. We are here before a great body that is clothed in equity.

We are only asking you to do what is fair and just and equitable to the people of the great State of Ohio. There may have been some right on either side of this dispute. It happens that the man who was chief of the division for aid of the aged in Ohio is a constituent of mine, a man who is past worthy president of one of the great fraternal societies of this country, which sponsored old-age pensions before they were hardly known—the Fraternal Order of Eagles. I know how interested he was in the proper administration of aid to the aged in the State of Ohio. I know that Ohio had old-age pensions long before we had the Social Security Act, and that the Legislature of Ohio passed necessary enabling legislation so that we might take advantage of the Federal act.

We are here not asking that you make any partisan measure of this, not that you attempt to humiliate the President, because I do not think he had all the facts at his command when this veto message was written. We are only asking you to do justice to the people of the State of Ohio. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I hesitate, and have hesitated long as to where my duty lay. I love the President of the United States personally. In this matter I think that while he is technically right, he is too severe. I recognize fully his duty to uphold the righteous enactments of the Executive agencies of this Government, yet we heard the evidence in our committee, and it seems to me that this is a fair statement of this case: To sustain this veto is the equivalent of enforcing a judgment by default in a court of law for the full amount sued for.

That does not seem to me to comport with justice tempered with mercy, especially in view of the fact that this is largely Ohio's money. I know it is a Federal contribution, but the taxes which are raised to pay it come in large part from the State of Ohio. We, in good faith, in every State have accepted our responsibility under the Social Security Act, and all of us, in proportion to our wealth and means, are paying our share of the money which the Federal Government distributes in matching, in aid of the States.

So it seems to me that, no matter what the shortcomings and mistakes of Ohio may have been in the administration of this act, since they lasted less than a month, and for 15 months since she has been accorded full participation, the extreme penalty possible under the law might be mitigated. There was no fraud nor defalcation. In fact, the errors were those of the administrator—not of all the people of Ohio. There was no State action except on the theory of agency. While this theory is perfectly valid in this case, of course, yet we should remember that if we sustain this veto we will be punishing the innocent as well as the guilty, and doing so largely because the defense went by default. Ohio's defense has since been presented to Congress and has, by our act, been held good in partial mitigation.

The question is, Shall we surrender our studied conclusion and impose the supreme penalty? Does it not seem that ample penalty will be imposed in the loss of the interest upon the principal of the sum which was withheld, plus forfeiture of the administrative money which will be upheld if the bill becomes law? That being the equivalent of a fine of more than $100,000, it seems to me, in good conscience, the equities of this case lie with the State of Ohio.

As much as I hate to disagree with the President and with the leadership of my party on this issue, I cannot bring myself into accord with their views. To do so I would have to reject my own best judgment and that of the Committee on the Judiciary, reached after mature deliberation. That reasoned conclusion is that a judgment by default for the full amount of the suit should not be allowed to stand in this case and that we should temper justice with mercy. Why should we not do in this case what, we are told, has been done in another?

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman tell us why the representatives of the State of Ohio did not appear when they were notified to appear?

Mr. HOBBS. I cannot, nor do I attempt to justify or palliate that conduct.

Mr. COOLEY. Did they make any effort to justify or attempt to explain their failure to do so?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield? I pointed out in my remarks that the representatives of the Old Age Pension Board of Ohio came here to Washington to answer, and while they were here the Governor of Ohio wired them and demanded them to leave Washington and return to Ohio. It was just this Governor who was standing in the way. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have no more requests for time.

I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 171, nays 152, not voting, 100, as follows:

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 25, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 23, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast taught us through the wisdom of life to rejoice in the breath of the morning, in the fresh radiance of flowers, in the dreaming mountains surplined now in their robes of white: Accept our heartfelt thanks for these unseen powers, whose presence we can feel, as they weave God's garments out of the loveliness of earth and sea and sky, causing us to exclaim, "Heaven and earth are full of the majesty of Thy glory."

Grant us by faith a vision of the Tree of Life, in whose branches the breath of all the centuries is but a little whisper of the winds, whose leaves are for the healing of the nations, and whose immortal fruit shall preserve our souls beyond the reach of time and chance and death. Help us to face our world fearless and undismayed because of hope which, even in the darkest night, looks up with confidence to the shining stars, and love, which constrains us to regard our fellow men with the invincible loyalty of Him whose great heart never faltered even though they crucified His love, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. ADAMS. In the absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, January 23, 1940, be dispensed with and that the Journal be approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 5118) for the relief of the State of Ohio, returned by the President of the United States, with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was Resolved, That the said bill do not pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives not agreeing to pass the same.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 419) to extend, for 3 additional months, the time during which articles imported free of duty for exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition or the New York World's Fair, may be sold or abandoned, and it was signed by the Vice President.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. ADAMS. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is absent in attendance upon a conference at the White House.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] are members of the committee appointed to attend the funeral in Idaho of the late Senator Borah, and are, therefore, absent.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is detained on official business for the Special Committee on Civil Liberties.

Mr. CONNALLY. I announce the absence of my colleague the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] because of illness. I should like to have the announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

THE LATE SENATOR BORAH

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, as the mortal remains of the late Senator BORAH are being laid to rest today I wish briefly to speak of the lasting values of his life that will never die.

Senator BORAH had a peace of mind which goes with a great liberty. Few have it. He had it because he cultivated it and thought more of his independence than of all else. When he spoke for America it was because he had in his heart a deep, abiding love for this country. The threads of his diversified thought fit into a matchless pattern of devotion to duty in behalf of his native land. In his judgment, nothing was ever too good to be true in America; and he dedicated his life to keeping the Nation safe and secure within the moorings of the Constitution.

In this time of national thought on the superb leadership of Senator BORAH our eyes have filled with tears, and our hearts have glowed with tenderness; for he seemed very close to us. He seemed close to millions of people for whom he was a mighty voice and a fearless champion. We miss him. Our tears are not for him, but for ourselves. We have a sense of loneliness because he cannot be replaced. Yet we are comforted because there are so many of us who share the united thought that here was and is our friend—one whose stalwart spirit will continue to bless and defend us. He was indeed the tribune of the people.

Senator BORAH was free because he listened to the growing and changing trends of public opinion. His voice was elastic and his point of view flexible to accord with the rise and fall of popular needs. Never, however, did he depart from his fidelity to the fundamental precepts of American traditions and principles as he understood them; and no one understood them better than he.

Our friend loved the out-of-doors. Often he roamed through Rock Creek Park. To the Nation he has been as a mighty oak tree, or a lordly cedar, which, going down "with a great shout upon the hills, leaves a lonesome place against the sky." And yet his life reminds me of these words by Ella Higginson:

I know a place where the sun is like gold,
And the cherry blossoms burst with snow,
And down underneath is the loveliest nook,
Where the four-leaf clovers grow.

One leaf is for hope, and one is for faith,
And one is for love, you know;
And God put another in for luck,
If you search, you will find where they grow.

But you must have hope, and you must have faith,
You must love and be strong—and so,
If you work, if you wait, you will find the place
Where the four-leaf clovers grow.

NOTICE OF ADDRESS BY SENATOR ELLENDER ON THE LOUISIANA DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I had intended to address the Senate today with respect to the Democratic primary held in my State on January 16, but because, due to the inclement weather we are having, I was unable to obtain certain data for which I asked, I give notice that I shall address the Senate after the morning hour on the next legislative day, which will probably be Monday.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE COAST GUARD ACADEMY

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I desire to make an announcement. The statute imposes upon the chairman of the Committee on Commerce the duty of appointing each year two members of that committee to the Board of Visitors to the Coast Guard Academy at New London, Conn. I desire therefore to announce the appointment for the present year of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR]. I wish the RECORD to show that appointment.

PRESENTATION OF BIRTHDAY CAKE TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of paying a brief tribute to three young ladies of my State. On yesterday Misses Elinor Myrup, Marilou Winter, and Elsie Schmidt, of Chicago, came to the city of Washington by airplane for the purpose of presenting to President Roosevelt a huge birthday cake in commemoration of the fifty-eighth anniversary of his birth. These three young ladies are daughters of the three leading officials of the Bakery and Confectionery Workers International Union.

The cake was donated to the labor division of the committee for the celebration of the President's birthday by the bakery union as a means of raising additional funds for the "fight infantile paralysis" campaign. American Federation of Labor unions bought the 58 candles on the cake, which grossed more than $5,800 for the paralysis fund.

The labor division, of which William Green is chairman, and Chester M. Wright, director of organization, distributed nearly three and one-half million President's birthday greeting cards to members of organized labor throughout the Nation and its territories, and asked each member receiving a card to return it to the White House loaded with dimes and dollars for the war on the dreaded scourge.

I commend the American Federation of Labor for their unusual interest in a humanitarian program that is valiantly fighting this dread disease.

REPORT OF THE GOVERNOR OF THE PANAMA CANAL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on InterOceanic Canals:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Annual Report of the Governor of the Panama Canal for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 25, 1940.

REPORT OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE PANAMA RAILROAD CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on InterOceanic Canals:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Ninetieth Annual Report of the Board of Directors of the Panama Railroad Co. for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 25, 1940.

CIVIL SERVICE TENURE FOR ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER OF GENERAL LAND OFFICE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 3 of title 43 of the United States Code, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

REPORT OF EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, the twenty-third annual report of the Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the National Farm Loan Associations of Alice, Brownwood, and George West, all in the State of Texas, favoring the enactment of legislation to restore the Farm Credit Administration to the status of an independent bureau, and placing the operations of the Federal land banks, national farm-loan associations, and other units of the Administration under the supervision of a bipartisan board appointed by the President for fixed terms, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, which were referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization.

Mr. CAPPER presented a letter in the nature of a petition signed by the secretary and other members of the Junior Mothers' Club, of Chanute, Kans., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 517, to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages over the radio, which was ordered to lie on the table.

PROHIBITION OF TRANSFER OF AMERICAN VESSELS TO FOREIGN REGISTRY OR PERSONS

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram addressed to me by the National Council of the National Maritime Union with regard to Senate bill 3075, which I have introduced, providing for the repeal of the power of the Maritime Commission to grant transfers of ships to foreign registry.

I ask unanimous consent that the telegram, which is very brief, be inserted at this point in my remarks and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., January 16, 1940.

Senator CLARK of Missouri,

Senate Office Building:

National Council, National Maritime Union, representing 65,000 organized seamen, at present in session in New York City, has gone on record unanimously to support your position against sale or transfer of American ships to foreign countries. Sale or transfer at this time is nothing more or less than a step toward involving the United States into war. National Maritime Union offers all its facilities to aid in passage of this bill in Congress.

JOSEPH CURRAN, President.

LOWER INTEREST RATES AND MORATORIA ON FARM MORTGAGES—RESOLUTIONS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the necessity of lower interest rates on farm mortgages; also to the fact that the continuance of droughts and low farm prices have made it impossible for many farmers to meet their mortgage payments as they come due.

I am not now speaking of the farmers who, through their own fault, have failed to make sufficient income to meet these payments. I refer to the great number of good, thrifty, intelligent, industrious farmers who, through no fault of their own, but because of weather and unfavorable economic conditions are delinquent.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact, as reported by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, that the purchasing power of the farmers at the close of 1939 was only 79 percent of what it was in 1910-14, when farm income and factory income were in fairly equitable balance. Secretary Wallace says that farm income nationally is approximately $2,000,000,000 less than it should be if parity of agriculture and industry is to be attained.

Mr. President, the 7,000,000 farm families in the United States constitute one-fourth of the entire population. They receive from one-eleventh to one-tenth of the national income. On that income—admittedly about $2,000,000,000 below parity income—they are expected to pay taxes, mortgage indebtedness, operating costs of their business, living costs of their families and, in addition, educate one-third of the boys and girls of school age in the entire country.

I am receiving many resolutions adopted by county farm-loan associations in Kansas at their annual meetings, which are held at this time of year. These are the local associations which handle farm mortgages taken through the Federal land-bank system under the Farm Credit Administration. They are stockholders as well as borrowers in that system. The burden of these resolutions is that interest rates should be lowered, and that more lenient foreclosure policies should be adopted through this farm financial crisis. Most of them urge that interest rates on Federal land-bank loans be reduced to 3 percent, and that on land bank commissioner loans, which are distress loans, the rate be not higher than 4 percent. There is now in effect an act which expires next June 30, fixing land-bank-loan interest rates at 3½ percent, and land bank commissioner loans at 4 percent.

I have pending in the Committee on Banking and Currency a bill which would fix these interest rates at 3 percent for 3 years after next June 30. It also would grant a moratorium on principal payments on these loans until July 1, 1943, if the borrower is not in default with respect to any other covenant or condition of his mortgage.

I say that under depressing conditions such as now exist, for which the farmers themselves are not responsible, the farmers are entitled to such a moratorium on principal payments and to 3 percent interest rates on their mortgages held by Government agencies. I earnestly request early action by the Committee on Banking and Currency on this matter.

I send to the desk copies of resolutions from the county farm loan associations of Doniphan, Osborne, Marshall (Eldorado), Butler, and Barber Counties, and from the Kimeo National Farm Loan Association of Greenleaf, all in the State of Kansas, urging such action, and ask that they be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There being no objection, the resolutions presented by Mr. CAPPER which were adopted by the national farm loan associations at Eldorado, Greenleaf, Marysville, Medicine Lodge, Osborne, and Troy, in the State of Kansas, favoring the enactment of legislation to provide a reduced interest rate on farm loans made by the Federal land bank and land bank commissioner, were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

CHARTERING OF FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have received a letter from Hon. R. F. Starley, of Salt Lake City, Utah, who is banking commissioner of that State, transmitting copy of a resolution adopted at the Thirty-eighth Annual Convention of the National Association of Supervisors of State Banks, held at Salt Lake City, Utah, September 22, 1939. The resolution is in opposition to the further chartering of Federal savings and loan associations. I ask that the resolution itself be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted at the Thirty-eighth Annual Convention of the National Association of Supervisors of State Banks, Salt Lake City, Utah, September 22, 1939

Whereas this association recognizes that the existence of 30,000 or more banking institutions in this country was neither necessary to carry on the business of this country nor conducive to sound banking; and

Whereas the membership of this association, consisting of the commissioners of banking of the several States, in conjunction and in cooperation with the Comptroller's office, have worked diligently and faithfully to bring the number of banking institutions to such number as will meet the necessary needs and requirements for carrying on the business of the country; and

Whereas through such efforts and cooperation a system of banking has been established which we believe does meet all such necessary needs and requirements and gives to the country a much stronger and sounder system than heretofore existed; and

Whereas there is now established and being expanded a system of financial institutions under the name of Federal savings and loan associations that are doing, and propose to continue to do, business in active competition with banks; and

Whereas the chartering and supervision of these institutions is the responsibility of an agency other than those established to charter and supervise regularly chartered institutions constituted to carry on a banking business; and

Whereas such institutions are now seeking additional powers through acts of Congress which would expand the scope of such associations' activities; and

Whereas Federal savings and loan associations in some instances have been established without due regard to the already established banking facilities in communities throughout the country and without due regard to the necessity therefor; and

Whereas such practices are materially injurious to the already regularly established banking institutions in many, if not all, of the communities in which these Federal savings and loan associations are being placed; and

Whereas it is the sincere belief of this association that it is the ultimate intent and purpose in establishing these Federal savings and loan associations and increasing their powers that they shall in the end become mutual savings banks; and

Whereas, if this occurs, we will have the return of the same overbanked situation that existed in 1933 and prior thereto, with the resulting effects to the entire banking structure experienced in this country in recent years; and

Whereas it is the judgment of the membership of this association that the establishment of this system of Federal savings and loan associations should not only be curtailed but that their authority and activities should be reduced; and

Whereas it is the sense of this association that the word "savings" included in the name of these associations should never have been in the act authorizing their creation and should be stricken therefrom, because it is misleading, misinterpreted, and contrary to the very language of the act itself, wherein the act states "No deposits shall be accepted"; and

Whereas advertisements for such deposits are being made, in some instances at least, and unless restrictions are finally placed upon the activities of these Federal savings and loan associations, they will become a great hazard to the maintenance of a sound and safe banking system in this country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this association does hereby reiterate its opposition to the further chartering of Federal savings and loan associations and the granting of further power to the Federal Home Loan

Bank Board in the granting of charters and the establishment of these associations throughout the country; and be it further

Resolved, That we hereby register our protest and opposition to bills providing for such expansion as introduced in the last Congress, and to any similar bills that may be introduced into the coming Congress to accomplish the same purpose; and be it further

Resolved, That we earnestly ask the coming Congress not only to defeat such legislation, but to repeal the law authorizing the chartering of more of these institutions, or at least to modify the law so as to curtail their engaging in a banking business, and to place Federal savings and loan associations already established under the supervision and control of one of the recognized Federal bank supervising and examining authorities; and be it further

Resolved, That the contents of this resolution be by each member of this association brought to the attention of his State's delegation in Congress and that such information be given such delegation without delay.

AID TO FINLAND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. BROWN. I report back favorably from the Committee on Banking and Currency, with amendments, the bill (S. 3069) to provide for certain loans to the Republic of Finland by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and I submit a report (No. 1166) thereon. The measure proposes to increase the authority of the Export-Import Bank to make loans and covers in general the Finnish loan question. Under the previous order and agreement entered into by the Senate, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under an order heretofore entered, the report will be received and the bill and report will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. TRUMAN (for Mrs. CARAWAY), from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

On January 19, 1940:

S. 1554. An act to provide that the district judge for the western district of Washington, authorized to be appointed under the act of May 31, 1938, shall be a district judge for the eastern and western districts of Washington.

On January 23, 1940:

S. 1335. An act relating to the filing of affidavits of prejudice in the District Court for the District of Alaska; and

S. 1919. An act to provide for the acquisition by the United States of the estate of Patrick Henry in Charlotte County, Va., known as Red Hill.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

S. 3184. A bill for the relief of the Shaver Forwarding Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MILLER:

S. 3185. A bill for the relief of Noland Blass; and
S. 3186. A bill for the relief of Robert S. Boyd; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CHANDLER:

S. 3187. A bill for the relief of Lucille Sleet (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

S. 3188. A bill for the relief of Homer H. Keffer; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

S. 3189. A bill for the relief of Ola B. Auten and Harry Auten; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 3190. A bill for the relief of Mary Stella Six; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado:

S. 3191. A bill to grant pensions to certain unmarried dependent widows of Civil War veterans who were married to the veteran subsequent to June 26, 1905; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GEORGE:

S. 3192. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Cliff Snider; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 3193. A bill authorizing the payment of an indemnity to the Spanish Government on account of the death of Juan Neira, a Spanish subject, killed at Savannah, Ga., by a United States truck; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

S. 3194. A bill for the relief of Walter T. Blackwelder;

S. 3195. A bill for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department (with accompanying papers); and

S. 3196. A bill to amend the act approved May 24, 1938, entitled "An act for the relief of The Comision Mixta Demarcadora de Limites Entre Colombia y Panama" and for the relief of Jose Antonio Sossa D (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

S. 3197. A bill granting a pension to Anne Justice Greene; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3198. A bill to provide allowances for uniforms and equipment for certain officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Army;

S. 3199. A bill to provide allowances for inactive-status training for certain officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Army; and

S. 3200. A bill to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army in the military departments of Panama and Hawaii; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(Mr. REYNOLDS also introduced Senate bill 3201, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. KING:

S. 3202. A bill to make it a crime to wreck or attempt to wreck a train engaged in interstate commerce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3203. A bill to amend section 1262 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri:

S. 3205. A bill prohibiting the use of appropriations for the payment of subsidies under the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 to certain persons; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 3206. A bill for the relief of the alien James Neohoritis; to the Committee on Immigration.

(Mr. PEPPER (for himself and Mr. ANDREWS) introduced Senate bill 3207, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BULOW (for himself and Mr. GURNEY):

S. J. Res. 205. Joint resolution for the relief of South Dakota Wheat Growers Association, Inc.; to the Committee on Claims.

SUGAR QUOTA FOR MAINLAND CANE AREA

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce a bill on behalf of my colleague [Mr. ANDREWS] and myself proposing a more equitable sugar quota. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and also that a statement relative thereto be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3207) to provide for a more equitable sugar quota for the mainland cane area, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; and the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JOINT STATEMENT OF SENATORS PEPPER AND ANDREWS

The purpose of the bill introduced by Senator PEPPER and Senator ANDREWS is to amend the Sugar Act of 1937, to give to the mainland producer of sugar who has maintained the highest seasonal wage standard and the lowest cost of production, as determined by data made available to the secretary of such producers, the additional quota as produced by the deficit between that authorized under the Sugar Act of 1937 and the Philippine Independence Act.

This quota is provided for in the deficit arising from the difference of the 1940 quota of duty-free sugar from the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, which is 1,036,356 short tons, and under the Philippine Independence Act the Philippine quota thus established is 981,912 tons, producing a deficit of 54,444 short tons.

Previously it has been the practice of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of State to allocate this quota to foreign countries in direct discrimination against domestic areas.

This amendment does not authorize the Secretary to pay benefit payments on sugar allotted from the so-called Philippine deficit. It does require the Secretary to increase the producers marketing allotment so he can sell the sugar so allotted, but he receives no benefit payments.

The only cost to the Government would be the loss of duty. This loss would be offset many times by the increased employment provided in the continental producing area and increase consumption of surplus agricultural products. For thus to produce this amount of sugar, 54,444 short tons, direct employment would be provided for 5,500 men (basis of 1 man for every 10 tons) at the highest wages paid on agricultural work in the United States. Experts estimate that for every man directly employed, two other persons are subsequently employed in servicing them with food, clothing, housing, transportation, and other facilities, which are a part of the American standard of living.

ESTABLISHMENT OF MARINE SCHOOLS, ETC.—AMENDMENTS

Mr. REYNOLDS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 594) to amend the act entitled "An act for the establishment of Marine Schools, and for other purposes," approved March 11, 1911; to expand the public educational facilities of the several States and provide each with a State nautical academy; to create a new public-school system for education of masses of American youths in nautical, aviation, and technical fields relating thereto; to increase the national defense in the realm of radio; to improve navigation; to provide marine conservation and development; to create the United States Maritime Corps as a supplement to the Naval Reserves; to provide an abundant supply of native Americans, trained personnel to operate the new United States ships afloat and in the air; to provide the technical machinery for further maritime improvement; and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR BORAH BY "THE STATE," OF COLUMBIA, S. C.

[Mr. BYRNES asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial tribute to the late Senator Borah, published in The State, of Columbia, S. C., of the issue of January 22, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR BORAH BY HORACE C. CARLISLE

[Mr. BANKHEAD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a tribute to the late Senator Borah by Horace C. Carlisle, of Alabama, which appears in the Appendix.]

REGULATION OF THE OVER-THE-COUNTER SECURITY MARKETS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR MALONEY

[Mr. MALONEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject Regulation of the Over-the-Counter Security Markets, delivered by him at San Francisco, Calif., August 22, 1939, at a meeting of the California Security Dealers Association, the Investment Bankers Association, and the National Association of Securities Dealers, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR TAFT ON NONPARTISANSHIP IN FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC POLICY

[Mr. TOWNSEND asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Senator Taft at Milwaukee, Wis., on January 19, 1940, on the subject Nonpartisanship in Foreign and Domestic Policy, which appears in the Appendix.]

IRRIGATION OF GREAT PLAINS REGION

[Mr. NORRIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD correspondence between Senator HAYDEN and the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the irrigation of part of the Great Plains region, and a memorandum on the same subject, which appear in the Appendix.]

ADDRESSES BY GOVERNOR STASSEN AND PERRY PIPKIN

[Mr. BRIDGES asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD addresses delivered at St. Paul, Minn., by Governor Stassen, of Minnesota, and Perry Pipkin, which appear in the Appendix.]

INVESTIGATION OF LIFE INSURANCE

[Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Luke J. Cavanaugh, Commissioner of Insurance of Colorado, relating to the investigation of life insurance, which appears in the Appendix.]

CONDITIONS IN SPAIN

[Mr. WALSH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article published in the magazine Spain, written by Dr. Joseph F. Thorning, entitled "Victorious Spain," which appears in the Appendix.]

FIRST PLANE FLIGHT

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "The First Plane Flight," written by Hon. Carl Goerch and published in the State Magazine of Raleigh, N. C.]

SILVER PURCHASE PROGRAM, ETC.

[Mr. TOWNSEND asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Times of January 23, 1940, entitled "The Silver Folly," and an editorial from the Washington Post of January 22, 1940, entitled "The New Yellow Peril," which appear in the Appendix.]

COMMITTEE SERVICE

On motion of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the following Senators be assigned to committee service, as indicated: The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] to the Committee on the Judiciary; the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] to the Committee on Civil Service; the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads; the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] to the Committee on Military Affairs; and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] to the chairmanship of the Committee on Claims.

DELEGATION OF CERTAIN REGULATORY FUNCTIONS IN DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1955) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to delegate certain regulatory functions and to create the position of Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WHEELER, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. McNARY conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE RECOGNITION OF RUSSIA

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in Asia, as well as in Europe, tragic conditions exist. Japan is reviving the worst forms of oriental tyranny and of medieval barbarism. She is attacking defenseless cities and towns and spreading ruin and devastation over a vast area in China. No more brutal and barbarous course has been pursued in modern times under the guise of war. Japan is carrying on a plan of extermination. Millions of people have been driven from their homes, hundreds, if not thousands, of towns and cities have been destroyed, important commercial centers have been wrecked by bombs from the air, and millions of people, without shelter or food, have been forced to flee, without any possibility of succor or support.

Hitler carried on a war of devastation in Poland. He has vouchsafed no justification for the cruel and merciless course which he and the Nazis pursued. Important cities were destroyed, millions of people driven from their homes, and a flourishing and progressive nation brought under subjection to Nazi and Bolshevik rule. When the chapter is written of the merciless and barbarous policies pursued by Hitler and Stalin in Poland, those who peruse its pages will be compelled to regard Hitler and Stalin as among the most cruel and merciless despots who afflicted the world.

It is apparent that Hitler and Stalin seek the destruction of democratic nations. Democracy is alien to their philosophy, and they seek to impose upon peace-loving democratic peoples, not only an alien rule, but one which finds no parallel, except in dark ages or in periods when cruel Oriental monsters carried on wars of rapine and plunder. Not only are the rights of minorities being attacked by Japan, by the Bolsheviks and the Nazis, but liberal and progressive governments, in which peace and progress were enjoyed by millions of people, are being assailed by Hitler and Stalin. The pages of history are being blurred with records of oppression and cruelty and attempts to destroy not only minorities and the rights and dignity of human beings, but of independent and progressive democracies. Nineteen hundred and thirty-nine witnessed the dismemberment of nations and the destruction of important small peoples. If the sweep of brute force is not halted, this year may bring the complete disappearance of many small nations from the face of the earth. With each blow struck against small nations, such as Finland, Estonia, Lithuania, Latvia, and against larger nations, such as Poland, it becomes apparent that the rights of all peoples have been attacked, and the principles of liberty and justice assailed. A world that is not safe for minorities and for small nations is a world that is not safe for democracy. When Austria was destroyed, when Czechoslovakia was mutilated, when Poland was crucified by bolshevism and nazi-ism, the concepts of right and wrong, of liberty and justice, were shaken. In the midst of this confusion, the aggressor nations laid down a barrage of words, designed to cloak brutal conquest in the robes of liberation.

The inhuman and barbarous attack upon Finland is part of an organized attempt at the assassination of the character and integrity of all minorities and of all small nations. The whole concept of self-determination for small groups and small nations is being completely undermined. This is a process with profound implications for all countries and all peoples. The way to the destruction of the rights of majorities begins in the footpath of the annihilation of minorities. The rights of majorities are guaranteed only when the rights of minorities and small nations remain inviolate.

The democratic and liberty-loving peoples of Europe are being menaced by the Nazi and Bolshevik governments. The destruction of Finland may not appease the rapacity of the Bolshevik regime, and the Scandinavian states, which have made important contributions to the highest form of civilization, may be the next objects of assault by Hitler and Stalin. There are indications that the Soviet Government plans the destruction of some of the Balkan states, and in far-off Asia, millions of people are concerned as to their future in the face of Bolshevik activities. Switzerland, Belgium, Holland—countries in which liberty is enjoyed—may not escape the ambitions of the Nazi regime.

Mr. President, the Bolshevik Government has never concealed its purpose, to spread its authority throughout the world. It seeks the destruction of all democratic nations and the reign of communism throughout the world. I believed that it would be a mistake for our Government to recognize the Bolshevik regime. I believed, from statements made to me by Bolshevik leaders and by the conduct of the Bolshevik Government, that it would seize every opportunity to introduce the baneful philosophy of communism into the United States, and to undermine democratic institutions.

Accordingly, when it was suggested in 1933 that the Bolshevik regime be recognized, I indicated my opposition to that policy, and took the liberty of submitting a memorandum to the Executive Department, in which I expressed, in part at least, the ground of my opposition to the recognition of the Soviet Government. I had been in Russia a number of years before, and traveled many thousand miles, and had visited nearly all sections of European Russia. I met many of the Bolshevik leaders, and learned from them and from ardent Communists their purposes and the activities which they sought. They did not hesitate to declare that communism was a world cult, and must be superimposed upon the peoples of the world. While I had great sympathy for the mass of the Russian people, I deeply regretted their blind obedience to Bolshevik leaders, and sympathized with them because of the oppressive and despotic rule to which they were subjected.

In view of all the facts brought to my attention, I believed it would be unwise for our Government to recognize the Bolshevik regime; and therefore, I prepared a memorandum and submitted it to the Executive Department on the 13th of November 1933, in which I set forth, in part at least, my views in regard to the proposed recognition of the Stalin Government.

The memorandum is as follows:

No circumstances have arisen to date that would alter my attitude, heretofore expressed in the Senate and elsewhere, on the question of recognition by the United States of the Soviet Government of Russia.

I have always felt the most profound sympathy for the Russian people and have entertained keen regret that they should be subjected to a regime of political and economic dictatorship represented by the present authority in Russia. I have believed that as an American I have no right to interfere with the internal or economic affairs established and maintained by another sovereign nation.

On the other hand, I have always contended that recognition of a foreign government by our Government is not a duty nor an obligation on our part but an act of policy dictated by considerations which appear to be in our best interest.

I supported the position of President Wilson in refusing to recognize the Bolshevik regime; and after having visited Russia, where I spent several months and traveled more than 8,000 miles, I was more firmly convinced that the best interests of our country would not be served by extending recognition to the Soviet Government until and unless that Government should change its policy with respect to internal affairs as well as external matters, and, moreover, that it should give ample and convincing proof of its intention to assume in its international relations a clear obligation to act in accordance with the generally recognized standards of friendly intercourse among nations. I am therefore opposed to extending recognition to the Soviet Government until such proof is forthcoming.

If it should become the policy of our Government to reconsider at this time our official attitude toward the Soviet Government, our first step should be the creation of a competent commission to ascertain, both independently and in consultation with the representatives of the Soviet Government, the necessary facts upon which a judgment can be based as to whether or not the Soviet Government is prepared, in fact, to assume international obligations common to all civilized nations. Specifically, before extending recognition to the Soviet Government, we should know:

(a) Whether or not that Government is prepared to undertake to conduct no subversive propaganda in our country or our territorial possessions, either directly through its accredited representatives or indirectly through such an agency as the Third International.

May I interpolate here that I emphasized that point in my memorandum because of conversations which I had with Bolshevik leaders when in Russia, in which they indicated that recognition would afford opportunities for the dissemination of the principles of the communist faith.

The second point I suggested was:

Whether or not that Government is prepared to and will disassociate itself from the Third International and will agree to no longer subsidize it or contribute to its maintenance or activities.

May I add in passing that when in Moscow I visited the Third International headquarters? There I saw Mr. Radek, who was, in the absence of Zinoviev, in control of the headquarters. Sitting with him was Bill Haywood, who, as Senators will recall, was prosecuted for transgressions of law during the World War, and convicted. He fled to Russia, forfeiting his bail of $50,000. When I saw him in the Third International headquarters he greeted me and stated that the United States "didn't get" him. He was frank in indicating that, as a member of the Third International, he was using his best efforts to spread communism in the United States and in other countries. I might add in passing that he remained in Russia until the time of his death, which was several years after I saw him in 1924.

I might add, for the benefit of my colleagues from the South, that sitting with Mr. Radek was also a colored man from Alabama, who frankly stated that he was a Communist and was a member of the Third International, and was engaged in the spread of communism among his race in the United States.

The memorandum continues:

(c) Whether or not that Government is prepared to and will guarantee an open public and fair trial to any American citizen who may be charged with the violation of any law, rule, or regulation of such Government;

(d) Whether or not that Government is prepared to and will recognize former subjects of Russia who are naturalized American citizens as American citizens and will accord to them all the rights of American citizens;

(e) Whether or not that Government is prepared, with respect to the war loans extended by our Treasury to fully accredited representatives of the Russian Government then in power, to place itself on the same footing as all the other governments which had borrowed from us during the war—that is, to acknowledge the obligation and to enter into proper negotiations for the discharging of such obligation; and

(f) Whether or not that Government is prepared to enter into negotiations for the satisfaction of the claims of our citizens who had suffered property damage because of acts initiated and carried out by authority of that Government.

The willingness of the Soviet Government to assume the undertakings herein enumerated should be embodied in formal declaration precedent to our act of recognition. The experience of other important nations, notably Great Britain and France, which had recognized the Soviet Government unconditionally, should serve as sufficient warning to us as to the difficulty of protecting and maintaining our national interests in the face of the international policies pursued by the Soviet Government in the absence of previous clearly defined undertakings on the part of that Government.

It is often asserted that recognition of the Soviet Government would result for our country in a large expansion of our export trade to Russia. This, it is held, would be of sufficient benefit to several important branches of agricultural and industrial production in the United States to render the act of recognition a step in the direction of promoting our best national interests.

The truth of this assertion should be another necessary field of inquiry for the American commission suggested above. From my personal investigation of this subject, I am convinced that no foundation whatever exists for the extravagant claims advanced in favor of outstanding trade benefits that would accrue to us as a result of our extending recognition to the Soviet Government. The possibility of our purchases from Russia, the proceeds of which could be used to pay for our exports to that country, is admittedly very limited. Our sales to Russia, over and above our purchases from her, would have to be governed by one of the following factors:

(1) A net balance in favor of Russia in her trade with her principal customers; that is, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, and France;

(2) Exports of gold by her; and

(3) New credits extended to her in this country.

I am credibly informed that for some time ahead any visible net balance in favor of Russia in her trade with the principal European nations is bound to be absorbed by her payments to these countries on account of credits already extended to her by their citizens. Similarly, her stocks and current production of gold are relatively small. Hence, there would appear to be but a slight businesslike basis for the extension to her of any substantial volume of new credits.

All these questions will have to be thoroughly and authoritatively investigated before adequate judgment can be formed as to whether or not the recognition of the Soviet Government would, in fact, be in our best economic interest. Surely, no officials of our Government would be so oblivious of the disastrous consequences of our huge loans to foreign countries during the post-war years as to lay the foundation for a resumption of substantial loans abroad without a most careful investigation as to the soundness of such investments. In short, an unconditional recognition of the Soviet Government, prior to an adequate and authoritative investigation, and unaccompanied by a definite assumption by the Soviet Government of trustworthy undertakings along the lines here suggested, would be a rash and precipitate action, likely to be profoundly deplored all too soon after it is taken.

Mr. President, though not a prophet, time has vindicated the position which I took.

The present difficulties with Russia should have been foreseen. Whatever one may think of the social and economic objectives of the Communists, and conceding that in the beginning their motives were idealistic, the fact is that also from the beginning they made no concealment of the doctrine that the end justifies the means. This belief is expounded in some of the writings of Lenin himself.

The immorality of any such doctrine need not be stressed. It should be pointed out, however, that men and movements admitting the validity of any such principle, in the end always confuse ends with means, especially in situations where there arises a struggle for power, personal and political. That is the meaning of the saying that revolutions devour their own children. In the French Revolution it was the guillotine for personal and political opponents. In the Russian Revolution it is something more sordid. In Russia opponents are not even accorded the honor of a glamorous death, but either disappear without trace or are shot like dogs in cellars. I may say that I saw evidences of that when I was in Russia.

Many individuals, and, for that matter, many publications, in their sympathies for those they believed to be builders of a new society, for years either concealed or deliberately overlooked the methods used by the masters of Russia. The wanton attack on Finland has forced even them—most of them at any rate—to cry out in horror. There are people much less radical than Communists who are ready to use any means if they believe the objective to be laudable and desirable. The moral and ethical collapse of the Russian experiment carries a lesson to all these.

The fact is that even on the moral side the Russian, as well as the German, experiment has always represented extreme reaction. Throughout the centuries mankind slowly, gropingly, had built up a code of ethics which alone makes possible a semblance of civilized life. Here especially belongs the sanctity of a plighted word, of treaties, and respect for certain fundamental rights, especially of other nations. The Bolsheviks and Nazis have thrown over all these without creating anything resembling a moral code of their own. They have gone back to cavemen methods. Not only economically and socially, but morally, as well, they are the supreme reactionaries of our generation.

It is only to be hoped that the lesson they have meted out to their own friends will be permanent, and the lesson fully appreciated by those who knowingly or unknowingly have supported communism in this or in other lands.

SUPPLEMENTAL MILITARY AND NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment on page 7, line 21, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Under the subhead "Acquisition of land", on page 7, line 21, after the figures "$150,000" and the semicolon, it is proposed to strike out "and for the acquisition of approximately 800 acres in Puerto Rico for the establishment of a general depot and cantonment area and the enlargement of Camp Buchanan, as authorized in the acts of July 2, 1917, and April 11, 1918 (50 U. S. C. 171), $200,000", and on page 8, line 2, after the words "in all", to strike out "$550,000" and insert "$350,000", so as to read:

For the acquisition of approximately 200,000 acres as a bombing area for use in connection with McChord Field, Wash., $200,000; for the acquisition of approximately 48,000 acres as a bombing area in connection with Hamilton Field, Calif., $150,000; in all, $350,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the matter now before the Senate relates to the acquisition of land at San Juan, P. R.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Texas for that purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the matter under discussion is of considerable importance. The principle of it runs all through the bill. Before we begin the discussion of this subject I think we should have a quorum. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Brown in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Before the Senator from Oklahoma proceeds, the Chair feels that he ought to state the parliamentary situation. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment beginning in line 21 on page 7 and extending into line 2 on page 8, striking out the matter relative to the acquisition of 800 acres of land in Puerto Rico.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on a former date I occupied considerable time on the general question of expanding our national defense; and finally, at the close of my remarks, I touched upon the particular issue before us.

The issue before the Senate proposes to establish a policy for the acquisition of additional land for military purposes. On page 7, beginning in line 16, we find that the committee recommends the purchase of 200,000 acres of land to be used in conjunction with McChord Field, in Washington, to be used as a bombing area. As a part of our national defense we now have planes equipped for bombing purposes. The Government has constructed, or caused to be constructed, a large number of bombing planes. Those planes are for the particular purpose of carrying bombs and dropping them over strategic enemy points, such as forts, army camps, factories, railroads, canals, depots, and so forth. It seems to me that the bombing activity of the Army is now one of the major activities of the Army. That being true, it is entirely proper that we should buy land in Washington to enable the bombing planes in that area to drop bombs as a form of training practice.

Mr. President, bombs cannot be dropped in safety except over water or over land wholly uninhabited. So I am thoroughly in sympathy with and favor the acquisition of the land for the use of the bombing squadrons to test their ability in hitting targets from the air. So no question is raised about the 200,000 acres proposed to be acquired for McChord Field in Washington.

Next the committee recommends that we purchase 48,000 acres of land for use as a bombing area in connection with Hamilton Field, Calif., the 200,000 acres in Washington to cost $200,000 and the 48,000 acres in California to cost $150,000.

Mr. President, we have a large military establishment at Hamilton Field, located some 28 miles north of San Francisco. We have there many of the larger bombing planes. The whole area is an airplane establishment to train men to fly the planes and to drop the bombs accurately.

As I stated on a former occasion, we have now perfected a bombing sight which, when placed upon a bombing plane, enables the men who fly the plane to drop a bomb toward a target just as accurately as a cannon can be fired on the ground.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. In what part of California is the proposed bombing area?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bill does not state.

Mr. CONNALLY. It seems to me there is sufficient desert land in California, where a jack rabbit cannot even live, where we might acquire a tract for nothing. I would be in favor of that, but I would not want to buy a great quantity of expensive land around Hollywood.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the fact that the 48,000 acres will cost but $150,000 is evidence that the land is not of great value for any other purpose. There is much land in California that is barren because it is arid and because it is too rocky for any other purpose; and while I do not know the exact location of this land, I take it that it is accessible to Hamilton Field.

A little later the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] will sponsor an amendment to buy land to be used in conjunction with a big airplane base near Denver. When that time comes I shall favor that project, because the land is necessary, and there is no land immediately adjacent to Denver which is susceptible to that use and desirable for that purpose. So it is proposed to go across into Utah and buy some land in the State of the Senator from Utah (Mr. KING) around great Salt Lake, where the land is practically worthless desert land. I shall favor that proposal when it comes before the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Are there not great areas of public lands in Colorado, California, and other States which the Government already has, and which might be used for bombing areas?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I can answer that question in part. Wherever a desirable bombing site can be found on public land, such land will not cost us anything. The only cost for land will be for land held in private ownership; and I take it that the California tract and the Washington tract are largely of that character of land.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish merely to answer part of the inquiry of the Senator from Texas (Mr. CONNALLY). In Colorado 100 square miles of land has been donated by the people of the First Congressional District for these purposes, all of which has been paid for by local funds. If bombs cannot be dropped with safety within an area of 100 square miles, of course, more land will have to be acquired.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Some may wonder why it is necessary to acquire such large tracts for the use of our bombing planes. The bombing planes travel at a high rate of speed. They travel at speeds from 140 to 250 miles an hour. So it would be utterly useless to try to use a small tract of land as a bombing area. To have the best efficiency it is necessary to have a sufficiently large tract of ground so that the planes can maneuver and place their targets where they will be safe from doing damage to property or to human habitations.

However, Mr. President, when the third item of this character in the bill came before the committee, an item proposing to acquire some 800 acres of land to be added to the existing small fort at San Juan, P. R., the committee struck the item from the bill. If the committee amendment is agreed to, we shall have in San Juan a military reservation of about 286 acres, and on that little reservation, much of which is rough land which cannot be used for any purpose except as a background for a target range, we shall have a large amount of ammunition stored under tarpaulins and canvas. We now have there a large amount of stores that should be housed. Those stores are outdoors, unprotected, under sheds, under planks, under tarpaulins, and under canvas. We also have a large amount of machinery and other equipment there. I call it "machinery." It is armament, ordnance—unprotected, out of doors, standing there exposed to the wind, the rain, and the sun. So we have a large quantity of equipment in a congested area, with no place to put it. On this small tract of ground a large number of soldiers are now living in tents.

Puerto Rico is a rough country. The island is small. The center looks like a ridge of a mountain range. The top of the mountain, of course, is worthless. Lower down the people grow coffee. Still lower down, on the benchland, they grow tobacco. Then along the coast, where the ground is low, and in the river bottoms, they grow sugarcane. The whole island is small, and in the area of San Juan there is little level land.

At a former date a board of Army engineers located what is now known as Fort Buchanan. It is too small for any military purpose except as a base for the present contingent of soldiers and the military supplies already there awaiting permanent housing.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the event the amendment should be adopted and we should acquire the extra land in Puerto Rico, has the Senator any figure to show how much it will cost to put the land in shape to house the ammunition, matériel, and equipment which he has described?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am unprepared to answer that question fully; but I will make the statement that one of the first things to be done will be to build some suitable buildings for the storage of our ammunition, bombs, and shells. As to the extent of the necessary buildings, I am unable to say; but in my opinion that project is No. 1 in priority.

Second, at the same time we must build a form of shelter in which to house or store the supplies, such as groceries, provisions, and military equipment which must be used there later. In my opinion that project is No. 2 in priority.

Then No. 3: There must be developed at that point an airport. Such a field will not be expensive because there is a place for an airport which is practically level. The ground will have to be cleared of sugarcane, and there will be some ravines to be filled and some knolls to be leveled, but the work would not be expensive, nothing to compare with the expense incurred in other places where we are building airports throughout the United States. So that when we have that development completed, we will have at Fort Buchanan a modern military establishment.

Mr. TYDINGS. And with room to expand and to enlarge?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct. We will have a place to store ammunition, that can be used by both the Army and the Navy, and another place for planes to land, for in that area there are few roads and only one railroad.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to divert the Senator, but my question was prompted by the thought that in Puerto Rico today the economic conditions are very bad. The Government is appropriating millions of dollars every year, in one form or another, in work relief and what not. That being so, it occurred to me that it would be wise, inasmuch as we are going to spend money there, if some of the money diverted to work relief and expended for work relief proper could be utilized at the same time in building these worthwhile projects as a matter of national defense. I do not know whether or not there is such coordination, but I hope there will be, because in that way we would get more for our money than in any other way that it could be spent in Puerto Rico.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am glad to have that statement made, because I am prepared to say, from personal observation, that at every point in the United States, in Puerto Rico, and in Panama, where the War Department is making expansion, relief labor is being used. Many of the millions of dollars we have appropriated for relief purposes have been allocated to the War Department, and, in turn, the War Department is using those funds for relief purposes among the people of the respective areas who must have work. That is especially true in Puerto Rico.

At Borinquen, a point on the other end of Puerto Rico, literally thousands of men are building a large air base. So the very thing suggested by the Senator from Maryland is being done; and I approve of that policy.

Mr. President, before I return to the immediate question involved, there are one or two observations I desire to make to clear up some uncertainties that were left from the debate on a former day. I made the statement 2 days ago that production of our new modern rifle was at the rate of 100 per day. My statement was challenged. I did not at that time have my authority; I did not know that I would have occasion to use it. I now desire to place in the RECORD a few sentences from a letter received from the commandant of the United States armory located at Springfield, Mass., which is the only place where a single rifle of the kind referred to has been made and the only place where such rifles are being made, notwithstanding the fact that we have let a contract to the Winchester Arms Co. to make 65,000 of these rifles. The rifles to be manufactured by the Winchester Arms Co. will not be delivered for 2 years. That company has not made a single rifle and they cannot make a single rifle until they get the necessary tools. Orders have been placed for the tools but all the tools have not been delivered; they will not be delivered for probably a year, and the company cannot make a single rifle until they have the proper tools. After a factory contracts to make a rifle of this character, it takes them from a year to 14 months to secure the tools. The Winchester Co. does not now have the tools, it has not built and assembled a single rifle, and does not have to deliver the rifles for 2 years. So the only place where the new rifles have been made, and the only place where they are being made, is in the armory owned by the United States and located at Springfield, Mass. Colonel Stewart, the commandant of that armory, is in full command there. I asked him to send me information about the production of these rifles, and I now read a few sentences from his letter. The letter is dated Springfield Armory, Springfield, Mass., January 8, 1940. On the first page this sentence is found:

The current assembly is at the rate of 100 rifles per day, and within a few weeks the assembly will be increased to 200 rifles per day.

I submit this quotation in corroboration of my statement on a former occasion that the assembly now is only 100 rifles a day. They work 5 days a week; so 500 rifles are produced each week. With 4 weeks to a month, 2,000 rifles are produced each month, and at that rate there will be produced 24,000 rifles a year. That would be less than 100,000 rifles in 4 years. So, on this basis, we would have to wait 40 years in order to get a sufficient number of the rifles to equip an army of a million men. We have now in the Military Establishment in various branches almost a million men. They are not all in the Army, and not all would use these rifles, but we have many hundreds of thousands of men who should have these rifles. The Regular soldiers should have them; the National Guard should have them; the marines should have them.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am glad to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I will ask the Senator whether he has information to advise us whether it is contemplated that the new rifles shall supplant the rifles with which the Army is now equipped?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes. The old Enfield rifle was a good rifle in its day; it was used back in the Spanish-American War. Then we had the Krag-Jorgensen rifle, the finest in its day, used in the Filipino Insurrection. Then we had the Springfield rifle, which was used in the World War, the finest rifle up to that time. We still have those old rifles; we are not devoid of rifles; we still have a good rifle; but it is not so good a rifle as a possible enemy might confront us with. The new rifle is an automatic rifle. It weighs just a few ounces more than an ordinary Army rifle, the kind we have had all these years. The old rifle would shoot but once, then the soldier would have to open the block, put in a shell, close the block, fire the gun, open the block, put in another shell, close the block and shoot. The new rifle is an automatic rifle. The cartridges come in clips of eight. A soldier can slip a clip into this gun, pull the trigger eight times; the shells fly out, then the clip flies out, and then he can put in another clip, and so on, indefinitely. With the new rifle an expert can shoot more than 30 times a minute. With this rifle one competent rifleman is equivalent to four or five as good riflemen with the old rifle.

The question is, If we are going to have an army, if we are going to have a navy, why not equip the Army and Navy with the best ammunition and the best guns that the mind and hand of men can devise? This issue does not come before the Senate at this time, but later on I shall ask the Senate to consider the proposal to speed up the production of the new, modern, efficient semiautomatic rifle. That question, however, I repeat, is not involved in the matter now before the Senate.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. For the purpose of securing information, I ask the Senator if it is contemplated that the new rifle will be universally used in regiments of infantry; that all infantry soldiers will use them, or is it contemplated that merely a group here and there in the Army shall use them?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is my understanding that our entire Army is to be equipped with this new rifle.

I think as fast as the new rifles can be produced all our soldiers, the Infantry, Cavalry, and the Marines, and all other members of the military and naval forces who need and use rifles, should be supplied with the new rifle. I say that it is the policy of the Government to produce these rifles as fast as the Congress will appropriate the money to make them. The money is necessary to pay the workers. Even though we make the rifles in our own plant on our own ground, the laboring men must be paid and the materials out of which the rifles are made must be paid for. The Government armory cannot make these rifles faster than the Congress will appropriate money to pay the men and to buy the materials.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to ask the Senator whether it is not his opinion that the least we can do is to keep on hand and available the equipment that would be necessary and sufficient to put into the field immediately the minimum military force that our military authorities might expect us to mobilize and put in the field within a given time?

Let us suppose that there might be in the minds of the military authorities a schedule of having, we will say, 250,000 men who might be ready in 30 days, and another 250,000 men who might be ready in another 30 days. It seems to me it is consistent with the attitude that should characterize the action of a democracy not to call the men themselves actually into the service until they are imperatively required; but it seems to me the least we could do would be to have the equipment available, so that the only question would be, in time of war, how rapidly the men should be called in, and how rapidly they could be effectively mobilized.

Out of consciousness that it is a matter affecting our national defense, I hesitate to ask the Senator how many men the United States could immediately put into the field with all necessary modern equipment, according to the standards of a modern army; but I should like to have an intimation from the Senator as to whether it would be a large or a small force.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, so far as the infantry is concerned, we could not equip more men than we have made guns to date; and that is not in excess of 25,000, hence we could not put into the field today more than that number equipped with these modern guns.

I thank the Senator from Florida. I share his viewpoint. It is exactly the same as mine.

Mr. President, today we are enlisting men in the United States Army at a faster rate than we are making these new rifles.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. While it is true that only a small number of the new rifles have been completed, the arsenal is at work on them now at the rate of about 100 a day, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is the present assembly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The present assembly. In addition, we have about 1,800,000 Springfield rifles, which are as good as any other rifles in the world, and we have some six or seven hundred thousand Enfield rifles, which are very excellent rifles.

We have 227,000 men in the standing Army today, and the number will be increased to 243,000 in a short time—within 30 days—I imagine. We also have about the same number of members of the National Guard, who could be put into service very readily. Under the present arrangement we certainly have enough rifles so that not more than 22,000 of the new rifles are required at present, in my judgment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I appreciate the statement made by the Senator from Tennessee. It is obvious that we are in better condition today than we were 20 years ago. Twenty years ago we called the boys to the colors; and when they came to the camps there were no guns for them and no ammunition, and they were forced to drill, so I am advised, with sticks for guns.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. A moment ago the Senator spoke about his desire to clear up some uncertainties. I do not want to embarrass the Senator at all, or embarrass the War Department; but I should like at this time to call attention to the last military appropriation act, which was approved on April 3, 1939; and I should like to quote section 4 of that act.

It reads:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion and under rules, regulations, and limitations to be prescribed by him, to lend to accredited civilian aviation schools, one or more of which shall be designated by the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the training of any Negro air pilot, at which personnel of the Military Establishment are pursuing a course of education and training pursuant to detail thereto under competent orders of the War Department, out of aircraft, aircraft parts, aeronautical equipment and accessories for the Air Corps, on hand and belonging to the Government, such articles as may appear to be required for instruction, training, and maintenance purposes.

The Senator recalls that I offered an amendment on the floor of the Senate to provide facilities for training Negro aviators; and under the able New Deal leadership on the other side, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] offered a substitute which was approximately my amendment, which was carried, and provided for training Negro aviators. From information which has come to my attention I find that that provision of law has not been carried out; and to complete my statement, and in view of the question, I should like to read a letter written to Mr. Frank S. Reed, Jr., 5933 Lafayette Avenue, Chicago, Ill., under date of September 23, 1939:

DEAR SIR: With reference to your application for appointment as a flying cadet, you are informed that the War Department has taken final action on your application and that your transcript of college credits and other supporting papers have been returned to this headquarters with the statement that inasmuch as there are no units composed of colored men in the Air Corps at the present time, no provision has been made for their flying training, and, therefore, the War Department can take no further action with a view to giving you flying training at this time.

Your transcript of college credits and other papers which accompanied your application are returned herewith.

It is regretted that the nonexistence of a colored Air Corps unit to which you could be assigned in the event of completion of flying training precludes your training to become a military pilot at this time.

Very truly yours,

J. G. BRACKINRIDGE,
Major, A. G. D.

I think that is rather a serious thing. I am in sympathy with these appropriations and the general purpose of this bill for national defense; but I should like to have it a matter of official record that that law was passed. It was passed, I assume, by Congress in good faith to provide training for the colored men of this country who desire to participate and secure training as aviators in the United States Army; and apparently the law today has been ignored. I should like to ask the Senator if he is aware of that fact, and, in going forward with this new military bill, what we shall have to do to secure action under the existing law; whether we shall have to reenact the present statute, or just what we shall have to do.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, many things go on of which the Senator from Oklahoma is not aware. I wish to reiterate what I said on a former occasion, that in the tour of our committee through the country we found one large fort devoted entirely to training colored soldiers. This group of colored soldiers passed in review before our committee. As stated on that former occasion, I have seen many reviews, and we saw many reviews throughout the United States; but the colored detachment at this fort located in southern Arizona put on the best review I have ever seen.

They were in perfect step. It seemed that they worked by machine. Every member of our delegation complimented upon the perfect marching of these colored soldiers.

As to the particular point raised by the Senator from New Hampshire, I am not advised. It is not within our purview. We are under no responsibility to administer these laws. That responsibility falls on another branch of the Government. If the other branch of the Government has been amiss in carrying out the instructions of Congress, of course the responsibility is upon that branch.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator believe we should go forward with new measures if previous laws which we have passed, which directly authorize the Government to provide the Negroes of this country facilities for aviation training, have been ignored? I mean, ought we not to get at the bottom of this thing before we proceed to enact new legislation, if existing legislation, now on the statute books, has been ignored?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, personally I do not presume to be speaking for the administrative branch of the Government. We have our responsibility to adopt policies and provide the money to carry out those policies. Then it is up to the executive branch of the Government to administer the policies with the money that is made available.

Mr. BRIDGES. Congress having passed a law to provide training for Negro aviators, has the Senator any suggestion as to just how Congress would go about seeing that the law is carried out?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will leave that to the Senator who asked the question. Personally, I will say to the Senator that I am sure we have in this country many colored youngsters who would make good aviators. They would do well at any point at which they might be permitted to serve. They would make good on the ground. They would make good mechanics. They would make good pilots. I may say still further, however, that the places for recruiting soldiers are flooded with all kinds of applicants; and I wish to compliment the personnel of our military establishments, because we had a chance to see them at work. We found, wherever we went, that the youngsters desiring to enlist in the Army as a rule were high-school graduates; many of them had been to college; some were college graduates; yet they are willing and anxious to enlist in the Army of the United States.

Mr. President, the Army is becoming a highly efficient organization. It is a highly scientific organization. If anyone had the time to spend and inspected the exhibit at Bolling Field the past few days, no doubt he was edified and gratified to see there the component parts which go into the making of an airplane. I had no idea that there were so many parts to an airplane. When we look at an airplane all we see is a slick outside surface, and we do not think that the inside of that plane contains so many parts; but I am advised that to make one of the larger airplanes it takes about 45,000 parts. These parts of course are of various kinds and characters. From the outside the parts are not discernible, but when we go and look at the inside of an airplane, look at the engine, look into the control room, and at the various parts of the plane, we find that it is a mass of intricate parts. I presume they are necessary. If they were not necessary they would be eliminated.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I agree with everything the Senator has said about the efficiency of the War Department. I think it is one of the best departments of the Government, and I think it is well administered, and I am in general sympathy with the pending bill and in general sympathy with the defense program. But I do desire to point out, and I do want it very definitely understood, that for some reason or other the act of Congress relating to the training of colored aviators has been ignored, and I think the War Department should have its attention called to that matter and that Congress should have some word as to why the administration here in Washington, headed by President Roosevelt, who claims to be so interested in these matters, has ignored the colored people of the country in that particular matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to read now one or two additional sentences from the letter from Colonel Stewart, in charge of the Springfield Armory. The question was asked as to whether or not the production of the rifles referred to could be speeded up, and this is the reply from the colonel:

It is possible and practicable to speed the production of rifles beyond the figure of 200 per day. This can be done by running the present layout on a 24-hour basis, in which case a production of four to five hundred per day could be reached in 5 to 6 months. This would require appropriations by the present Congress for about 125,000 rifles. Secondly, the plant production can be increased from 200 per 8-hour day to 400 per 8-hour day. To do this will require the following estimated amounts—

Then he gives an itemization of the necessary equipment which must be had in order to increase production to the figures mentioned. I think perhaps the Record should show this:

a. For a new factory building, 562 by 172 feet, for which space is available.....	$500,000
b. For increased fire facilities.....	90,000
c. For new equipment and tooling.....	2,191,710
d. For a gage building and laboratory.....	91,000

I read further from the letter:

In addition to the foregoing, it would be very desirable to provide for the modernization of the equipment now installed in the present jobbing shop at an estimated cost of $894,700. With these facilities provided for by appropriation of funds, the production could be increased to 400 per 8-hour day.

The time required to purchase and install the required building and equipment and to get into production on the basis of 400 rifles per 8-hour day would be about 1 year, provided that deliveries on essential equipment are not unduly delayed and are not slower than has been shown by our recent experience.

Another sentence:

This project will, of course, call for an increased appropriation for the manufacture of the rifles called for by the added production facilities. The cost of such rifles is estimated to be $80 each.

Mr. President, even with all that outlay, these new rifles would cost an estimated amount of $80 per rifle, but, as suggested on a former occasion, a contract has been let for 65,000 rifles at an estimated cost of $120 a rifle. So, after all, if we are to make a million rifles, or some such number, it would be in the interest of efficiency and the saving of money to expand our own equipment at Springfield Armory so that we could make these rifles more rapidly and thus equip our soldiers more speedily.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. Is there anything in the letter which it would not be well to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD? I ask the Senator whether he will not offer for printing in the RECORD the entire letter?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the War Department does have military secrets, as I have discovered, but I cannot conceive of information of this kind being a military secret. It is current information that we have produced only about 22,000 or 23,000 of these rifles. It is current information that we are making only about a hundred a day, and anyone can figure how long it would take to supply the Army. If we are to speed up production, it is going to take money to get the equipment. I know of no reason why the entire letter should not be placed in the RECORD, and I ask it be printed at this point in my remarks, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPRINGFIELD ARMORY,
Springfield, Mass., January 8, 1940.

HON. ELMER THOMAS,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: With reference to your telegram of January 6, the following is the situation at the Springfield Armory in regard to the production of semiautomatic rifles:

A year ago the armory was assembling rifles at the rate of 40 per 8-hour day, using old machinery, mostly of World War vintage or older, with which it was then equipped. In the meantime, while still keeping up production, it was actively engaged in designing, purchasing, installing, and getting into production a new line of modern machine tools which would have the capacity of producing 200 rifles per 8-hour day. This work has now been almost completed, although there is still a number of gaps caused by our inability to get sufficiently prompt delivery on all of the numerous machines, tools, dies, jigs, fixtures, and gages involved.

The current assembly is at the rate of 100 rifles per day, and within a few weeks the assembly will be increased to 200 rifles per day.

It is possible and practicable to speed the production of rifle beyond the figure of 200 per day. This can be done by running the present lay-out on a 24-hour basis, in which case a production of 400 to 500 per day could be reached in 5 to 6 months. This would require appropriations by the present Congress for about 125,000 rifles. Secondly, the plant production can be increased from 200 per 8-hour day to 400 per 8-hour day. To do this will require the following estimated amounts:

a. For a new factory building, 562 feet by 172 feet, for which space is available.....	$500,000
b. For increased power facilities.....	90,000
c. For new equipment and tooling.....	2,191,710
d. For a gage building and laboratory.....	91,000

In addition to the foregoing, it would be very desirable to provide for the modernization of the equipment now installed in the present jobbing shop at an estimated cost of $894,700. With these facilities provided for by appropriation of funds, the production could be increased to 400 per 8-hour day.

The time required to purchase and install the required building and equipment and to get into production on the basis of 400 rifles per 8-hour day would be about 1 year, provided that deliveries on essential equipment are not unduly delayed and are not slower than has been shown by our recent experience.

This project will, of course, call for an increased appropriation for the manufacture of the rifles called for by the added production facilities. The cost of such rifles is estimated to be $80 each.

Very truly yours,

G. H. STEWART,

Colonel, Ordnance Department, Commanding.

Mr. GURNEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the particular amendment before the Senate of itself is of little consequence; it probably would not make any difference whether we bought this land now or later; but if the Army and the Government are to fortify San Juan as one of the places necessary for the protection of the Panama Canal, then this land must be had. The question is, first, as to the desirability of the purchase of the land. If it is not desirable that it be purchased, we should not purchase it, of course. If it is desirable, then the question is, What about the price? Is the price a fair one?

In view of this situation I desire at this point to exhibit to the Senate a map showing the Panama Canal and the West Indies. In my hurried preparation for the session this afternoon I could find only a very small map of Puerto Rico and the West Indies and the Panama Canal; but I exhibit this small map to the Senate.

I point out on the map, first, Florida to the north, extending down in a southerly direction almost to Cuba. Just south of Florida is the island of Cuba. To the east of Cuba there are Haiti and the Dominican Republic. To the east of that island is Puerto Rico, as I indicate on the map. Still east of that and south are the Virgin Islands. Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands belong to the United States.

To the west of this chain of islands known as the West Indies, first, we find Central America to the north and South America to the south, and at the narrowest point of the isthmus is the Panama Canal.

The main channels of trade by shipping going through the Panama Canal must follow one of a few lines. From the north the shipping line runs around the coast of Florida, over to the Gulf of Mexico, between Cuba and Central America, then south to the Panama Canal, as is shown by the first black line on the map.

The second line of shipping, which means shipping for all purposes, transportation of soldiers, the running of battleships, and what not, comes between Cuba and Haiti. It is possible for a large ship to go through that passageway straight into the Panama Canal.

The third line comes between Haiti and the Dominican Republic and Puerto Rico. Ships may go through that channel. Another line comes in south of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands and reaches Panama. Another line comes up from South America. But all the lines used by those who desire to pass through the Canal converge at the Panama Canal.

What places have we for defense of the Panama Canal outside of the Canal Zone? At the southern tip of Florida the Government is building a large airplane base at Tampa. It is for the special purpose of assembling there a large number of bombing planes, and to train the pilots to drop bombs from those planes to protect what might be called the strait, the water between Florida and Cuba. So we have at Tampa and Key West protective bases for the protection of the strait between Florida and Cuba.

Between Cuba and the Dominican Republic and Haiti we have a naval base, at the eastern end of Cuba. That is for the special purpose of protecting the passageway at that point. Then just across the channel between the Dominican Republic and Puerto Rico and on the northern end of Puerto Rico, at Point Borinquen, we are building a large airplane base which can serve the whole Caribbean area. That is for the protection of this passageway between Cuba and the Dominican Republic and Haiti, and likewise between that island and Puerto Rico.

At San Juan we are building a larger base for the general protection of the whole Caribbean area.

For the protection of the Pacific coast we have fortified the Hawaiian Islands, and not only as a protection to Alaska, not only as a protection to the western part of the United States, but also the Panama Canal.

On the Atlantic side the Government has decided to develop a naval and military base at San Juan for the protection of all these channels of trade, and likewise for the protection of the eastern approach to the Canal Zone.

The question is, Do we need to develop these bases for the protection of American interests, not only interests in America but in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands and Panama? I think it has been decided that we should develop these bases for our national defense. If that is not necessary, of course, we should not make this appropriation. If we should not develop these bases, then not only should we not make this appropriation but we should withdraw the Navy from San Juan, we should withdraw the Navy from the southern point of Cuba. Not only that, we should withdraw the Army from those points.

Mr. President, the question is as to whether or not this land can be had at a reasonable figure. Since last we met, I have made some investigation. I called the War Department and was referred to the Land Acquisition Division. I submit the following statements based upon information given me by the Land Acquisition Division of the War Department. I am advised that sugar land in Puerto Rico is worth from $300 to $500 an acre. I am advised that at Point Borinquen, which is the site for the aviation base at the north end of Puerto Rico, the Government paid over $100 an acre for 1,883 acres of land located upon a bench or plateau as the base for the airfield development.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am extremely interested in what the Senator has to say, particularly in view of the fact that he, as a member of the Military Affairs Committee of the United States, has but recently visited the West Indies. The point I am particularly interested in is the price of $400 an acre for sugar land in Puerto Rico. I wonder if the Senator has made an investigation of the price of land in Haiti and in the Dominican Republic in order that we might make a comparison of prices between sugar land in Haiti, the Dominican Republic, the Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am sorry, Mr. President, that I have not sought to acquire information relative to sugar lands in those areas. It would be valuable if we had the information. Limited time has confined my inquiries to Puerto Rico and to the United States. If the Senator will permit I will give the information I have received, and then we can perhaps get further information from some other Member of the Senate.

LXXXVI—43

At the point where they are building the large aviation base in northern Puerto Rico it will be necessary to acquire 800 acres of additional land. I saw the site myself. The soil is very shallow at the point where they are building the runways. Underneath the soil is a sort of white coral formation. This white coral formation is not solid rock, but it is the next thing to being solid rock. They are scraping the dirt off the top and when they fill up the ravine they will have a perfect runway there. It is not thought that they will have to put in hard surfacing on the runway because it is believed to be almost like rock, and the surface will be in fine shape for a runway. We landed on it ourselves, and I saw it first hand.

On the additional land wanted, however, is a sugar plantation, and the Department will probably recommend that we acquire 800 acres of land adjacent to the land already owned for the purpose of a depot, and it is estimated that land will cost $275 an acre. That is 90 miles from San Juan. There is no town anywhere close to this land. It is upon a bench or plateau, 50 or 75 feet above the ocean. It is comparatively level. There is no town in sight. The land is now growing sugarcane. The estimated cost of this land needed at Point Borinquen is $275 per acre, or about $220,000 in all.

In addition to that information I called the Delegate from Puerto Rico. Unfortunately he was ill and I could not reach him, but I reached two other gentlemen in the city of Washington who claimed to be familiar with land values in Puerto Rico, and I shall give the Senate their statements for what they are worth.

I have here the statement of Francisco A. Lopez Dominguez. He is a native of Puerto Rico, born there and lived there all his life. Most of the time he has lived near San Juan. He was professor in the university in San Juan. Then later he was director of the agricultural extension station close to San Juan. So with that background I felt free to ask him questions about the cost and the value of land in San Juan, and here are some of his statements. I will not give them all because some of them are qualifying statements.

Sugarcane land varies in price in accordance with the quality of the land and in accordance with the location of the land, but it may be stated that ordinarily this land, this sugarcane land, is worth from $300 to $600 an acre. Some sales have been made for as much as $1,000 per acre. There may be some inferior sugarcane lands that may be had for $200 or $150, dependent on the location and the conditions, but this river-bottom land is worth from $300 to $600 per acre.

That is the statement of this native Puerto Rican, who was a teacher in the university, later on was in the cabinet, and was director of the agricultural experiment station, which should indicate that he had close contact with the agricultural interests and especially the soil of Puerto Rico.

Later on this same gentleman said:

But included in that area—

That means the area that we desire to acquire for addition to Fort Buchanan—

But included in that area is sugarcane land which is river-bottom land that would be worth $500 an acre and maybe $600. There may be another type of soil there that is good for sugarcane, but it would be of an inferior quality and would be worth probably $300 per acre.

Still quoting:

Now, there is land there that is not used for sugarcane, land upon which there is a dairy establishment, and the land would be worth $300 to $500 an acre.

That to me, of course, seems very high, but nevertheless that is his statement. I think he did not state in this transcript, but he stated to me either before or after this testimony was taken, that the present sugarcane owners in Puerto Rico have quotas, and those quotas cannot be increased. The fact that a quota exists for the production of sugarcane makes the land that now has sugarcane growing on it more valuable. How much more so I cannot say. But at the present time the sugarcane crop is almost ready for cutting. In another month or 6 weeks they will be cutting the cane in Puerto Rico. So the land is worth more now than it will be worth 2 months from now, because if you buy the land now and take possession of the land now you take possession of it with the sugarcane growing.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I inquire of the Senator if it is his opinion that if the sugar quota of Puerto Rico were reduced it would automatically, in line with his argument, reduce the value of the land?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the sugar quotas were reduced in Puerto Rico it would reduce the value of much of the sugarcane land, but such action would increase the value of the particular land remaining with a valid quota for the production of sugar.

Mr. REYNOLDS. But why would the possessors of any particular section of land be advantaged over others who own sections of land engaged in the growing of sugar if the sugar quota were reduced?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, Puerto Rico is an American possession. At least we exercise some sort of rule over that territory. So long as we do we must be at least humane toward the people who live in Puerto Rico. Sugar is the main crop produced on the island, hence we must be fair and just to those people and afford them a chance to exist. If we are not willing to do this then we should give Puerto Rico its freedom exactly as we did Cuba and are now doing to the Philippines.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I simply wish to observe that the figures as to the price of sugar land in Puerto Rico indicate that the sugar industry in Puerto Rico is a profitable industry, and it does not quite correspond with the statement which some of the representatives of Puerto Rico make when sugar legislation is under consideration. I am glad to have these figures in the RECORD, because we will soon have sugar legislation under consideration, and when representatives of the sugar people come before us with statements of their distressed condition we may remind them of these figures.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, it is obvious to anyone who will visit Puerto Rico that these better lands are held by a relatively few people. They are not all American citizens, I will say. The natives as a rule are not able to own these sugar lands.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, has the War Department made a recommendation, in addition to the actual physical acquisition of the land, with respect to the price?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, General Daley, in charge of the military establishments in Puerto Rico, who has all this under his control, sent in a telegram on the 5th of December last, and it is in the RECORD of our last session; and if I remember correctly, he reports that this land can be bought for $320 an acre.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Three hundred and twenty dollars an acre?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes. That was as of December 5 last. Since that time it has been decided by the War Department not to acquire this land until after the sugar has been removed. The present sugar crop will be removed from the land in the next 6 weeks or 2 months. Should funds be made available, it is not actually proposed to take possession of this land until after the present sugar crop has been cut and removed. Such a policy may enable the land to be purchased at a lesser figure.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Do I understand that we can acquire the land for a purchase price of $320 an acre now?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; as of December 5 last.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And then when they have brought about the removal of the sugarcane from the acres of actual production the value of the cane would be taken off of the $320.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is my understanding.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I want the Senator to understand that I am not trying to pick a quarrel about this matter. As a member of the Military Affairs Committee, I did not have the opportunity to visit the island, as did the Senator. Knowing the Senator as I do, and knowing his great interest in national defense, I should like to ask the Senator, with his knowledge of real estate and his knowledge of military affairs, he having actually been upon that land and seen the land, whether or not it is the Senator's personal opinion, as well as his official opinion, that we ought to acquire the land. I am dependent upon the Senator's recommendation. I happen to have had the honor of serving on the Military Affairs Committee with the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall answer that question somewhat at length.

Heretofore the Government, acting through the War Department, has actually established a fort at San Juan. It is called Fort Buchanan. This particular fort embraces about 286 acres of land. The land desired to be acquired is immediately adjacent to Fort Buchanan. So if we acquire the land desired, it will all become one compact tract. It is the only land adjacent to Fort Buchanan which is suitable; and I am advised—and I think correctly—that there is no other land adjacent to San Juan that is nearly so suitable for this purpose as is the proposed land. If we should go somewhere else to acquire land for the proposed depot, cantonment, airport, magazine, or arsenal we should have to abandon Fort Buchanan, and I am advised that there is no other place available which could be bought for anything like the amount of money this land could be bought for; and there is no other land available that is so well adapted to the purpose as is the land under consideration, for three reasons:

First. A railroad runs to and through this land. So far as I know, there is only one railroad in Puerto Rico. That is the railroad which runs up and down the coast on the east side of the island. The railroad goes to Fort Buchanan, and either into or immediately adjacent to the land desired to be acquired. That is reason No. 1.

Reason No. 2. There is a good road to this land. There is a hard-surfaced road from San Juan to Fort Buchanan, and Fort Buchanan is immediately adjacent to this land. So we have not only a railroad already in operation to the land but also a good, hard-surfaced road from San Juan to the land.

Reason No. 3. Either on this land or immediately adjacent thereto is a limestone quarry affording rock in the first instance. Secondly, at this quarry is an existing, operating cement plant. In the construction of an Army post, depot, or magazine the Government must have not only rock but also cement. There are both limestone and cement either on the land or immediately adjacent to it. At some points we have found the Government hauling sand and gravel 50 or 75 miles to build military establishments.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I merely wish to ascertain whether or not my information is correct, as gathered from the statement heretofore made by the able Senator from Oklahoma, that the average price of sugar-producing land in Puerto Rico is between $400 and $500 an acre.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The information I have is that the price varies according to location. At some points it runs as low as $150 an acre, and in some places sugar-producing land sells for as much as $1,000 an acre. So the average should be in the range from $300 to $500.

Mr. McNARY. Is it not true that the values are based somewhat upon the quotas permitted in the matter of importation of sugar into this country?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That must be so.

Mr. McNARY. The sugar-beet producers in this country, the value of whose land is not at all comparable to the values mentioned, have complained about foreign quotas. I think they have a just complaint. If it is now said to us that sugar land in Puerto Rico is worth between $400 and $500 an acre I think we could well reduce the sugar quota, because it is away out of line with the value of lands in this country which produce the same food product.

I think the Senator has made a very great contribution. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator in yielding.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I thank the Senator from Oregon. In reply to his suggestion, I will say that earlier in the day I inquired of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], as to the value of sugar-producing lands in the United States. The Senator from Utah is not present; but I will make the statement, subject to correction, that sugar-beet land adjacent to a sugar mill is worth approximately $250 an acre. I refer to the better land.

The Senator from Florida is not present. I asked him about sugar land in Florida, and Florida has some of the finest sugar land I have ever seen. If I do not misquote him, he stated that the better land sold for approximately the same price; that is, $250 per acre.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] is now in the Chamber. I now ask him the same question. How much is the better sugar land in Louisiana worth? I refer to land close to the mills.

Mr. ELLENDER. From $100 to $150 an acre.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. So there is a wide range in the cost of sugar land, even in the United States.

Mr. ELLENDER. I will add that the average price of much so-called sugar land is as low as $50, depending upon the proximity of the land to the mill.

I should like to ask the Senator a question, if he will yield. I understood the Senator to say, day before yesterday, that in the tract under consideration 200 or 300 acres are now planted in sugar cane. Am I correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Something like that.

Mr. ELLENDER. And that the rest of it is pasture land.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. And that the sugarcane land must be irrigated.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is not correct. The sugarcane land on one side of the island does have to be irrigated, because there is little rainfall. However, on the other side, on the San Juan side, there is ample rainfall to produce sugarcane without irrigation.

Mr. President, I shall occupy the time of the Senate for only a few moments longer. Quoting still further from the native Puerto Rican who was a professor in the college and director of an agricultural experiment station, I asked him the direct question:

Q. This tract is reported to be worth from $320 to $400 per acre. Do you regard that as an excessive cost?

A. I do not think so. That same type of land in another location would be less, but right there it is worth that money. If you were to assess it for its strictly agricultural value outside of San Juan, the price would be less, but where it is located that price is not excessive.

Mr. President, confirming the statement made by the director of the agricultural experiment station in Puerto Rico, I had occasion to interview another gentleman, and I shall read some statements from the information given me.

This statement is from Mr. J. A. Dickey. He states that he went to Puerto Rico in 1929 as an expert in agriculture, as a member of the staff of the Brookings Institution. The institution was conducting a survey of the economics of the island. I asked him how long he remained in Puerto Rico. He said he spent 6 months on the island in intensive study. I asked him if he had been back recently. His reply was:

Have been back in some capacity for the Government at least once a year, or in a private capacity at least once a year, all of which had to do with agriculture.

I desire to read one or two sentences from his statement:

Any land that will grow good sugarcane is valued from $300 to $1,000 per acre. We know of actual transactions of land in sugarcane that sold as high as $1,000 per acre where there was no irrigation.

Then I asked him what irrigated sugar land was worth. He said:

About the same. It happens to be land where there is rain and it does not need irrigation. There is rain on the north side. That $1,000 land was sold about 10 years ago or more.

Then I asked him:

Has cane land increased or decreased in value?

His answer was:

The island has become more dependent on sugarcane as time goes on, and as a result the land has become more valuable. Since the island depends almost entirely for its livelihood on sugarcane, it is but natural that any land suitable for sugarcane would be high in value.

Quoting further from the statement of Mr. Dickey:

Q. Please state, if you will, the accessibility of this proposed tract of land to transportation, such as, first, railroads; second, wagon road; and, third, water transportation.

A. The property has a railroad running right by it. Right by the camp.

Q. You mean Fort Buchanan?

A. Yes.

Q. This land is adjacent?

A. Yes; and it has a hard-surfaced highway running to and through the land to Fort Buchanan.

Mr. President, I think the issue has been sufficiently drawn. So far as I am concerned, it is simply a question of whether or not the Senate desires to fortify San Juan as one of our main bases for the protection of the West Indies, the United States, and the Panama Canal. If we want to do that, it will be necessary to buy some land on which to keep our soldiers. If we do not want to do it, of course, we will not, and we can bring the soldiers out, because they are living there in tents. To date we have spent comparatively little money in San Juan; but we now have several hundred of our people down there, and I think probably about 2,000 soldiers.

So I submit the issue, that the committee amendment should not be agreed to, and that the Senate should cooperate with the House of Representatives and make available $200,000 with which to buy land upon which to build the proposed airport, general depot, and cantonment for the soldiers at San Juan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 7, beginning in line 21.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I gather from the remarks of the Senator from Oklahoma that the conclusion is that there is no money provided in the pending bill for Puerto Rico; that we have entirely stripped the bill of any benefits for Puerto Rico. In the paragraph preceding the one in which the provision sought to be stricken out appears there is an item of $319,000 for Puerto Rico. From the statement of the House committee it appears that $945,000 are estimated for the purpose of temporary construction in Puerto Rico. There is a very liberal appropriation in this bill for Puerto Rico. We are taking out an item for the purchase of land. The committee was impressed with the fact that the price for the land is extravagant. We have been told by the able Senator from Oklahoma that if we wait a little while the sugar crop will be harvested and we can buy the land for less. If the Senate will strike out this item from the bill, we will be sure of waiting for a little while. There is no emergency about it and I think the committee's effort to hold expenditures down a little should meet the approval of the Senate.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in the concluding remarks of my distinguished friend from the State of Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] he stated it was a question whether or not we were desirous of fortifying the West Indies, that is to say, strengthening our outpost at San Juan in Puerto Rico. Insofar as this particular argument is concerned, it is my feeling that it is not a question of whether or not we are desirous of strengthening our national defense at one of our outposts, that in Puerto Rico; but, as I believe all Senators will agree, the issue is one that relates exclusively to whether or not we shall acquire a certain tract of land at the price at which it has been offered, therefore evolving into the question whether or not we shall accept the committee amendment, which would bring about a reduction of the appropriation.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I may say that no possible harm could be done by accepting the amendment of the committee for the reason that the general appropriation bill will come before the committee, I imagine, within 30 days, or 60 days at the outside. At that time, all the facts may be ascertained, and if it should develop that the land in question is the only land in Puerto Rico which is suitable and available for the particular purpose and that we will have to buy it in order to carry out the plans of the Army, the purchase could then be made. The only trouble is that the Army officers have not as yet given us the information that is absolutely necessary. The idea of paying $400 an acre for 800 acres of land—

Mr. REYNOLDS. My understanding is that the price is $320 an acre.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; $400 an acre. The record shows that to be unquestioned.

Mr. REYNOLDS. May I be pardoned for making an inquiry of the Senator from Oklahoma? Will he state what the figures are with reference to the proposed payment for the land an acre?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will state that a telegram from General Daley, in command of the Military Establishment at Puerto Rico, under date of December 5, gave the estimated cost, as I recall, of $320 per acre.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is some help. It shows that the action of the committee has not been in vain to that extent. The testimony of the Army officers is that of the 800 acres of land some 40 percent is tillable, 35 percent is pasture land, and 20 percent is land which, because of its very rugged character, cannot be used for any purpose, and so it is called waste land in the testimony. The proposal to pay a price of $400 an acre for three kinds of land in Puerto Rico when we have to buy all, apparently, in order to get what can be used, and when we know the conditions which exist there seems at least to be somewhat unusual, and our committee, in looking after the interests of the Government and the interests of the Army, would like to have a little more time to go into it. We can secure the time by adopting the amendment and letting the matter go over to the general appropriation bill, which will be taken up by the committee within the next 60 days at the outside and, I imagine, within the next 30 days.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield for a suggestion?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the view of the Army as to what is proposed to be paid for this land was made very clear in the request which was made for the appropriation. They asked for $320,000, or $400 an acre. The House cut the amount to $200,000. Now, if we put it on the basis of $320 per acre instead of $400 an acre, it would still take $256,000. That is, $200,000 would not buy the 800 acres at either of these figures.

It seems to me that we are drifting as to the value of the land, and that there is no haste about it, and no injury to the national defense would come by adopting the amendment. Such action would not close the matter, because the conference committee will meet, and there will still be an opportunity to discuss the matter with the House conferees, and perhaps in the light of further information—

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in pursuance of what I was about to say, I wish to repeat that it is not a question of whether or not we are desirous of fortifying and refortifying or strengthening our outposts for the purpose of national defense in the Caribbean or elsewhere. We are all agreed that we are desirous of providing for ourselves an adequate national defense, whether it be by the upbuilding and development of our armed forces within the bounds of continental United States or in our possessions.

It is quite true, as evidenced, as we observe, and as we knew heretofore as the result of the very well prepared maps exhibited by my distinguished and able colleague from Oklahoma, that in order to protect our vital military interests in Panama, particularly in the zone which we occupy, we should have adequate fortifications in the Caribbean; that we should build up those fortifications and strengthen them in various spheres in the Caribbean where we have interests, particularly in the three main Virgin Islands, and at San Juan, and Fort Buchanan, in Puerto Rico.

I may add, in this connection, that, insofar as I am concerned, I want to see those fortifications strengthened, and

I would that we could perhaps acquire for fortifications some portion of land in the immediate proximity of the Dominican Republic, which is on one of the islands of the Caribbean, and whose capital is Trujillo. I mention that for the reason that former President Trujillo, of the Dominican Republic, during the last several years brought about the expenditure of several million dollars for dredging the port and making it available for ships drawing from 20 to 30 feet of water, according to the information I have.

Furthermore, in reference to our interests in the Caribbean, I wish we could go farther south, say, to Martinique, a French possession. As a matter of fact, I wish it were possible to go to Port of Spain, in Trinidad, because we need fortifications there, particularly because of the ships, perhaps enemy ships, coming up the South American coast between Port of Spain and smaller ports in the northern part of the Caribbean.

While I am provided the opportunity to speak about the outposts in the Caribbean, I wish to remind Members of this body who are interested as enthusiastically as I am in regard to the national defense that when we are talking about the fortification of our defenses in the Caribbean, all the time we are referring to the defenses in the southern Atlantic. I take this opportunity to remind the Senate of the fact that we have no outposts in the North Atlantic. The farthest north that we have friendly interests in the Atlantic is the Republic of Haiti, the capital of which is Port-au-Prince. I wish to repeat what I have stated upon the floor of this Chamber many times, that I would that it were possible for our friends across the sea, in liquidation of their obligations, to consent to convey to us some of their property in the Western Hemisphere, namely, Bermuda, which is only 500 miles directly east of the coast of North Carolina, the seaport and capital of which is Hamilton. Ninety-five percent of all the revenue that goes into the port of Hamilton comes out of the metropolitan section of the city of New York. If it should not be possible to make that acquisition, then I suggest that, possibly, by some form of barter or other equitable arrangement we could acquire in the North Atlantic the islands of Bimini and Nassau, which may be reached from Miami by the Pan American Airways within an hour's flight. They are almost in our backyard, and what we really need is some outpost in the North Atlantic.

In particular reference to the question before us, and the issue as to whether or not we shall agree to pay $320 an acre for that land, less the value of the sugar that is taken off each acre within 2 months from the present time, I am in agreement with the chairman of the subcommittee, the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], and the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I believe we have nothing to lose by letting this matter rest for a while, and accepting for the present the version of the Committee on Appropriations, which has this particular matter in hand. I think we will profit by so doing.

Mr. President, a moment ago I inquired of the junior Senator from Louisiana what was the price of fine sugar lands in Louisiana. As we know, Louisiana is the largest producer of cane, and of sugar made from sugarcane, of any State in the Union. He told me a moment ago, when he was here, that good, productive, fertile, black-soil sugar land could be bought in Louisiana for $100 an acre. It strikes me that $320 an acre is a high price to pay for an average run of land, as mentioned by the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] a moment ago when he advised the Senate that according to his interpretation of the matter this is an aggregation of waste land, sugar land, and grazing land. By way of comparison, in order that we may ascertain for ourselves about that, I do not believe land in Puerto Rico is going to advance any more rapidly than land is going to advance in the immediate vicinity of the Capitol under the dome of which we sit and talk at the present time.

By way of comparison, I desire to say that within 18 miles of the place where I now stand in the Senate Chamber fine grazing land can be bought for $25 an acre. I know of 1,200 acres that can be bought at $25 an acre within 30 minutes' safe drive from here by automobile, over an improved highway. I know of a great deal of land in Virginia and Maryland and in all of our Southern States and in the Northern States, too, that can be bought for that price. I think we should accept the recommendation of the committee on this matter, and I am sure the Senator from Oklahoma probably will not object if the matter shall go over for a few months, after which we may be able to buy the land at a smaller figure.

So far as the question of national defense is concerned, there is no hurry. We are talking about land in the Caribbean which is close to the possessions of Europe. The people in Europe are going to be engaged for a long, long time in the bloody war which they started. I do not know who started it, but whoever started it should be allowed to finish it. It is none of our business. They are not going to attack us; and after the war is over it will be a quarter of a century before any of them will be able to get back to the position of strength which they occupied before the beginning of the war. So, as for time, we have 25 years in which to develop our fortifications in the Caribbean. Therefore I respectfully suggest that we accept the recommendations of the committee and let it go at that, because we have a great deal of time in which to acquire this land; and as time goes on the land may become of less value, particularly if we reduce the quota of sugar from Puerto Rico so that perhaps some of the sugar-cane producers of the South and the beet-sugar producers of Colorado may raise the price of their land here in the United States, instead of maintaining the price of land in Puerto Rico. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] salutes me. I accept his salute. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I shall occupy just 1 other moment. I desire to place in the RECORD three excerpts from an article published in the magazine Current History for January 1940. The article is entitled "Military Strategy and Tactics," and is by Maj. Leonard Nason. Inasmuch as these three paragraphs are very short, I shall read them:

Perhaps you begin to wonder why soldiers did not predict this present war. They did predict it, and not only that, it was as inevitable as the running of a river to the sea; they predicted in print and in conversation the year it would break out.

And why didn't anyone hear about it? Because they wouldn't listen.

On page 17 of the magazine we find an illustration giving the relative number of men of military age of the various nations of the world. The illustration in this magazine article, prepared by Maj. Leonard Nason—a famous military writer—illustrates and shows that the United States has men of military age—meaning from 15 to 49 years of age—of a total number of 33,000,000. Germany and Italy, according to this illustration, have men of war age of a total number of 33,800,000. If this illustration is correct, the two nations of Germany and Italy together have more men of military age than has the United States. From this illustration we find that Great Britain and France have men of military age of the number of 22,000,000. We find that Japan has men of military age of the number of 15,900,000.

Then, Mr. President, I desire to read into the RECORD the last paragraph of this article:

In the last war this country lived in a dream world in which the horrible reality of the war in Europe was kept from it. By the time returning soldiers could get home to tell about it in any numbers it was over, and public opinion hurriedly buried reference to it, lest it find something in the tale of which to be ashamed.

Now, in facing another war, let us face the truth—that this one is a result of blind refusal to recognize planned aggression, of hysterical hope that the nations of Europe would not go to war, and the childlike trust that when Hitler and Stalin threatened the world with attack they did not mean it. Let us not, in the name of the countless thousands who died as a result of our unpreparedness in the last war, again shriek that we will not be involved in this one, and, like so many ostriches, plunge our heads back into the sand.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the yeas and nays may be had upon this amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, unanimous consent is not required to obtain the yeas and nays. There is a regular way of securing the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMATHERS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Hatch	Reed
Bailey	Davis	Hayden	Reynolds
Bankhead	Donahey	Herring	Schwartz
Barbour	Ellender	Holman	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Frazier	Holt	Shipstead
Brown	George	Johnson, Calif.	Smathers
Bulow	Gerry	Johnson, Colo.	Smith
Byrd	Gibson	King	Taft
Byrnes	Gillette	Lucas	Thomas, Okla.
Capper	Glass	Lundeen	Tobey
Chandler	Green	McKellar	Truman
Chavez	Guffey	McNary	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Gurney	Maloney	Wheeler
Connally	Harrison	Mead

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 7, line 21.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. CONNALLY. My colleague the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is absent because of illness.

Mr. MCKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BYRNES (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I am advised, however, that if present, the Senator from Maine would vote as I have voted, and I therefore permit my vote to stand.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] is absent because of illness.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] is detained from the Senate attending a hearing before the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives on the Norris-Sparkman tax replacement bill. He is paired on this question with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea" on the pending committee amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are members of the committee appointed to attend the funeral in Idaho of the late Senator Borah, and are, therefore, absent.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained in various Government departments.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is detained on official business for the Special Committee on Civil Liberties.

I announce the following general pairs: The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. McNARY. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] are detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—45

Adams	Danaher	Hayden	Reed
Bailey	Davis	Herring	Reynolds
Bankhead	Donahay	Holman	Shipstead
Barkley	Ellender	Holt	Smathers

Caraway	Miller	Radcliffe	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Minton	Russell	White
Downey	Murray	Sheppard	Wiley

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading, "Barracks and quarters and other buildings and utilities", on page 8, line 10, to strike out "$10,000,000" and insert "$9,500,000", so as to read:

For an additional amount for barracks and quarters and other buildings and utilities, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1940, including general overhead expenses of transportation, engineering, supplies, inspection, and supervision, $9,500,000.

RESTRICTION AND REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, my colleagues are aware that Senate bill 409, which bears my name, is listed on the current calendar of business as order No. 817. There are certain facts in regard to this bill which I desire to call to the attention of the Senate, before it is called up for consideration.

Senate bill 409 was reported to the Senate on July 11, 1939, with amendments, on behalf of the Committee on Immigration of the Senate. I may add that this bill is accompanied by a report, No. 757.

I am deeply appreciative of the fact that my colleagues on the Committee on Immigration of the Senate desired to show me the courtesy of attaching my name to Senate bill 409, although I am not a member of the committee, so that I might have what credit there may be, should this bill, as sponsored by the committee, be passed.

Unfortunately, Senate bill 409, as reported by the Committee on Immigration, is not merely a digest or compilation of the principles of legislation which I sponsored in Senate bills 407, 408, 409, 410, and 411, as a superficial examination might suggest, but embodies extraneous matter of a character which is repugnant to every view of the immigration and alien problem in the United States which I have expressed on this floor many times. For this reason, Mr. President, I wish at this time to avail myself of the opportunity to advise the Members of the Senate as to why I and some of my colleagues must oppose consideration of Senate bill 409, as it has been reported by the Committee on Immigration.

In the first place, regarding section 1 of Senate bill 409, instead of my proposal that all immigration into the United States be suspended for a period of 10 years, or until such time as the Department of Labor shall certify to Congress that unemployment in the United States does not exceed 3,000,000 persons, my colleagues on the Committee on Immigration have proposed an arbitrary suspension of 5 years, without regard to the extent of unemployment in the United States. This particular feature to which I refer, I may say to the Senate quite frankly, is not the really vital objection I have to the bill as reported by my colleagues.

In the second place, the provision of section 5 in Senate bill 409, as reported, involves other and very serious objections. Section 5 lifts to the status of nonquota immigrants a class of immigrants who are, under the existing quota act, only entitled to preference in consideration of their application for entry under the quota. In other words, this section raises or lifts a class of immigrants now entitled only to preference in their applications for quota visas to a position which exempts them from any numerical limitation on their entrance. It simply makes them nonquota immigrants. Let me emphasize the fact that section 5 abolishes all numerical limitation upon the entry of immigrants of this class. Under the present law—sections 4, 6, and 9 of the Immigration Act of 1924—a citizen of the United States is entitled to bring in his wife, or husband, as the case may be, or unmarried child under 21, as a nonquota immigrant; but section 5 of Senate bill 409 would grant these privileges to immigrants who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who have not become citizens. In other words, the noncitizen is placed on the basis with the citizen—and that being the case, there are 3,628,103 aliens here who under this section would be entitled to bring in their relatives as nonquota immigrants, without any limitation whatsoever upon their number. This, Mr. President, is a very serious matter. If we take as correct—which I do not concede—the official estimate of the number of aliens in the United States at the present time, including all immigrants legally or illegally in the country, the very latest official estimate of approximately 3,628,103 is so huge that it suggests possibilities of an immigration of relatives of persons here which would make a mockery of our policy of restricting immigration into the United States. I know it will be urged that under existing conditions the number of applications for the entry of relatives does not reach totals which should cause alarm; but, Mr. President, with the lid completely off, no numerical limitation being provided for, I cannot allow my name to be associated with the creation of a loophole in our immigration barriers which may utterly destroy the structure which has been laboriously built up by our predecessors.

I will say, in connection with section 5 of Senate bill 409, that later on in the course of my remarks I shall suggest a modification of section 1 of Senate bill 409, as reported by the Committee on Immigration, which should meet every legitimate aspiration of immigrants who have been lawfully admitted to the United States in years gone by for the reunion in this country of their families, from which they voluntarily separated themselves abroad for the purpose of coming to the United States.

In the third place, let me now turn to section 7 of the bill S. 409 as reported by the Committee on Immigration of the Senate. This section provides for an amendment to the seventh proviso of section 3 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (35 Stat. 875, U. S. C.), now on the statute books, which in my opinion has been the subject of flagrant misinterpretation of the intent of Congress when the basic act of 1917 was enacted.

Let us see what the seventh proviso permits. First as to facts upon which to base an example: It was stated by a former Commissioner of Immigration of this administration that there are 20,000 habitual alien criminals who are not subject to deportation, due to defects in our existing law. In addition to those 20,000 there are in the United States an unknown number of aliens who came here illegally. The latter class of aliens are deportable.

Example A: An alien enters the United States illegally. He remains here illegally for 7 years. By reason of his illegal entry he cannot become an American citizen.

Example B: An alien enters this country legally, and remains here legally for 7 years. While here he commits a crime for which he can be deported only if that crime involves a sentence of 1 year or more in jail and he was committed to prison within 5 years after entrance. With that bad record as an undesirable alien, his chance of becoming an American citizen is practically nil.

Under the seventh proviso, aliens belonging to examples A and B have been permitted by the Secretary of Labor to go to Canada, and from there lawfully to reenter this country. With this lawful reentry as their background, they obtain a clean slate for application for American citizenship, and they cannot be deported by reason of any previous violation of the immigration law.

Mr. President, when Congress enacted the seventh proviso of 1917 it certainly never intended an interpretation such as would permit the evasion of immigration laws enacted by it, which evasion is being practiced by the present Secretary of Labor. If the Senate desires specific information upon this particular evasion of the law, I respectfully direct attention to the hearings on the Department of State appropriation bill for 1939 (p. 46) and the Department of Labor appropriation bill for 1939 (p. 250).

As the committee has redrafted the seventh proviso in Senate bill 409, it would actually legalize the practice pursued by the Department of Labor for the past 6 years. In other words, according to the redraft of the seventh proviso by the committee, it would be possible for an alien who had been a resident of this country for a period of 7 years or more to reenter, although he were of a character or class ineligible to pass the existing requirements of admission as a new immigrant. On previous occasions I have pointed out that the Secretary of Labor has permitted a large number of criminal aliens, who were protected under the existing statutes from deportation by reason of their long residence in the United States, to go into Canada and return with a clean bill of health, thereby becoming eligible for citizenship. As I have previously stated, this redraft of the seventh proviso would legalize this practice. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, this redraft of the seventh proviso accentuates the vice of our existing statutes, under which many habitual alien criminals cannot be eliminated from our population once and for all.

In the fourth place, I am emphatically opposed to the enactment of Senate bill 409 in its present form because section 8 would grant discretionary authority practically to nullify the provisions of the bill suspending immigration into this country, if the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of State recommended that such a course be adopted. The wording of this section as drafted by the committee is not clear, but it is perfectly obvious that the Secretary of Labor, by reason of the fact that she is the agent for the transmission of petitions for entry, would hold a dominant position in determining the policy to be pursued. It will readily be appreciated that I must oppose the enactment of any legislation with any such delegation of authority to the executive branch of the Government.

In the fifth place, I am compelled to object to the passage of Senate bill 409 because the provision in section 11 relating to the registration of aliens would not apply to some of the very classes of entrants whose registration and definite identification is most vital. To explain my point: During the past few years we have had a large increase in so-called visitors who are given a visitor's permit or temporary visa. These are extendable. In this connection I need but state the fact that such visitors can change their names, take a few simple precautions, and they are forever lost to the authorities. This possibility should be prevented.

Another and significant shortcoming in this provision, as at present drafted in section 11 of S. 409, is that the lack of proof of identity effectively blocks deportation in many cases in which proof of origin is not otherwise obtainable. I suggest that my colleagues read what the Commissioner of Immigration has to say on page 98 of the report of the Secretary of Labor about the difficulties which have arisen in obtaining visas from the representatives of foreign nations in deportation cases. The Commissioner has only partially stated the case, because he fails to tell us that difficulties of identification, through the absence of any fingerprint registration system, facilitate the repudiation of aliens by the consuls of the nations from which the aliens obviously came.

In other words, foreign countries will not take back aliens whom we desire to deport because of lack of identification which cannot be challenged. If Mme. Perkins, our present Secretary of Labor, had not in 1933 revoked the order, then in force, that all aliens on entering the United States be fingerprinted, we should not today be confronted with this grave problem. I want to emphasize this fact because as the war situation becomes more acute more spies and saboteurs will be entering this country, and we cannot prove definite identification without fingerprints.

Finally, title 3 of Senate bill 409 provides for the admission of 20,000 refugee children from Germany or any territory under the de facto or de jure administration of Germany. The admission of 20,000 refugee children means the entrance of 20,000 potential job seekers, because they will eventually compete with our own boys and girls. Last year 750,000 boys and girls graduated from our high schools and colleges, and only one out of every three of these will be able to obtain work for the next several years; so why add to this burden by admitting more from foreign lands to compete with American youngsters who are vainly seeking employment? It simply is not fair to our own native-born and naturalized citizens. I have heretofore been against the admission of 20,000 refugee children from Germany outside the quota system, as proposed by the Wagner-Rogers resolution, and I shall continue to oppose such a proposal with my utmost vigor as long as I can possibly do so. This proposal has every vice which the Quota Act of 1924 was enacted to abolish.

It is a flagrant example of discriminatory legislation. It puts refugees from one nation in a status wholly different from that of refugees from any other country of the world. Congress passed the Quota Act of 1924 for the specific purpose of ending an extension of favors to any race or nation which had contributed to our population, and for the purpose of ending any discrimination against any nation which may have contributed to our population. I am going to fight this proposal to the very last ditch because I know that the great mass of the American people is emphatically opposed to the admission of any more immigrants into the United States, be they refugees or not refugees.

The Gallup poll on American public opinion is today generally regarded as authoritative. I suggest that Senators examine its figures on this question. Let me say, that definite and positive as it has been in indicating the opposition of the American people, I think its estimate of this opposition is conservative. My recollection is that this poll revealed that more than 87 percent opposed the admission of the 20,000 refugee children. So much for Senate bill 409, as reported.

Mr. President, with full appreciation of, and sympathy with, the humanitarian purposes of the members of the Committee on Immigration of this body, I will, as I have indicated, at the close of my remarks introduce a substitute measure for S. 409 which, in my opinion, will meet every legitimate aspiration of aliens who have heretofore been lawfully admitted; and, at the same time, will relieve the great mass of the American people, who believe in restriction upon immigration, of any anxiety that we will be flooded with foreigners at a time when some 23,000,000 or 24,000,000 people are either in receipt of salaries or relief from the Federal Government.

The measure which I propose involves merely a very minor amendment to section 1 of S. 409 as reported by the Committee on Immigration. The substitute reads as follows:

That upon the enactment of this act, except as hereinafter provided, no immigration visa shall be issued to any alien who is defined as a quota immigrant by the Immigration Act of 1924 and no quota immigrant shall be admitted to the United States for a period of 5 years, except an alien who is the husband, or wife, or the unmarried child of an immigrant who has been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence: Provided, however, That no visa shall be issued to such quota immigrant who has been married to an alien resident of the United States for the purpose of securing admission to the United States, and not for the purpose of continuous cohabitation in good faith as husband or wife: And provided further, That the admission of such quota alien into the United States shall be dependent upon full compliance with every other provision of the immigration laws of the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President—

Mr. REYNOLDS. If the Senator from Georgia will pardon me, I will yield to him in a moment or two.

Mr. President, it will be noted from the substitute measure, which I propose to introduce, that I have stricken out all the controversial matter embodied in Senate bill 409, as reported by the committee. I have done this in order to get immediate action on the noncontroversial matter in S. 409 as reported by the committee; nevertheless, I hope the committee will restudy my bills:

S. 407. To further reduce immigration, to authorize the exclusion of any alien whose entry into the United States is inimical to the public interest, to prohibit the separation of families through the entry of aliens leaving dependents abroad, and for other purposes.

S. 408. To provide for the national defense by the registration and fingerprinting of aliens in the United States, and for other purposes.

S. 409. To protect American labor and stimulate the employment of American citizens on American jobs by restricting immigration for the next 10 years.

S. 410. To provide for the deportation of aliens subsisting on relief under certain circumstances.

S. 411. To provide for the deportation of aliens inimical to the public interest.

In conclusion, I earnestly and respectfully urge upon my colleagues who are members of the Committee on Immigration of the Senate to report promptly the substitute bill in regard to which we can have no difference of opinion, because it merely suspends new immigration of persons who have no claims upon any alien lawfully admitted to the United States. The substitute simply upholds the basic principle of numerical restriction upon immigration into the United States under the quotas, as provided for by the act of 1924, with broad humanitarian consideration for aliens of good standing now in this country.

I now introduce and send to the desk my proposed substitute bill for proper reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3201) prohibiting the issuance of immigration visas to quota immigrants, restricting the admission of aliens, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President—

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am happy to yield to my distinguished colleague, the able senior Senator from my sister State of Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question, because he has obviously made a very careful analysis of the bill reported by the committee to which, I believe, he refers as Senate bill 409.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask the Senator from North Carolina if Senate bill 409 in any wise affects or destroys the quota system as established in the act of 1924?

Mr. REYNOLDS. It does, indeed. As a matter of fact, it weakens our immigration laws considerably.

Mr. GEORGE. Does it undertake after the period of 5 years or the limited period during which immigration is cut down to restore a basis other than the quota system?

Mr. REYNOLDS. As a matter of fact, as I have said, it weakens tremendously our present immigration laws in challenging of the seventh proviso. At the present time an alien in this country who has entered legally has the right to bring in under the quota a husband or a wife, as the case may be, or an unmarried child under 21 years of age. If Senate bill 409 were enacted, it would have the effect of putting aliens who arrive illegally in the same status as aliens in this country who arrived legally, or in the same status as citizens of the country who are entitled to bring in their relatives from abroad.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator. Does the bill as reported in any wise affect the national origins theory carried in the act of 1924?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not in any direct particular case. I will say to the Senator that I was extremely anxious to bring about at the last session of the Congress legislation that would provide for the registration and fingerprinting of aliens. I am more interested in doing that now, as are about 80 percent of the American people, for the reason that it has been revealed to us that today our country is honeycombed with saboteurs and spies. For years in this body I have been saying, as the Senator will recall, that we must put some restriction upon the activities of alien visitors, because if ever the time comes when we may be involved in war we will have thousands upon thousands of cases of sabotage and of espionage. No action has been taken; but my position has been vindicated 100 percent, I am happy to say, and my friends in North Carolina are happy to learn.

In that vindication I now desire to pay my respects to J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, who advised me officially that prior to 1938 his division of the Department of Justice received only 50 or 70 or perhaps 100 complaints of espionage and sabotage in the United States, but from the time the war was declared at 12 o'clock on September 3, 1939, by France, and at 5 o'clock on September 3, 1939, by Great Britain, up until January 10, 1940, his department received about 5,000 complaints of espionage and sabotage in this country. The appalling thing of interest to Members of the Senate, who are eager to protect American industries and citizens, is that within the past month it was revealed to me by Mr. Hoover that complaints are arriving in his bureau at the rate of 78,000 annually. In other words, prior to the declaration of war by France and Great Britain on September 3, 1939, there were received less than 200 complaints a year. Today, after the declaration of war by Great Britain and France, at a time when we are at peace with the world, there are being received in this country more than 217 complaints every day.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator know how many of these complaints have been investigated by the Bureau to which he refers?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have not been advised as to the number that have been investigated since September 3, but I know that quite a number of cases were investigated prior to that, perhaps 50 or 60.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator know whether any facts were discovered, as a result of whatever investigations were made, which would throw more light on the extent of actual sabotage?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have not that information.

Mr. WALSH. It would be interesting to know if there is any real foundation behind a substantial number of the complaints. Does not the Senator from North Carolina think so?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to say that I have addressed a letter to the Director of the Bureau of Investigation making inquiry concerning the point which the Senator raises, because it occurred to me that it would be well that Members of this body be informed as to that, in view of the fact that we have but recently learned that one of our great power dams in the West—I think it was Boulder Dam—is now surrounded by guards of the Department of Justice, and because of other cases of sabotage of which we have read through the columns of the daily press.

In reference to the matter which the Senator has brought to my attention, I desire to say that I was directly advised that as a result of the situation existing at the present time one of the great transportation systems in this country found it necessary to employ 1,000 additional patrolmen to guard and patrol its lines, at the individual expense of the corporation itself.

Mr. WALSH. I assume, also, that the information presented by the Senator from North Carolina indicates that there is a need of additional investigators.

Mr. REYNOLDS. There is no question about that. As a matter of fact, the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice recently put on, I understand, about 250 additional men; and, of course, if they are to investigate every one of the complaints that arrive there, taking into consideration the fact that 217 such complaints are being received daily, it is going to require a great many more investigators than they have at the present time.

Mr. WALSH. I hope the Senator will pursue his inquiry and find out, if he can, just how much substance or reality there is to these complaints. At a hysterical time like the present, persons are prone to write letters complaining about some neighbor, or somebody else with whom they have had trouble, that are not always reliable.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say to the Senator that that likewise, has been my experience.

Mr. WALSH. But I should like to find out if we really can determine, and if so, to what degree, upon the exercise of sabotage by citizens or noncitizens of this country.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I think it would be well to make inquiry as to whether there has been any actual activity of that kind on the part of any persons who reside within the confines of this country, whether they be citizens or noncitizens, whether they arrived legally or illegally, regardless of who they are.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is quite right.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In that connection I desire to say to the Senator that I wish to make myself understood with regard to this matter. When I employ the word "alien" I am speaking of the foreigner who arrived here legally and remains here legally without having made application for citizenship after having been here a number of years, and who is not a citizen. I apply the word "alien" to those who arrived here illegally and remain here illegally, or those who arrived illegally and whose status has been changed, and yet who have not made application for citizenship.

Mr. WALSH. And who show no disposition to become Americanized.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, as the Senator knows, there are some aliens who, by reason of inability to read or write the English language, are unable to be naturalized. I have had, and the Senator undoubtedly has had, some correspondence from such aliens requesting my aid and assistance to find out just what the law is. But the Senator means—and I think all of us are in accord with his view—that we have little sympathy for aliens who have shown no willingness or disposition to become Americanized, and enjoy the privileges of American citizenship, and subject themselves to its laws.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Exactly; and we have less sympathy for the 20,000 alien habitual criminals that the former Commissioner of Immigration said were in this country.

Mr. WALSH. So far as I am concerned, criminal aliens cannot be gotten out of the country quickly enough.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I feel that way about it.

I desire to say that there are in this country today many aliens who are really persons of fine character, and are good neighbors, and will be good citizens when they become citizens of the United States. I desire further to say that some of the best people we have in the United States, some of our best citizens, some of our most worthy characters, are those who have come here and become naturalized; and there is absolutely no distinction between a natural-born citizen and one who has come from foreign shores and become a naturalized American citizen.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will permit me to make a further statement, I think he will agree with me that we have been deeply impressed, and sometimes deeply thrilled, at the sentiments of appreciation for the enjoyment of American citizenship which many of these former aliens have manifested. I have seen many occasions when their pride in being Americans, in their realization of what they possess that they never before possessed in their lives, has been most touching, and all this is a great tribute to our institutions and to our country and to the character of these good people.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is a high tribute to the American form of government; and, as a matter of fact, it is an inspiration in itself.

Mr. WALSH. And for the very reason that we have these good former aliens, these good American citizens who appreciate American citizenship, we ought to be all the more alert to protect them against the contamination of those who would undermine our institutions.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Absolutely. As a matter of fact, we are just as thoroughly desirous of bringing about segregation for the protection of the foreign-born who come here and want to become a part of our American citizenship as we are enthusiastically interested in providing protection for our own American citizens.

In regard to fingerprinting, the truth about the matter is—and I have heard this opinion expressed by many of my colleagues and innumerable other American citizens—that it would not be a bad plan if every single individual in the United States were fingerprinted. It would be for the protection of the individual himself. Hundreds of thousands of American citizens, being aware of that fact, are annually voluntarily being fingerprinted, and their fingerprints are on file with the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice. Down in my State of North Carolina, in the high school at Charlotte, a city of 100,000, I understand that virtually every boy and girl who is a student there has voluntarily submitted to fingerprinting; and I do not see why there should be any objection to it. During the World War every one of the 4,000,000 American soldiers under arms and in uniform was registered. All of our seamen and marines were registered. As a matter of fact, I believe that all the members of the Cabinet and of the present administration have been fingerprinted, and nobody has any objection to it. I think it rather worthy of favorable consideration, if only for the protection of the individual himself in carrying on his daily work. I have hundreds of letters from people suggesting that everybody really ought to be registered.

This is a time when I think we ought to be able to ascertain how many aliens there are in the United States. I do not know how many there are. We really cannot ascertain the number until we have some sort of registration act. Somebody said that we are going to register all the aliens in the United States by way of the instrumentalities provided by the present census force; but an alien illegally in this country certainly is not going to look up the census taker to provide the census taker with his name and information to the effect that he illegally arrived in the country.

I think the American people are entitled to know how many aliens there are in the country. The present Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization says there are in the country, according to their estimate, 3,628,103. That is his estimate.

Mr. MARTIN DIES, chairman of the investigating committee in the House interesting itself in un-American activities, in an interview provided a newspaper questioner in Chicago, said there are 7,000,000 aliens in the United States. Mr. Houghteling, the present Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, says there are 3,628,103. I want to believe both of them. I wish I could believe Mr. Houghteling when he says there are only some 3,600,000. I should hate to think that we have 7,000,000 aliens in the United States, and most of them have jobs, when we have 10,000,000 American citizens out of work.

So we are all interested to know how many jobs are being held by aliens. By that I mean noncitizens, whether they came into the country legally or illegally. The only way ever to do it is to have a registration and fingerprinting act, or certainly a registration act. Then we shall know how many aliens there are in the country, and the question will be settled for all time.

Who knows how many aliens have slipped into the country? We all know that the division of the Labor Department interesting itself in border patrol certainly has not enough men provided actually and physically to patrol the Canadian border, extending for more than 3,000 miles from the Atlantic across to the Pacific. We know that we have not enough patrolmen to cover the strip of land between the United States and the Republic of Mexico. We know that we have not sufficient patrolmen to guard and watch every little inlet down about Florida, Key West, and the British possessions of Nassau, Bimini, and Bermuda. We have not enough to guard the ports in the Caribbean, Haiti, the Dominican Republic, the French island possessions, and the British island possessions. It is a very difficult thing; and nobody knows—I would not undertake to say—how many aliens have illegally come into this country. I would not undertake to say how many aliens are illegally coming into this country every night, but I do say that the American people in the present conditions are entitled to know how many there are in this country. I think we ought to take action to bring about the enactment of a measure such as the one to which I have referred, for we are all interested in the present condition.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor, I suggest that there should be some modification of our present immigration law. As the Senator knows, I am the ranking member of the Committee on Immigration, and I have given some attention to the immigration problem; and it is a problem.

I rose to observe, however, that in periods of war—and we are now in such a period—considerable hysteria develops and oftentimes injustice is done to very good people in our midst. We are aroused by statements that there is sabotage or that there is subversive activity when there is really no justification for the statement.

I remember that when the World War broke out I was a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, as I am now, and many complaints came to the committee concerning activities which were alleged to be treasonable, or certainly inimical to the best interests of our country, on the part of persons of foreign birth. We made investigation and found that there was justification for some of the charges, but that many of them were without foundation.

It seems to me that in periods of world disturbance and confusion we should not become hysterical; we should not see substance where there are only shadows, and we should hesitate to brand persons as being guilty of subversive activities unless there is ample and sufficient reason for so doing. It is a serious thing to brand a man as being an enemy to our country when there is no foundation for the charge. I sometimes have felt, as I felt during the early period of the World War, that we were a little too prone to exaggerate conditions, to accentuate small evils, and make of them very serious manifestations of offense against the Government.

I wanted to make this observation in the light of the statement which the Senator from North Carolina has made.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator, because his remark is in line with the suggestion made by the able Senator from Massachusetts, by way of inquiry, when he asked whether or not I had information from the Bureau of Investigation as to the truth or untruth of these statements. I think the Senator's remarks are very pertinent, because at a time like this there is apt to be hysteria, and I do not think anyone should be branded falsely; but it is the duty of our country to be careful and to guard our interests.

Mr. REYNOLDS subsequently said: Mr. President, during the course of my remarks a few moments ago the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] directed an inquiry to me in reference to Senate bill 409, and I am ready to assume as a result of inquiries directed to me a moment ago in the cloak room by some of my colleagues that I evidently did not understand the question of the Senator from Georgia.

If he was referring to the basic quota law, I wish to say in conjunction therewith that I did not intend to convey an erroneous impression, to the effect that Senate bill 409 increases the present world quota; but I intended to convey the impression that in my opinion Senate bill 409 would give a certain class of aliens a preference which they do not have at the present time, and that, as a result of what

I claim to be a misinterpretation of the seventh proviso, of necessity additional aliens are permitted to enter this country with clean slates.

SUPPLEMENTAL MILITARY AND NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 8, line 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Organized Reserves", on page 13, line 24, after the word "headquarters", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the mileage allowance to members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when called into active service for training for 30 days or less shall not exceed 4 cents per mile.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—Navy Department—Bureau of Engineering—Engineering", on page 17, line 18, after the numerals "1940" to strike out "$18,818,000" and insert "$18,363,000", so as to read:

For an additional amount for engineering, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Navy Department and Naval Service Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1940, $18,363,000, of which not to exceed $100,000 shall be available for the pay of employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Construction and Repair—Construction and Repair", on page 18, line 6, after the numerals "1940", to strike out "$15,514,000" and insert "$14,969,000", so as to read:

For an additional amount for construction and repair, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Navy Department and Naval Service Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1940, $14,969,000, of which not to exceed $145,000 shall be available for the pay of employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedules of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Ordnance—Ordnance and Ordnance Stores, Navy", on page 18, line 17, after the numerals "1940", to strike out "$31,060,000" and insert "$30,260,000", so as to read:

For an additional amount for ordnance and ordnance stores, Navy, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Navy Department and Naval Service Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1940, $30,260,000, and, in addition, the Secretary of the Navy may enter into contracts prior to July 1, 1940, for the purposes of this appropriation, to an amount not in excess of $2,450,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Yards and Docks—maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks", on page 21, line 14, after the numerals "1940", to insert a comma and "and including the purchase of four motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles at a cost not to exceed $600 each", so as to read:

For an additional amount for maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Navy Department and Naval Service Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1940, and including the purchase of four motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles at a cost not to exceed $600 each, $871,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Aeronautics—Aviation, Navy", on page 22, line 9, after the numerals "1940", to strike out "$34,736,000" and insert "$28,661,000", so as to read:

For an additional amount for aviation, Navy, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Navy Department and Naval Service Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1940, $28,661,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title IV—Treasury Department—Coast Guard", on page 28, line 7, after the word "employees", to strike out "$45,990" and insert "$43,701", so as to read:

Office of the Commandant: For personal services in the District of Columbia, for temporary employees, $43,701.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 16, to strike out "$2,288,000" and insert "$2,263,000", so as to read:

Pay and allowances: For pay and allowances prescribed by law for commissioned officers, cadets, warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, active and retired, temporary cooks, surfmen, substitute surfmen, and three civilian instructors, retired pay for certain members of the former Life Saving Service authorized by the act approved April 14, 1930 (46 U. S. C. 178a), and so forth, $2,263,000;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 20, to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$250,000", so as to read:

Fuel and water: For fuel, lubricating oil, kerosene, and water, and for the furnishing of heat, light, and power (service) for vessels, stations, and houses of refuge, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 2, to strike out "$836,373" and insert "$700,000", so as to read:

Outfits: For outfits, including necessary supplies and equipment, medals, newspapers and periodicals for statistical purposes, rental of mechanical accounting machinery, repairs to portable equipment at shore units, ship chandlery, engineers' stores, and draft animals and their maintenance, $700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 14, after the words "In all" to strike out "$4,340,000" and insert "$4,126,701", so as to read:

In all, $4,126,701: Provided, That the limitation of $2,200,000 which may be expended for aviation contained in said Treasury Department Appropriation Act under "Coast Guard" is hereby increased to $2,435,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 4, to strike out the following section:

SEC. 402. This act may be cited as the "Emergency Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1940."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 6, to insert the following:

TITLE V—DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE
PRICE ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

SEC. 501. Not to exceed $11,000,000 of the funds appropriated by the item entitled "Parity Payments" contained in the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act, 1940, are hereby made available for the purpose of making payments under the Price Adjustment Act of 1938.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 14, to insert the following section:

SEC. 502. This act may be cited as the "Emergency Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1940."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 7805) was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the able Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], on the 23d instant, delivered an able and exhaustive address upon the pending bill. He referred to the extensive survey which he had made, and directed attention to the many activities of the War Department and to the very large number of Army posts and stations in continental United States, as well as in some of our territorial possessions. I did not have the privilege of hearing the Senator's address, but this morning I availed myself of the opportunity of reading it, and find myself in agreement with most of what the Senator has stated, and I am glad that he has presented to the Senate the result of his observations.

I might add that it has been my view that for several years both the Army and the Navy were maintaining too many posts and stations, naval bases, and so forth. When I was a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs I made an investigation of our naval posts and stations, yards, bases, and so forth, and recommended the closing of a considerable number and the consolidation of others. I believed, with respect to the Army as well as the Navy, that the administrative expenses were entirely too great and that too many stations, posts, yards and docks, and bases were maintained. I believed that, in the interest of economy as well as efficiency, there should be a reduction in the number of agencies and organizations above referred to.

As stated, I did not have the privilege of hearing the Senator's address and have taken the floor, first, to compliment the Senator upon his exhaustive survey; and, secondly, to refer to a statement which he made with reference to the air base in my State.

The Senator, in his address, stated:

I may state that the distinguished senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is not now present, although I think he knew I was to mention his State.

First, I confess that I was not present, because I was compelled to attend a meeting of the Temporary National Economic Committee, as the acting chairman. I knew that the Senator was expected to address the Senate, but I did not know that he would refer to the so-called arsenal or air base in my State.

In the course of the address delivered by the Senator, he stated, in substance, that—

There is in the deserts of Utah an arsenal where there are now being loaded shells and bombs for destructive purposes.

And further—

Adjacent to that arsenal on which the Government was spending multiplied millions of dollars in building an airport.

And he asked:

For what purpose?

He further stated:

It is not a commercial airport; there is no town near it; it is on the desert—

And so forth.

The Senator further, after asking what the airport was for, stated:

It embraces thousands of acres of land in the desert near Ogden; that desert land grows nothing save an occasional weed when rains infrequently come. That land, on an average, cost $47 an acre, although it is worthless for any purpose on earth.

The Senator suggested that the Government could save money by moving—

That would-be arsenal from Ogden, Utah, to some other place and could save money by not spending money in developing that airfield close to Ogden, Utah, and the arsenal there.

I do not rise for the purpose of criticizing my dear friend but believe the able Senator is not fully advised concerning the matter to which he referred.

First, may I say that several years after the World War, when changes were being made in the Army and in Army posts and stations, and the technique of the military department was being modified, the experts and those in charge of our military operations made, as I was advised, an exhaustive survey of the military needs of our country, and after this survey was completed they announced that in the interest of national defense the Government should establish a munitions depot or arsenal in Utah. They contended that the munitions and military supplies to be stored in the munitions plant and arsenal should be remote from the seacoast, and in a region where the climate was dry. Their view was that powder and munitions should be stored in a dry climate and not near the seacoast where, because of dampness, they would deteriorate. I was advised at that time that after a thorough investigation and survey, the most suitable place for the arsenal and munitions plant was at a point a few miles south of Ogden, Utah. The original plan, as I recall, called for the construction of several buildings and for underground vaults or rooms for the protection of the shells and various kinds of munitions; also for the construction of the necessary railway facilities in order to convey to the buildings, when completed, the necessary munitions and other material and military supplies. The completed structure was to cost several millions of dollars.

An examination of the place selected for the arsenal and the munitions plant will convince the most skeptical that no more suitable place could be found in the intermountain region.

After a considerable sum had been expended in the construction of the plant some changes were made in the general plan submitted by the War Department. The purpose, however, to erect the plant referred to was not abandoned, but because of economies that were incurred, or for other reasons which seemed valid, there was a temporary suspension in the development of the program.

I do not recall the price paid for the land acquired by the Government. As I have indicated, a few miles south of Ogden, on what was known as The Ridge, the necessary acreage was obtained. The land was dry and a considerable portion of that which was acquired by the Government was uncultivated.

It is a historic fact that the intermountain region was regarded as a desert. The rainfall was not great, but, forbidding as the territory was, thousands of patriotic and enterprising Americans entered the valleys of the intermountain region and, by thrift and energy, built great commonwealths and developed a high form of civilization. As many Senators know, Utah was a part of the territory which was ceded to the United States by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. It and surrounding lands were almost terra incognita. Many will recall the great speech of Daniel Webster in which he stated in substance that the lands of the West were valueless, the home of beasts, and unfit for human habitation.

Nevertheless, as I have indicated, brave men and women, who became the pioneers of the West, crossed the Mississippi and went beyond the pales of so-called civilization. The Utah pioneers entered the Salt Lake Valley in 1847. They found it a desert—a wilderness—inhabited only by jack rabbits and wolves and scattered bands of Indians. However, they were not deterred by reason of the forbidding conditions, and, with courage and sublime faith, addressed themselves to the building of an American Commonwealth. Their numbers were increased until today there are in Utah more than three-quarters of a million people, and from Utah there have gone forth into surrounding States—Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho, Nevada, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, and California—many thousands of fine American citizens, who have, in the respective States to which they went, made important contributions to the growth and development of the same.

The territory north of Salt Lake City and between it and Ogden was a desert; that is to say, the land was producing nothing but a little grass and sagebrush. But the entire valley between the two cities has been brought under cultivation, and the valley in which Ogden is situated has a population of perhaps 80,000 or more inhabitants. The desert lands have been irrigated. Great reservoirs have been constructed and the water from the same, by canals, has been carried to thousands of acres of land, which have become valuable and highly productive.

The pioneers of Utah developed the irrigation system which has been carried to other States, and the technique employed by the pioneers in their agricultural activities, has been adopted in surrounding States. Lands which were of but little value became valuable when water was applied thereon for irrigation purposes. In and about Ogden and near the arsenal and munitions plant and air base there are important manufacturing plants. Sugar factories, large canning establishments, and a packing plant of considerable magnitude have been erected. The lands which were of but little value have increased in value because of irrigation.

Ogden City, which, as stated, is but a few miles from the arsenal and munitions plant, is known to all persons who have traveled to any extent throughout the United States and in the West. It is a railroad center, into which lines from east and west and north and south converge. It is one of the most progressive and enterprising cities that can be found in the United States. What it lacks in size, it makes up in energy, enterprise, and industrial and business activities.

With the development of aviation, the Government decided that there should be an important air base established adjoining the arsenal and munitions plant. I have no reason to doubt the wisdom of our military leaders. They decided that there should be an air base in the intermountain section, and they determined that that base should be, as I have indicated, adjoining the munitions and arsenal structures. Upon land which was acquired, as I recall, several years ago, an air base is being constructed. I am repeating when I state that those in charge of our national defense and our military policies believed that there should be an important air base in the intermountain region, and, after a complete survey, they selected the present site, where the air base is being erected, as the most suitable point for its location.

I referred earlier in my remarks to the fact that several years ago the War Department had believed it imperative that a munitions depot and arsenal be constructed in one of the valleys in the intermountain region, where climatic conditions were most suitable, and, as stated, they selected the point south of Ogden for the munitions plant and arsenal. It was therefore logical and proper that the air base should be erected near the arsenal and munitions depot. The lands acquired years ago were ample to meet the requirements of the Government for the air base, and for the munitions depot and arsenal. I accept the views of those in charge of our military plans and operations, and believe that they have acted wisely in their selection of a site for the air base and for the munitions depot and arsenal.

CIVIL LIBERTIES AND RIGHTS OF LABOR

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have a matter of some importance which I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate. I have a report signed by a subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor investigating violations of the rights of labor under Senate Resolution 266 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, and successive resolutions authorizing additional appropriations. This is a report regarding the refusal of a witness to answer various questions in the hearings held by the subcommittee in San Francisco, Calif.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the report printed in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it so ordered.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there is presented herewith also an explanatory statement, addressed to the Vice President, and signed by the members of the subcommittee, in which they urge that on the presentation of the report he perform the duty incumbent on his office as set forth in section 104 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to congressional investigations, and to present the statement of facts aforesaid to the appropriate United States attorney.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator, Does this relate to a contempt in San Francisco?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Did the committee take any proceeding against those who were accused of being guilty?

Mr. WALSH. A witness declined to answer questions propounded to him by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and I believe by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], at least by the Senator from Wisconsin, and these proceedings are a result of the refusal to answer questions.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is the action taken now to be Senate action?

Mr. WALSH. No; it is the procedure established by law for the committee to make a report and call the matter to the attention of the Senate, and ask the Vice President to proceed under the statute dealing with cases of this kind. In other words, he will be expected to refer the matter to the United States attorney for investigation and grand-jury action.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that whatever action is taken has to be taken by the Senate? I understood the Senator from Massachusetts merely presented this matter for printing in the RECORD. I would be opposed to taking any action of this kind without knowing further about it.

Mr. WALSH. I asked that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD, and then I requested that the information in the report be given to the Vice President, for him to take the action which is provided by law in circumstances of this kind, namely, to refer the matter to the appropriate United States attorney for his attention and consideration.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have not looked at the law lately, but a witness cannot be in contempt of a subcommittee, or of a committee, until the committee reports that action to the Senate itself and it holds him in contempt, as I understand the procedure.

Mr. WALSH. I do not understand that to be the procedure. The committee must make a report to the Senate, and that is being done, and at the same time the report is being made and a request made to have it printed, the information contained in the report is called to the attention of the Vice President in order that he may proceed under the statute, which directs him to report the matter to the appropriate United States attorney.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have no objection to the Senator presenting the matter, but I certainly would not want the Senate with my concurrence to take any action to foreclose a case of this kind without further information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the law approved June 22, 1938, the parliamentarian advises the Chair, upon a report coming in the Vice President must furnish the information to the appropriate district attorney, without any action on the part of the Senate; and in order that it may be certain just what the law provides, the Chair directs the clerk to read section 104 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act to which the Chair has called attention.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Public Resolution No. 123, 75th Cong.; ch. 594, 3d sess.; H. J. Res. 699]

Joint resolution to amend sections 101, 102, 103, 104, and 859 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to congressional investigations

SEC. 104. Whenever a witness summoned as mentioned in section 102 fails to appear to testify or fails to produce any books, papers, records, or documents, as required, or whenever any witness so summoned refuses to answer any question pertinent to the subject under inquiry before either House, or any joint committee established by a joint or concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress, or any committee or subcommittee of either House of Congress, and the fact of such failure or failures is reported to either House while Congress is in session, or when Congress is not in session, a statement of fact constituting such failure is reported to and filed with the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, it shall be the duty of the said President of the Senate or Speaker of the House, as the case may be, to certify, and he shall so certify, the statement of facts aforesaid under the seal of the Senate or House, as the case may be, to the appropriate United States attorney, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for its action.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am submitting this report at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], both of whom have been conducting hearings at San Francisco and Los Angeles. The parliamentarian of the Senate and the legislative counsel of the Senate have been consulted, and I suggest that the procedure appears to be in conformity with the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I am not interested in this matter, so far as I know, but the attorney general of the State of California called upon me just before I left San Francisco and asked me to keep him advised of any actions that were taken in connection with certain cases in which he was asked for his opinion. I do not know whether those cases are involved or not, and I should like to have the matter rest on the presentation which has been made here, and that the request for action be withheld until I have had an opportunity to look at the matter and see whether or not it is embraced within what the attorney general of the State of California requested me to do.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be very glad to withdraw the request for the filing of the report, and let the Senator from California have an opportunity to inspect it and investigate it between now and Monday.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws his request.

Mr. WALSH. For the time being.

IMPORTATION OF INFESTED BULBS

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 143, which now lies on the table. I have consulted with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] and they have no objection to the consideration of the resolution at this time. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 143) submitted by Mr. SCHWELLENBACH (for himself and Mr. McNARY) on June 7, 1939, was considered and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee, is authorized and directed to examine the Secretary of Agriculture and Dr. Lee A. Strong, Chief of the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, with respect to the following matters:

(1) Why the Department of Agriculture failed to keep the agreement made with the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, acting on behalf of the Senate, on March 17, 1938, providing for the necessary sterilization of the bulbs imported into the United States, which were described in Senate bill 2983, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session.

(2) Why the Department of Agriculture failed to keep the agreement with individual Members of the Senate, the basis of which is correspondence dated June 13, 1938, and July 5, 1938.

(3) Why, after the Department of Agriculture presented to individual Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives and caused to be introduced the bills S. 1364 and H. R. 4036, an adverse report on such legislation was later submitted by the Department of Agriculture.

The subcommittee shall report to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations.

AERIAL MOTION-PICTURE EXHIBIT

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, before the Senate adjourns I should like to make an announcement.

Immediately after adjournment there will be a motion-picture exhibit in the District of Columbia Committee room. Motion pictures in colors were made from an airplane, showing from the air all the cities from New Orleans to Minneapolis. Through the courtesy of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], his committee room has been placed at the disposal of the Senate for this purpose; and I think Senators who have the time, and who have never flown in an airplane from New Orleans to Minneapolis, will find the exhibit very interesting.

This invitation also applies to the gentlemen of the press.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations) reported favorably from that committee the nomination of Lt. Col. Benjamin Marvin Casteel, of Missouri, to be work projects administrator for Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTER—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Jessie B. Searle to be postmaster at Redrock, Okla., which nomination had previously been passed over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I withdraw any further objection to the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination of Jessie B. Searle to be postmaster at Redrock, Okla., is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry other nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the remaining nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the remaining nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 29, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate on January 25 (legislative day of January 23), 1940

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY

Lewis Compton, of New Jersey, to be The Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Carroll Miller, of Pennsylvania, to be an Interstate Commerce Commissioner for a term expiring December 31, 1946. (Reappointment.)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

Theron Lamar Caudle, of North Carolina, to be United States attorney for the western district of North Carolina, vice Marcus Erwin, deceased.

Cleon A. Summers, of Oklahoma, to be United States attorney for the eastern district of Oklahoma. Mr. Summers is now serving in this office under an appointment which expired August 2, 1939.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

Julius J. Wichser, of Indiana, to be United States marshal for the southern district of Indiana. He is presently serving in this post under a court appointment.

William F. Burguson, of South Carolina, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of South Carolina. Mr. Burguson is now serving in this office under an appointment which expired June 14, 1938.

Reed Sharp, of Tennessee, to be United States marshal for the middle district of Tennessee. He is presently serving in this post under a court appointment.

Albert M. Rowe, of West Virginia, to be United States marshal for the northern district of West Virginia. Mr. Rowe is now serving in this office under an appointment which expired September 1, 1939.

Charles H. Cox, of Georgia, to be United States marshal for the northern district of Georgia. Mr. Cox is now serving in this office under an appointment which expired June 18, 1938.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 25, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend Paul B. Kern, bishop of the Nashville Area, Methodist Church, Nashville, Tenn., offered the following prayer:

"O God, our help in ages past, our hope for years to come," be very near unto us and grant us Thy grace and guidance in this present hour. Many difficulties confront us; many problems perplex our minds and hearts. Grant unto us Thy servants a share of Thy wisdom and understanding, and may the deliberations of this body be guided this day by Thy judgments and may they advance the cause of Thy kingdom upon the earth.

We pause to ask Thy blessing upon the family and friends of the fallen comrade of this united body of legislators. And we pray that in that distant city where his tired body is being laid to rest the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ may be sufficient for their every need and they may know that underneath them are the everlasting arms of love and strength.

Guide the nations of this earth toward the pathways of peace; restrain the cruel hand of violence; comfort the oppressed; bring victory to the cause of righteousness. Forgive us our sins and save us from the fallacy of believing that we can work out the good life for ourselves or for others except as Thou shalt govern our minds and direct our paths. This we pray in the name of Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter of resignation, which was read:

JANUARY 24, 1940.

The Honorable WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Patents to take effect at once.

With kind regards, I am

Very sincerely,

JAMES E. VAN ZANDT.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the services and the life of two gentlemen who entered the House with me in the Sixtieth Congress and who passed away a few days ago, Mr. MARTIN, of Colorado, and Mr. ASHBROOK, of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the services and life of Dr. SIROVICH, of New York, who recently passed away.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

EXPENSES OF DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 368

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 282 of the Seventy-fifth Congress and continued under House Resolution 26, Seventy-sixth Congress, and House Resolution 321, third session, Seventy-sixth Congress, incurred by the special committee appointed to investigate un-American propaganda in the United States and related questions, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $75,000, including expenditures for the employment of experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts, and the amount herein appropriated is to cover all expenditures of said committee of every nature in the final completion of its investigation and filing its report not later than January 3, 1941.

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia if not otherwise officially engaged.

SEC. 3. The head of each executive department is hereby requested to detail to said special committee such number of legal and expert assistants and investigators as said committee may from time to time deem necessary.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CALL OF PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, next Monday is the fifth Monday in the month, therefore it is neither unanimous-consent day nor District of Columbia day. I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on Monday to call the omnibus claims bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a recent magazine article written by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8067) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8067, with Mr. PATMAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the bill just presented is an urgency deficiency bill that contains two principal items which make it necessary to bring in this bill in advance of the regular first deficiency bill. One is an item of $29,000,000 for the Ordnance Bureau of the Navy Department. The other is an item of $29,300,000 for refunding internal-revenue collections.

The $29,000,000 for the Ordnance Bureau is for the payments on armor, armament, ammunition, and guns for something over 100 naval vessels we have under construction. The method of handling this matter is that as this armor plate, guns, and equipment is fabricated and delivered to the Navy Department the Ordnance Bureau pays for it. The current rate of expenditure for this purpose is around $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 a month. On account of industry's getting under way and speeding up to some extent, these deliveries have been made a little faster than had been contemplated, and this accounts for the item of $29,000,000.

The Budget estimate for it was $31,000,000. After checking it over very carefully the committee felt that at the present rate of expenditure the $29,000,000 would run the Bureau for the remainder of the current year.

The item for refund of internal-revenue collections is purely routine. There is nothing we can do about it. These refunds are the regularly adjudicated refunds of tax collections. A deficiency item is necessary for two reasons. One reason is that the Department has been making a greater effort to close up cases and to wind them up without so much delay. Also, as you know, we pay interest on these refunds whenever we pay them, and it is estimated now that it will run $1,500,000 or $2,000,000 a month on these refunds if we wait for the next deficiency bill.

In this bill also are items for the widows of deceased Members, with the exception of the late gentleman from New York, Mr. Sirovich. The committee had to get some information about his dependents before including that item, and it will come in the first deficiency bill.

There is an item of $25,000 for the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives. This is for the purpose of purchasing typewriters and typewriter desks for the Members due to the fact that an additional clerk was given each Member. The original estimate for this item was $50,000, and this estimate was sent to the committee in the last session. The committee felt that an effort should be made to get along without any expenditure for that purpose, if possible. The Clerk made that effort but was not able to do it. We were able, however, to cut the item in half, and we bring it in now as a $25,000 item.

In the bill is also a small item changing the appropriation for the United States Constitutional Sesquicentennial Commission. This does not in any way affect the amount appropriated but merely allows a small additional amount to be used for clerical help.

In the bill also is an item which I hope will not be unduly offensive to the Members, as it provides them with stationery for this session of Congress.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. I direct the attention of the gentleman to the last paragraph on page 2 of the report. I have not had an opportunity to read the hearings on this matter. I wish the gentleman would briefly explain that proposal regarding additional money for the subsidy for exportation of cotton. I wonder how much of the $113,000,000 remains unexpended.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is nothing in this bill for that.

Mr. MAHON. I know there is nothing in the bill for it, but how much of the $113,000,000 remains?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. On that point I shall have to yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], if he is here, or to someone who has the cotton figures. I do not know. I may say to the gentleman, however, that it was stated that they lack between $9,000,000 and $11,000,000 of having enough to pay the parity. The suggestion was made that the amount be taken out of the 1940 parity payments. Such a resolution was reported out of the committee. It is not in this bill, however. It has also been added to the defense bill in the Senate.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I understand the cotton item that was allotted was $14,000,000. I obtained this information from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER]. They have currently spent $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 of that $14,000,000. I think that is correct. That is only a recollection, however.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

Mr. Chairman, this bill calls for $29,000,000, approximately, for internal-revenue tax refunds, all of which will be required, according to the testimony of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, by the end of the current fiscal year.

It also calls for $29,000,000 to cover payments that will be required to be made on ships that have already been laid down by the Navy pursuant to law.

The other items in the bill relating to the administration of the House are small and routine.

The item for arms, armament, and ammunition in the Navy is entirely in connection with the new ships, and there is nothing for laying down anything new. At the rate the money is being spent, this amount will be required by the end of the current fiscal year. They will be practically out of money by the 10th of February. The committee made a cut here of $2,000,000, because it believed that, according to current rates of expenditure, they would be able to get along all right on that amount; but I do not believe a greater cut would be justified from the evidence.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I would like to inquire whether the gentleman took into consideration the fact that the armament, armor, and ammunition makers are working to full capacity; and if that is true, there would be some question as to whether or not an additional Navy expansion program could be adopted.

Mr. TABER. Of course, we could not adopt a new expansion program. I think that all of these outfits are practically working to capacity. However, the expenditures in the last couple of months have not been so great as they were in the earlier months of the fiscal year. They seem to be dropping off rather than rising.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I notice an expression is used here, "replacement of naval vessels." Does that mean that this is work on the replacement of some of these ships?

Mr. TABER. It means ships that take the place of something else in the Navy that is already there. For instance, under the law, the way it stands now, a battleship is given a certain age, and when that age comes it is permissible to lay down, provided sufficient funds are available, a new battleship. A replacement program is that type of program rather than an increase in number of ships.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I have been requested by Mr. Theodore H. Hoffmann, national chairman of the Steuben Society of America, composed of American citizens of German origin, all of whom are highly patriotic and believe in our representative and constitutional system of government, to place in the RECORD a certain resolution passed by that organization:

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the national political committee of the Steuben Society of America:

"If it were at all possible to remove all of the Finns to America in a body this country would in all respects be the gainer. Like the Swedes, Norwegians, Danes, in short, all Scandinavians, who have come to these shores in the past, they would add their numbers to those of our best citizens.

"Dr. Paul Rohrbach, writing for the Staats-Herald, points out that there are no illiterates among the Finns. In Helsinki, a city of 300,000 inhabitants, there are more bookdealers than in any city of its size elsewhere. To purchase and read books is common with the Finn. Newspapers and books are found wherever the traveler goes, in the farthest village and hamlet in the Arctic regions.

"What stuff these people are made of is now being shown by their self-sacrificing fight in defense of their culture and homes.

"Americans divide on many problems, but think and feel as one in behalf of the gallant Finnish people.

"We express our sympathy with the Finnish people in their valiant struggle against Soviet imperialism, which, following in the footsteps of British and French imperialism, is applying the methods of the gangster to seize at the muzzle of the gun whatever it may desire to wrest from a weaker nation."

We would esteem it a favor if you can have this presented to the House of Representatives and inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Thanking you in anticipation of this favor, we beg to remain,
Very sincerely yours,

THEODORE H. HOFFMANN.

I have another letter addressed to me, making somewhat the same request from the secretary of this organization. I have to confess I do not agree with that part of the letter which favors retaining our Ambassador at Moscow.

Our society wishes to go on record as favoring the retention of Lawrence A. Steinhardt, United States Ambassador to Russia, at his post rather than recall him in protest against the Soviet invasion of Finland, and we also favor the full resumption of diplomatic relations with Germany.

We agree with the statement issued by a number of peace organizations, among them being the Keep America Out of War Congress, World Peaceway, American Friends Service Committee, the Fellowship of Reconciliation, that such a course be taken and support the reasons underlying their recommendation that—

"A period of strained relations is precisely the time when the best possible representation is necessary in the respective capitals of nations between whom differences have arisen."

We would esteem it a favor if you would have this presented to the House of Representatives and recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Thanking you in anticipation of this favor, we beg to remain,
Very sincerely yours,

F. W. MAYER, Secretary.

As I have stated previously, I am in favor of recalling our American Ambassador from Moscow and severing all diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia. This may seem somewhat inconsistent, but, on the other hand, I think one of the greatest mistakes and blunders made by this administration was not the recalling of our Ambassador from Germany a year ago last September—that, I agreed at the time, was a moral protest against the persecution of certain groups of people in Germany—but I think our Ambassador should have been sent back when the French and British Ambassadors were returned to Germany last spring. It was a disastrous diplomatic blunder. Our Ambassador, Mr. Hugh Wilson, should have been there last August, when the peace of Europe hung in the balance, and our influence could have been used to maintain peace at that time. I am in favor of returning our Ambassador to Germany immediately, so that he can use his influence and represent our country in trying to bring back peaceful relations again in Europe.

Our chargé d'affaires, Mr. Alexander Kirk, an able and experienced diplomat, told me exactly the same thing last summer at Berlin, that we should have an American Ambassador there because he is unable to meet Von Ribbentrop, the German Foreign Minister, and consequently, we do not have the influence we are entitled to with the German foreign office and exert very little influence in helping to restore peaceful relations in Europe.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I gladly yield to my distinguished colleague on the Foreign Affairs Committee, the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. EATON. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he thought the presence of an American Ambassador in Germany in last August would have had the slightest effect on the course of events.

Mr. FISH. I will say to the gentleman I hope that an American Ambassador, representing the greatest and most powerful Nation in the world, will always have a great deal of influence in any capital in which he is located, in behalf of peace and the settlement of international dispute by arbitration, mediation, and peaceful methods.

Mr. EATON. How about Russia?

Mr. FISH. I do not claim our Ambassador could have positively prevented the war, but certainly it was our duty to try in every way we could to exercise our influence to prevent the European War before it broke out, and to stop it now.

I may seem inconsistent in saying I do not want an American Ambassador at Moscow, but I regard Soviet Russia as an unfriendly country and opposed recognition on that ground. I am still opposed to recognition which I believe had helped to open the floodgates of Communist propaganda in the United States, and I am against that type of foreign propaganda.

Mr. EATON. I cannot head the gentleman off in anything he has to say against Russia. I say "Amen" to that, but if the gentleman himself could not get peace while he was over there, how does he expect the Ambassador to do it? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FISH. I did my best to do it, and I promise the gentleman and the Congress that I will continue, as long as I am in Congress, to try to restore peaceful relations in Europe, and to end this war, because if it continues the only victor will be Communism and the spread of Communism throughout all of Europe. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the colloquy between the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON]. The gentleman from New York is always consistent in his criticism of anything the present administration does. That is one thing upon which he can be accorded entire consistency. But when he says he endorses the withdrawing of our Ambassador to Germany for moral suasion or moral reason, and then thinks he ought to be sent back when conditions in that country have not changed, I doubt if I would debate with the gentleman upon that, except that I do not see that the conditions have changed. But in insisting that we return an Ambassador to Germany, a country whose government certainly I do not endorse, and severing diplomatic relations with Russia, it seems to me the gentleman reaches the point of highest inconsistency. Incidentally we still have our diplomatic relations with Germany, because our Embassy is open.

I think as little of the Russian Government and the people who are in control of it as anybody in the world. I doubt if the Russian Government, as it is presently constituted, is enjoying having an American Ambassador in Moscow. I rather think we would play into their hands if we severed diplomatic relations. We have a listening post in Russia at least, and I am in favor of keeping it there. I cannot understand why it would help the United States one particle to sever diplomatic relations with Russia. We would have no way on earth of knowing about anything that went on in Russia. Let me repeat, being as much opposed to Communism as one could be, regretting the kind of government under which the Russian people must live, I do not think it is the part of diplomacy on the part of the United States to say, "We will not send an ambassador to a country, we will not retain an ambassador in a country, if we do not endorse the form of government they have."

Now, if we are going out to police the world in its policy and try to change the governments all over the earth that we do not endorse, then, of course, we can go into this kind of—well, I will not say "nonsense," but I can hardly think of a more fitting word to apply to it. We still have diplomatic relations with Germany.

Our Ambassador is not there, but the Embassy is still open. We still have diplomatic relations with Russia. We are informed of conditions in Russia, because we have an ambassador over there. As far as I am concerned, I cannot see how it would help the United States Government one iota to withdraw its Ambassador from Russia and sever diplomatic relations with Russia or anything of the sort, and as far as I am individually concerned—and I am speaking for myself alone—I am utterly opposed to any such procedure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; I yield if I have time.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman kindly explain to the House why we should have an Ambassador in Moscow and not one in Berlin?

Mr. RAYBURN. I cannot, but others in positions of responsibility in such matters may have good reasons.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield? I would like to answer that question, if I may.

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLOOM. The reason we do not have an Ambassador in Berlin is that at one time they brought the Ambassador from Berlin over to this country and have kept him here ever since. Now, what has happened ever since in Berlin? There is a chargé d'affaires in Berlin, who today is taking care of the affairs of this Government which were formerly taken care of by two Ambassadors and two Ministers, namely, the Ambassador in Berlin, the Ambassador in Poland, the Minister in Austria, and the Minister in Czechoslovakia. But by not sending the Ambassador back to Berlin, this country is at a disadvantage, because the chargé d'affaires cannot deal with the chiefs of state. He must go to people of his rank. As the majority leader has stated, if you withdraw your Ambassador from Moscow today, that is different from sending an ambassador there or opening diplomatic relations, but if you withdraw your Ambassador from Moscow today, there is no way by which the United States can receive information which it is most necessary at this time for them to receive.

We had the same opportunity to withdraw our Ambassador from Japan when incidents occurred there, but we did not, and it would be a most serious matter at this time under conditions that exist in Europe for the United States Government to withdraw its Ambassador from any country in Europe.

Finland would in no way be strengthened if relations with the Soviet Government were to be broken off at this time, and the advocates of severance of relations with Soviet Russia who believe that such an act would help Finland are ill-advised. The President, as you know, during last December, in most forceful terms, gave expression of the attitude of the Government and the people of this country toward the invasion of Finland by the Soviet Army. The President on that occasion issued the following statement:

The news of the Soviet naval and military bombings within Finnish territory has come as a profound shock to the Government and people of the United States. Despite efforts made to solve the dispute by peaceful methods, to which no reasonable objection could be offered, one power has chosen to resort to force of arms. It is tragic to see the policy of force spreading, and to realize that wanton disregard for law is still on the march. All peace-loving peoples in those nations that are still hoping for the continuance of relations throughout the world on the basis of law and order will unanimously condemn this new resort to military force as the arbiter of international differences.

It would be poor policy, indeed, to establish the principle that the maintenance of diplomatic relations with another government implies approval of the form of government of that country, or of the actions and policies of the government of that country. If that were the case, it would appear to be necessary to consider the advisability of discontinuing diplomatic relations with several other governments now pursuing policies and objectives which the Government and the people of the United States do not approve.

It is more necessary to have diplomatic relations with a foreign country during tense periods than it is in times of international harmony. This is particularly true under the conditions which exist today. In fact, the presence of ambassadors or ministers becomes more essential in these times for the protection of American citizens and property. It must be remembered, furthermore, that no other country has broken off diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia during this critical period. The British and the French Governments have not broken off diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia and have not withdrawn their ambassadors from Moscow.

It should be the policy of the United States to maintain peaceful relations with all countries throughout the world, and the breaking off of relations with Russia would not be in conformity with our policy to maintain such peaceful relations, because you must remember that when diplomatic relations are severed between other countries and the United States, we lose the opportunity to discuss and deal directly on questions that may arise. In this way the absence of official representatives in the capitals of other countries might lead to very unpleasant incidents. The President should always be in the position, should the occasion present itself, to be of assistance in furthering the aims of peace.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I do not have control of the time.

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. FISH. After what the gentleman has said, I should think he would be very much in favor of sending an American Ambassador back to Berlin.

Mr. BLOOM. I do not say that I would agree to that, for the reason that a mistake was made by asking our Ambassador to come home and leaving a chargé d'affaires there. We have two very fine representatives there, Mr. Kirk and Mr. Patterson. If, however, we should send an ambassador back to Berlin and Berlin did not send an ambassador here, the United States would be placed in a most embarrassing position. We made a mistake there, but let us not repeat the mistake in Moscow or other countries.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, namely:

LEGISLATIVE

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

To pay the widow of William A. Ashbrook, late a Representative from the State of Ohio, $10,000.

To pay the widow of Chester C. Bolton, late a Representative from the State of Ohio, $10,000.

To pay the widow of Edward W. Curley, late a Representative from the State of New York, $10,000.

To pay the widow of George H. Heinke, late a Representative from the State of Nebraska, $10,000.

To pay the widow of Santiago Iglesias, late a Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico, $10,000.

To pay the widow of Carl E. Mapes, late a Representative from the State of Michigan, $10,000.

To pay the widow of John A. Martin, late a Representative from the State of Colorado, $10,000.

To pay the daughter of Wallace E. Pierce, late a Representative from the State of New York, $10,000.

To pay the widow of J. Will Taylor, late a Representative from the State of Tennessee, $10,000.

The foregoing sums to be disbursed by the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives.

Contingent expenses: For furniture and materials for repairs of same, exclusive of labor, tools, and machinery, for furniture and repair shops, fiscal year 1940, $10,000.

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of salaries unless specifically ordered by the House of Representatives, including the same objects specified under this head in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1940, fiscal year 1940, $15,000.

For stationery for Representatives, Delegates, and the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico, for the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, $87,600.

EXECUTIVE

INDEPENDENT ESTABLISHMENTS

UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The portion of the appropriation for the Commission, contained in the Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939, which may be expended exclusively for personal services, is hereby increased from $5,000 to $7,500.

NAVY DEPARTMENT

REPLACEMENT OF NAVAL VESSELS

Armor, armament, and ammunition: For an additional amount toward the armor, armament, and ammunition for vessels heretofore authorized (and appropriated for in part), including the same objects and under the same conditions and limitations prescribed under this head in the Naval Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1940, $29,000,000, to continue available until expended.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

Refunding internal-revenue collections: For an additional amount for refunding internal-revenue collections, as provided by law, including the same objects and under the same conditions and limitations prescribed under this head in the Treasury Department Appropriation Act, 1940, fiscal year 1940, $29,300,000.

Sec. 2. This act may be cited as the "Urgent Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1940".

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PATMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 8067, the first deficiency bill, 1940, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein certain matter and a letter from the Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8068) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; and pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate shall continue for 2 hours this afternoon, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from New York and myself, at the end of which time the bill shall be read for amendment. Is this agreeable to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TABER. I should think that would be all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8068, the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill, 1941, with Mr. HOBBS in the chair.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I feel that the development of aviation in this Republic is one of the strongest indications of a progressive people. We are developing aviation from the standpoint of extending its benefits to the users of air mail, to the users of air express, to the individuals who patronize the air transports, and to the ever-growing private flying public. The Civil Aeronautics Authority is doing a splendid work to increase air travel and safety, coupled with needed supervision.

REAL SERVICE IS GIVEN

I congratulate the committee that brings this appropriation bill before us for continuing the program which is being carried forth by the Post Office Department in the experimental service which is now in effect in four States, namely, Delaware, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Ohio, in extending to the smaller or rural communities of this Nation the benefits of air-mail service. This has been brought about through the use of the automatic pick-up and delivery device which enables the plane carrying the mail to deposit that cargo and at the same time pick up another load of mail from any designated spot, the operation being performed by the plane while in flight and traveling at the rate of between 90 and 125 miles an hour. Ground equipment is simple in construction and operation. Two upright poles, each about 40 feet high, are set into concrete blocks 60 feet apart. A line connects the poles. The mail bag picked up is fastened to the center and held in a special plywood container.

At the present there are 58 communities in these 4 States, with a majority of the communities being in Pennsylvania and West Virginia, which are giving to the country a proving ground for what I believe will be one of the most noteworthy advancements in aviation that this country has seen. I feel that it might be interesting to the membership to know that the trunk lines serving the major cities in this country estimate that they stop their planes in cities approximately 150, 250, and sometimes 700 miles apart, whereas, through the service given by these experimental routes serving these smaller communities, 5, 10, 15, and 20 miles apart. There are 4,000 cities in this land with a population of over 5,000. Today only 210 cities, excluding the 58 pick-up towns, are served with air mail. There are 900 such cities that have airports constructed, but no air-mail service. I think it will be interesting and gratifying to watch in the coming months the further effectiveness of this device as a means of bringing the advantages of air mail not alone to these cities where the service is now being carried forward successfully, but I believe in the next few years it will be enlarged to serve 15, 20, or 25 States of the Union.

NO AIRPORT IS NEEDED

There are Members here who come from the mountainous districts where it is impossible to build airports, even if the communities in connection with the Federal Government had the funds; this automatic pick-up and delivery service can bring to those communities desired air-mail service, and soon perhaps a combination of passenger carrying with mail and express, using equipment suitable for smaller airports. The feeder service is surely coming.

I again congratulate the committee, working with the Post Office Department, in continuing this program, and I trust it will not be long until certificates of public convenience and necessity may be given by the Civil Aeronautics Authority so that this worth-while service may be considerably extended. I do not want to draw special attention of the Members to any material I have written. However, I have been intensely interested in this subject for many, many years and have today placed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article recently written by myself which fully explains the progress that has been made. Information contained therein may be of interest.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute to make an observation.

Mr. Chairman, I think the country is indebted to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], one of the best friends of aviation in this country, for his very great interest in this subject and for the encouragement and stimulation which he has given to the experiment. I believe it is going to produce something worth while in our postal service in time to come. History will record that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] is the father of the pick-up and delivery service.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I say in answer to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] that I deeply appreciate his gracious remarks. I have only cooperated with those who have believed in this service. Credit goes to the committee that handled the legislation and to the Members of this body who supported the necessary appropriations. In coming years no Member of this body will regret his support of the air-mail pick-up and delivery program, which I believe will extend its benefits to the people of America in a very short time. I again thank my friend from Indiana.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, the colloquy that we had earlier in the morning with reference to international affairs was a most interesting one. I was very happy that our distinguished majority leader took part in that colloquy.

I have great respect for the ability of our distinguished majority leader, and I am very fond of him. Usually his opinions and advice are sound. He struck a very forceful note this morning when he used the word "nonsense." I liked that word "nonsense." You will recall that he used that in connection with the reference which he made to policing the world. It is gratifying to have a distinguished majority leader such as we have, who has his feet on the ground, and I compliment him in the use of that word "nonsense," as some of us recall other phrases which have had authoritative background in connection with the position of the United States in world affairs.

Mr. Chairman, some of us cannot help but recall, for instance, that it has not been long since the word "quarantine" was a rather pertinent phrase and that the suggestion was made not only that we should police the world but that we should quarantine the world. It seems to me, if my memory serves me well, that the suggestion was made at another time that our frontier might be somewhere in France; in fact, I believe it was brought down to an exactness that it might be on the Rhine.

We are to be congratulated that the majority leader has his feet on the ground, that he does not endorse either the quarantining of nations or the frontiers in France, but that he refers so aptly, and, oh, with such forthrightness and forcefulness to the policy of policing the world as nonsense. We of the minority join with him in saying that we hope at all times his sound judgment, his deliberate thought, and his careful analysis may be a guiding force in these troublesome times in determining what America's position is to be in world affairs. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

ENORMOUS GOLD SUPPLY

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have the daily statement of the United States Treasury for January 22, 1940, which discloses that we have in gold—and I presume that all of it is buried in the mountain over at Fort Knox, Ky.—the enormous sum of $17,842,210,073.36.

MONEY AND MONOPOLY

The question arises as to what we should do with that gold. To my mind, this administration has dealt with every major problem except two. I do not believe that we have in a satisfactory way dealt with two major fundamental problems: One is a national monetary system, which would involve this gold, and the other is monopoly.

In regard to this gold we are all familiar with the law that 40 cents in gold is sufficient as a reserve for the issuance of $1 in currency or credit—either credit money or actual money. We have always been told by the most conservative bankers and economists in America and in the world that a 40-percent gold reserve is always ample. In fact, England remained on the gold standard for 100 years with no more than a 10-percent gold reserve. So we are safe in assuming that 40-percent gold is certainly a sufficient amount.

If the administration had better control of this gold, our Nation could in a more satisfactory way deal not only with its Budget but with the national debt. We are paying this year $1,100,000,000 interest on Government securities. I say to you it is absolutely foolish and wrong for the Government to pay interest on its own credit. It is not right. In fact, I will go further and say it is imbecilic for the Government to pay interest for the use of its own credit. Farmers and the unemployed are forced to take drastic cuts in appropriations, but no cuts for the bondholders.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD OWN THE 12 FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

The way I have in mind to handle this gold is for the Government to take over the 12 Federal Reserve banks. Many people believe that the Federal Reserve banks belong to our Government now, but they do not. Our Government does not own one penny of stock in these banks. Originally it was contemplated that the Government would own some of this stock, but it has not so far acquired any. The stock in these banks only amounts to $132,000,000, and it is owned by the private banks of the country. This forces us into the very odd situation of having the private banks of this country owning the bank of issue—the Federal Reserve banks—that use the Nation's credit absolutely without charge to promote their own interests. That is a situation we should not be in.

If the Government would pay the private banks the $132,000,000 for this stock, the Government would own lock, stock, and barrel the entire Federal Reserve Banking System and this would remove the cloud from the title to this gold. There is more than enough money in the surplus of the 12 banks to pay the $132,000,000 so the Government would not actually be out a penny.

GOVERNMENT CAN SAVE $1,000,000,000 A YEAR IN INTEREST

There is no reason why anyone should have a cloud on the title of this gold, and that would remove it. This $17,842,000,000 gold base is a sufficient amount to pay off the entire national debt of this country. I think it could be done, not quickly, not hurriedly, but eventually. If we will take over the 12 Federal Reserve banks and own them as the Government should, we can gradually acquire the entire national debt and save $1,100,000,000 a year in interest. It is wrong for the Government to pay interest on its own credit, absolutely wrong, and it is not justified. I believe that is the best way to handle the gold situation.

GOOD PRICES AND GOOD WAGES

I think some people fail to consider the effect of money upon our entire economic life. I believe in order to have a prosperous country we must have good prices and good wages. There is only one way we can assure ourselves that we will have those two necessary things, and that is by having an ample supply of money and credit.

The demand deposits in the banks really represent the money of this country, not the actual bills or the silver. The bills and the silver represent only about 5 percent of the money in this Nation. The demand deposits in the banks represent our money. I know it is pencil-mark money, I know it does not actually exist, that it is a fiction, but nevertheless it is used just as well and just as effectively as actual money.

PER CAPITA MONEY BY STATES

If you will take the demand deposits in banks and divide them by States you will discover that the per capital deposits run all the way from $500 plus in New York down to below $30 in Mississippi and South Carolina; in other words, there are States in this Union that do not have more than $25 per capita money in circulation in their States. If you will then consider the purchases made by people, food, apparel, general merchandise, and building materials, and other durable goods, also luxuries such as jewelry, you will discover that the amount of these necessities and luxuries of life that are purchased by the people in these States has a direct relationship to the amount of money and credit that is available in these States. In a State where there is $300 to $400 per capita in circulation the people purchase more food, more clothing, more general merchandise, and more building materials, and even more jewelry than they do in a State having one-half of that amount.

Knowing this to be true, and knowing that our standard of living is determined largely by the amount of available credit, we should do something to give the people a necessary and sufficient circulating medium, and I believe the way to do it is through the ownership of the Federal Reserve Banks.

BLANKET MORTGAGES

It was never intended that the private banking institutions of this country should have the privilege of issuing blanket mortgages against the property of our citizens, a blanket mortgage against everything we own, and charging us interest for creating a mortgage upon our own property. It is not right, it is idiotic; and certainly the time will come one of these days in this country when this system will be changed.

I think the result of this change would be that we would have better prices for farmers. I believe it is necessary to bring back the farmer's purchasing power. I am sorry that more of the city Members do not realize more than they do the necessity for bringing back the buying power of the American farmer. Many of them realize it and they vote with the farmers all time time, not necessarily to help the farmers but to help themselves. Members who live in New York City and Boston and other places realize that we must help the farmer in order to have a market for the goods they manufacture. The last time we had under consideration in the House the question of parity payments, we won by a majority of eight, a very close vote. I want to appeal to the city Members to consider that question and consider the great weight it will have on the future prosperity of this country.

ORGANIZED CHARITIES IN CITIES

I know some question came up about relief and there was a difference of opinion among the Members about relief, but let me invite the attention of my good friends from the city to the fact that it will not help you to deprive the farmers of a decent standard of living, it will hurt you.

In this country today we have organized charities in the cities. The people are not going to starve in the cities, and the people of this Nation know it. When people who live in the country districts where they do not have organized charities get in distress and are turned off their farms they are eventually going to drift into the cities, and you will have that additional problem. You can provide for these people much better by keeping them on the land where they really want to live. It is in their interest; it is in the interest of the cities, and it is in the interest of this Nation that you do so. There is only one way you can keep them at home, and that is by giving them an opportunity to earn a livelihood for themselves and their families. It will take money, but not as much as it will take if they are forced to go on relief in the cities.

The saddest day the people of the cities will see in this country will be when all benefits are cut off from the farmers, because there is only one place for them to go, and that is to the nearest city where there is organized charity; and they will go from that city to a larger city, and then drift into Washington, New York, and Chicago, the largest cities of this country. So it is in the interest of the Members who reside in the cities to do something toward helping the farmers stay on the land, and helping them to make a living. All they are asking for is an opportunity to work and earn a sufficient amount to provide themselves with a decent standard of living.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BROOKS. In my opinion, the gentleman is making a scholarly address. I hope every Member of the House reads it, and digests it very carefully. I believe the gentleman is absolutely correct with reference to the farmers. With 33,000,000 people in this country living on farms, we cannot hope to have any semblance of prosperity unless the farm is prosperous.

Mr. PATMAN. I thank the gentleman for what he has said. He is exactly right about prosperity of the Nation depending upon the prosperity of the farmers.

MONOPOLY

Now, in regard to monopoly, the other problem, I think, is a serious one. The Federal Trade Commission has recently finished an inquiry into the motor-vehicle industry. This report, made by the Federal Trade Commission, is astounding; it is startling. It discloses that if one concern, General Motors, were to withdraw permission from competing manufacturers to use General Motors parts and patents, no automobile in America could be made—not one—not even by the Ford Motor Co., as they are made today. They are absolutely dependent upon that one concern for its parts and patents to make the cars that they are making and delivering at this time. You know that is too much of a monopolistic grip for one concern to have upon the automobile industry of this country, and it is not only in the automobile industry; it is in other lines of business, and it all comes back to the question of concentration of wealth in the hands of a few people.

SHARE PRIVILEGES AND OPPORTUNITIES

The people of this country are not asking for a division of wealth or to share the wealth. They are not asking for that, but they are asking for sharing the privileges and opportunities, giving them an opportunity to work and earn a livelihood for themselves and their families, and the people all over the Nation cannot do this if we permit a few people in one city to acquire all the privileges and opportunities and have all the money concentrated there.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 5 additional minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. If we continue to allow a few people to drain the wealth of the country into one section, we are going to harm the country more. We thought when the Federal Reserve Act was passed in 1913 that that would cause a distribution of credit and money, but it has not caused a distribution of credit and money, and during the past 12 months there has been the greatest concentration of money into the hands of a few people, who own a few banks in one city, that has ever existed in the history of the entire Nation.

Did you know that 24 banks own one-third of the banking resources of the 15,000 banks in America? Well, that condition exists and a few men who are directors in those few banks have interlocking relationships with the large corporations which enable them to control 58 percent of the corporate wealth of the entire Nation.

Shall we permit this concentration to continue on as we have in the past and encourage and cause one State to have $500 of per capita demand deposits, another $400, and another $300, while in other sections of the country where they actually produce the food and fiber to feed and clothe all the people of this country, they only have $20 or $25 per capita demand deposits, which represents the money or the circulating medium? That is an unequal situation; it is a situation that is not equitable and it is one that must be adjusted.

You take the book that was written by Dr. Webb, of Texas State University, Divided We Stand; that book discloses that a few concerns are draining the wealth from the South and from the West and other sections to northeastern centers, and by reason of that concentration these per capita demand deposits go up, but the per capita deposits in the towns and States where this wealth is drained from go down, which, of course, reduces the standard of living of the people in those sections in proportion. This situation will in the end harm the section of the country obtaining control of more than its part of such deposits.

I want to plead with the Members from the cities to give this question consideration. You cannot afford to fail to give the American farmer an opportunity to work for and earn a decent standard of living, and before this session is over I hope that we make adequate appropriations for the farmer, not only to pay him, but to give him adequate purchasing power to help people in other classes and groups and in all sections of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GERLACH].

Mr. GERLACH. Mr. Chairman, on the subject of appropriations for the Post Office Department there is one postal item to which I wish to direct the attention of the Members of the House. This item is that paragraph reading:

Not more than three-fourths of the funds herein appropriated for the purchase of twine shall be expended in the purchase of twine manufactured from materials or commodities outside the United States.

This paragraph was inserted into the Post Office Department appropriation measure, passed by the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress and is continued as a furtherance of the experiment in this present bill.

We have been told by the gentleman from Indiana that the use of cotton twine has proven itself equally serviceable with that of jute twine in this field. I say to you that this is a fallacy, for it has been brought to my attention by post-office employees in my home district that cotton twine stretches and, therefore, is not quite safe in tying up packages, and it also, in the course of stretching, cuts the hands of those using it. Thus, we may see that cotton twine is detrimental in two distinct ways.

It is true enough that we were shown on the floor of the House at the time this paragraph was first inserted into the post-offices' appropriations measure a new cotton twine guaranteed neither to stretch nor to cut the hands of the employees who used it. Yet each time the Post Office Department, in 1939, asked for bids on the new type of cotton twine on the basis of which this proviso was inserted, not a single bid was received. In fact, on each of the seven bids the postal authorities asked during the year 1939 for cotton twine on only three occasions were bids on cotton forthcoming. And all of these three were bids on the old-type cotton twine, which is the stretching, cutting kind.

Far more important than this, I say to you, is the fact that just such legislation as this is running the cost of our Government far above normal. This proviso caused the buying last year of 360,000,000 yards of cotton twine by the postal authorities, and this cotton twine cost the Government 159 percent more per million yards than did jute twine. This meant, in actual figures, an added expenditure of $35,000 to the Post Office Department, a sum which was spent needlessly and might have been saved with the continued use of jute twine.

Some of you may say that the purpose of this purchase of cotton twine was to aid American industry. I say to you that I am sincere in my beliefs that our first thought is for American-grown and American-made products, and I will fight to see any wholly American product given preference over that of foreign competition. But such is not the case with cotton twine. The purchase of the 360,000,000 yards of cotton twine by the postal authorities at the added cost of $35,000 showed no appreciable benefit to our cotton growers or cotton manufacturers. This amount of twine, figured in bales, would reach to about 720 bales net. Out of a 13,000,000-bale crop, this amounts to five one-thousandths of 1 percent. I fail to see where this small figure has done the cotton industry any great amount of good. At this figure the cost of using each bale was approximately $48, or almost the equal of its value. This only serves to further illustrate that under these conditions it is an unsound economic policy to substitute cotton twine for the more serviceable jute twine used heretofore by the postal employees.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GERLACH. I yield.

Mr. PACE. Is it not true that they did ask for two bids this year on jute?

Mr. GERLACH. That is correct. I called the Post Office Department Purchasing Agent and he told me that formerly they had always asked for one bid, but because of the proviso inserted at the last session of Congress, they were unable to receive bids on this new twine which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] presented on the floor of this House and for which there were no bids received. The proviso was that they should buy 25 percent cotton twine, and they were forced to ask for these additional bids. I questioned him with reference to the asking for these additional bids.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GERLACH. I yield.

Mr. PACE. I understood there had been two bids invited and accepted on cotton twine and two bids invited and accepted on jute twine during the fiscal year beginning last July 1.

Mr. GERLACH. The records that I have received show that they were unable to receive bids on this new twine that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] showed Members of the House last year. That was the reason they gave for asking for these additional bids. That is why they have asked for these seven additional bids.

It has cost the American taxpayers not only $35,000, but it has cost them another $64,000 on account of asking for bids in June, September, October, and December.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GERLACH. I yield.

Mr. PACE. In order to make the RECORD complete, could the gentleman insert what it has cost on account of the "Buy American Act"? The law requires the use of American-made goods up to 25 percent. Can the gentleman tell the total that that has cost the Government? Certainly the gentleman favors that provision.

Mr. GERLACH. I favor the provision of buying American goods, certainly, but I do not favor a provision that is going to cost the taxpayers close to $100,000 additional on a purchase of $327,000. That is just what this amounts to. If you had just let me go ahead I would have explained that to you.

Mr. PACE. Pardon the interruption.

Mr. GERLACH. Another point in the inserting of this proviso which has cost our taxpayers an additional sum of money is the fact that, because of the need for purchasing cotton twine, the Post Office Department has been forced to depart from the business procedure of making one purchase of the amount of twine needed for the fiscal year, and last year had to ask for bids at seven different times. If the Post Office, as they had previously done, would have purchased their entire supply of jute twine in June of 1939, the price would have been 11.3 cents per pound for the total amount. Under this proviso, however, they had to divide the bids, and purchase jute again in September when the price per pound had risen to 15 cents, and for the third time in December when the price had risen to 18.3 cents per pound. Thus, by buying at these varied times rather than by one bid, the Post Office Department was forced to pay the additional 7 cents per pound in the cost of jute. This meant an additional cost of $64,200 in the cost of jute borne by the postal authorities in the past year.

When you add this cost, which could have been saved except for the fact of the proviso which necessitates these varied bids, to the $35,000 additional cost of the cotton twine, you will find that this legislation cost our Government, and so cost the taxpayer, the total of $99,200, or almost $100,000, just for the purpose of buying five one-thousandths of our 1939 total of 13,000,000 bales of cotton produced. I say to you that this is a horrible situation to find in a Government which is now preaching economy, and something should certainly be done to remedy it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TABER. I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GERLACH. I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman referred to me a while ago and although I do not think he intended to do so, he left the impression that I had made an incorrect statement in saying that jute and cotton twine are equally serviceable. My authority for that statement is the Post Office Department which administers the law. I refer the gentleman to the testimony on that subject and quote especially from the testimony of Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Purdum, at page 310 of the hearings. Mr. Purdum said:

I feel that we are getting a cotton twine that is entirely satisfactory for our particular use. In other words, I believe that cotton twine is as satisfactory as is jute twine for the Postal Service.

I do not know how there could be any more conclusive statement than that. I would like to say in behalf of our subcommittee, and certainly on behalf of myself, that we want to be entirely fair in this perennial controversy between jute and cotton, but we have here the very positive recommendation of the Post Office Department that for the time being this provision be not disturbed. They would like to go ahead with their experimentation. On page 311, Mr. Purdum says:

We are doing all right under the existing legislation recently enacted by the Congress in this connection.

And he advocates the continuance of it and points out that in the state of international relations existing at this time, there may come a time when the differential in cost will be wiped out, I believe he said in his testimony, because of the difficulty of getting jute into this country.

Now, with all these conditions prevailing as they are at present and with this experimentation only part way, we thought, without taking either side of the controversy, that certainly it was a reasonable course to allow this experimentation to go on for another year. By the end of that time we will no doubt know more definitely just what the situation is, and will be able to act in the light of the circumstances that may be developed at that time.

I thank the gentleman for allowing me to explain.

Mr. GERLACH. I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the subcommittee, that he has been very fair, and when he explained to the Members of the House that he believed that the experiment should be tried for another year, he was sincere. But I say to him on the records that I have before me, that on June 19, 1939, there were bids asked for 160,000 pounds of cotton twine. There was one bidder for the full amount. Again, in June 1939, there was a bid asked for 480,000 pounds of cotton or jute. There were no bids on the cotton. There was one bid on jute. There was a bid asked on September 18, 1939, on 200,000 pounds of new type cotton twine. No bids were received. Also on October 9, 1939, there was a bid asked for 40,000 pounds of the new type cotton twine, and again no bids were received.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GERLACH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PACE. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. GERLACH. Absolutely.

Mr. PACE. Is it not true that that was because the specifications at that time were not proper specifications for the cotton twine, but that in the meantime the Bureau of Standards and the Department of Agriculture at the request of the Post Office Department have worked out specifications for cotton twine which the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General says are just as good as jute, and now bids are being made and are available at any time they are invited.

Mr. GERLACH. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, but let me ask the gentleman, Is the cotton twine that has been furnished in the past year the same twine that the gentleman showed the Members of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. PACE. I will be glad to reply to the gentleman. I cannot tell the gentleman, for this reason: In view of my interest on the floor, I have remained away from the Post Office Department to avoid any idea that somebody might think I was trying to sell twine to somebody. I do not know what twine they bought or whose it is or what it was.

Mr. GERLACH. My information is that it was the old style and not the style that the gentleman showed on the floor.

Let us remember that the manufacture of jute twine, along with other jute products, is an essentially American industry; and whereas the use of cotton twine by the postal authorities is so small an item to the cotton grower, the use of jute twine is a big item to the American jute manufacturer. It is true enough that the source of raw jute is in foreign lands, but I repeat that its manufacture is strictly and wholly American. Let us not, therefore, injure the industry and at the same time cause our Government an unnecessary additional expense of $100,000, without benefit to anyone.

Let us remember also that in the use of the jute twine we are safeguarding that which must be tied in any manner, and safeguarding those who do the tying; for jute, unlike the cotton twine, does not stretch or cut. And at the same time we will not have to stretch our Budget, but we will be able to cut an unreasonable, undesirable expenditure of almost $100,000.

In conclusion, in my judgment it will be well for this Congress to remember that more business in government and less government in business should be our watchword. [Applause.]

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GERLACH. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. I think the gentleman has made a very splendid presentation of a matter of interest not only to his own constituency but to the country at large, and he is to be congratulated for the work he has done.

Mr. GERLACH. I thank the gentleman for his kind words. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, "the American market for the American farmer"; again that is becoming the battle cry of the Nation. It is the God-given right of the American farmer to sell every pound, every bushel, every quart, every ton of farm produce consumed in this country. [Applause.] I appreciate the applause because it proves that the chorus that is being sung and chanted over the entire Nation has a familiar ring; it has the same words and the same music that was played by the piper, Hoover, when he led the American farmers to believe in 1928 that a higher, and higher, and higher protective tariff on agricultural products would solve all the woes, all the financial distress, all the ills of the farmers of this country. The golden calf of 1928 leading the farmers out of the wilderness was the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill. By the time the glittering gold of the new idol was revealed to the Nation in 1930, the farmers realized that the promise to raise the rates on agricultural products alone had been broken—that rates on all the products that the farmers buy had been pushed to newer and dizzier heights.

Economists, too numerous to mention, have attributed to the Hawley-Smoot tariff and its prohibition of foreign trade the start of the downfall of world economies. The Democratic Party, pledged to a fair and equitable reduction of the tariff, put into operation a system of reciprocal-trade agreements granting trade concessions to those countries that agreed to take down barriers that had been erected in retaliation to the Hawley-Smoot tariff.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

In a world torn by war and bitterness, hatred, and armament exhaustion, reciprocal-trade agreements stand out as the only movement in the world—the only legal machinery—geared to bring peace, understanding, and prosperity between nations. I do not pretend to possess a knowledge of all the products, both agricultural and manufactured, that have been affected by the reciprocal-trade agreements. But, as a cattleman, I would like to discuss briefly the effect the agreements have had on that industry.

But let me pause here and take up the effect on other farm products. It is definite that the American farmer today has, and for the last 4 years under the reciprocal-trade agreements has had, 99 percent of the pork market; 99½ percent of the market for all dairy products has been supplied by the American farmer, and 95 percent of the beef market has been supplied by the American beef producer, even when you consider canned corned beef and other canned-beef products. If you do not consider canned-beef products, which really should not be considered, the American farmers are supplying 97½ percent of the beef market for the Nation.

This week Mr. F. E. Mollin, secretary of the American National Livestock Association, appeared before the Ways and Means Committee armed with a resolution passed by the American National Livestock Association. This resolution reads:

Resolved, That we are definitely opposed to an extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act.

Mr. Mollin stated the American National Livestock Association has a membership of between 1,500 and 2,000 cattlemen. I will not question this statement but I seriously question that the cattlemen of the West wholeheartedly endorse the resolution opposing the continuation of the Trade Act and certainly I seriously contest the fact that Mr. Mollin represents the thoughts and convictions of a majority of the western cattle producers. Allow me to quote from Mr. Mollin in his statement before the committee:

But I do feel as far as all industry is concerned, the rates that we got under that tariff act

Referring to the Hawley-Smoot Act—

Were the most equitable we have ever had.

In other words, Mr. Mollin has put the American cattle raisers that he represents on record as, first, opposing the continuation of the reciprocal-trade treaties and, second, returning in toto to the rates of the old Hawley-Smoot tariff.

Let us see what has been done in regard to cattle under the trade treaties. Has the duty on live cattle been repealed? No. Has the duty on canned beef even been reduced? No. It still stands at 6 cents per pound. And right here let me digress a minute to talk about the President's famous statement when the Navy made a purchase of 45,000 pounds of canned corned beef from the Argentine Meat Producers Co-op. In the first place, 45,000 pounds of corned beef is about enough for two Sunday night suppers for the Navy. The purchase price for the Argentine beef was 9.73 cents per pound. The lowest domestic bid for a similar quantity was 23.61 cents per pound. This meant a net saving on two meals for the Navy of $6,246. But regardless of the economy involved, many people held up their hands in horror because the President said Argentine canned corned beef is better. The truth of the matter is their canned corned beef is better.

It is better for the very good reason that because of the great surplus of beef raised in the Argentine they are able to take the choice cuts, the loins, and the ribs, the very finest pieces of beef and make it into corned beef, place it in cans, and send it to this country. I hope the day never comes when beef becomes so cheap in this country that we can afford to put those choice cuts into cans and sell them at the price Argentine corned beef sells for in this country, which is about 15 to 20 cents per pound. The choice cuts of beef in this country today sell for about 65 cents per pound, as you will find by going to the corner grocery. They cannot put beef of that quality into cans and sell it in competition with the Argentine product. Argentine corned beef is actually a noncompetitive product. People do not go on a corned beef diet. One has corned beef once or twice a month. It is more or less of a delicacy. The only beef that the American packer puts into cans is that cheap grade of canners' cows, which certainly does not make a very edible product. If there is such a thing as a noncompetitive agricultural product, certainly South American canned beef belongs in that category. To me the fanfare, the beating of breasts, the tearing of hair, the lamentations of all those who accused the President of selling the farmer down the river for South American friendship, is a smoke screen. A smoke screen to hide the real intent and purpose of those who oppose all reciprocal-trade treaties, all farm programs, and wish to again bamboozle the farmer with the old shell game practiced for years by the Republican Party. The shell game that kept the farmer looking for the pea under the shell that would bring him actual farm relief. The label on every shell the farmer looked under was the high protective tariff.

I am sorry to have digressed and I want to return to what has happened to the cattleman under the reciprocal-trade treaty. First, let me explode a popular misconception. The importation of dressed and chilled beef is not under consideration in any trade treaty. The sanitary pact with the Argentine prohibits the importation of any fresh beef. This sanitary pact which prohibits the importation of dressed beef cannot be repealed in a reciprocal-trade treaty. It is subject to revision by the United States Senate only.

Regarding the importation of dressed beef about which you have heard so much, and to show what the situation is, I want to read a letter I received today from Secretary of State Cordell Hull, and I call attention particularly to the last paragraph of the letter. The letter reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 25, 1940.

The Honorable PHIL FERGUSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERGUSON: I have received your letter of January 22, 1940, and I am pleased to confirm your impression that there is no relationship between the proposed Sanitary Convention with Argentina and trade agreements.

No trade agreement entered into with any foreign country has affected or in any way relaxed the laws governing sanitary regulations and inspection of food products imported into the United States. As a matter of fact, it is customary to include in trade agreements a provision making clear that sanitary measures are not affected. For example, article XII of the present trade agreement with Canada reads in part as follows:

"2. Subject to the requirement that, under like circumstances and conditions, there shall be no arbitrary discrimination by either country against articles the growth, produce or manufacture of the other country in favor of the like articles the growth, produce or manufacture of any other foreign country, the provisions of this agreement shall not extend to prohibitions or restrictions * * *
"(b) designed to protect human, animal or plant health or life * * *"

Substantially similar provisions are included in other trade agreements.

In response to your question concerning chilled and frozen beef, no concession has been granted on these products in any trade agreement so far concluded nor is any concession under consideration.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

So all the conversation dealing with the importation of chilled fresh beef depressing our market is out of the window, it is not under consideration, nor has any reduction in the duty or any privileges been extended to fresh or chilled beef.

We have taken chilled and dressed beef out of the picture. Canned beef is not competitive because we cannot commence to produce it as cheap as South America. It pays a 6-cent duty. Fresh beef is not now and cannot be considered in a trade treaty. This limits our consideration to the importation of live cattle.

Under the Canadian treaty, considering the lowest tariff of 1½ cents per pound on a limited quota of 225,000 cattle, we still have in effect a stiff duty. To show you how figures may be twisted to prove a point, to prove the old adage, "The devil can quote scripture for his purpose," I can tell you that the imports of cattle have increased from 392,000 in 1936 to 716,000 in 1939. If I stopped there you would reasonably assume that all this increase of cattle came into the United States because of the reduced tariff rate. The truth of the matter is that of the 716,000 that came into this country in 1939, 398,000 paid the full tariff rate of 1930, 2½ cents per pound. The balance paid the rate of from 1½ cents to 2 cents. I want to make this statement, that under the reduced tariff this country still has one of the highest tariffs on cattle in the world. Certainly the tariff on all grades would figure at least 25 percent on an ad valorem basis. Let us see what the tariff has been on the class that come in under the reduced rate of 1½ cents. In 1936, these cattle paid a tariff of $19.21 per head; in 1937, $19.68 per head; in 1938, $18.96 per head; and in 1939, $14.54 per head; between $15 and $20 per head duty paid at the reduced rate. Certainly only a very healthy domestic-cattle market would make it profitable for these cattle to pay this duty and come into this country. The margin is very narrow and certainly a slight reduction in our domestic market would make it unprofitable to ship cattle into the United States. The quota which limits the importation at 1½ cents to 225,000 cattle adequately protects this Nation from an influx of cattle that would break our market. No more than 60,000 can come in in any 3-month period. Our market can always assimilate this number. In regard to the cattle that come in at the old 1930 rate of 2½ cents per pound, the class of cattle weighing between 200 and 700 pounds, none of these cattle come in for slaughter. They are hauled in on American railroads, grazed on American pastures, fed American grain. In reality they are the raw material from which beef is made. They pay American taxes and can come in under this heavy duty of 2½ cents per pound only when the American cattle industry is prosperous.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Is it not a fact that the American National Livestock Association resolution read that they were opposed to the extension of the reciprocal-trade agreement unless it contained a provision for Senate ratification?

Mr. FERGUSON. No; not at all.

The resolution reads:

Resolved, That we are definitely opposed to an extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act; and (b) that, if said act is extended, it be only on the condition that all new agreements thereunder and extensions of existing agreements be ratified by the Senate in the manner provided by the Constitution.

I refuse to yield further. I have to finish this.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is making an excellent speech and I wish the gentleman would yield to me so that I might aid him. Will he yield for a question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I decline to yield.

These stock cattle in the class between 200 and 700 pounds pay an average duty of $10 per head. In many cases, this represents a duty of 100 percent. Cattle imported into the United States since January 1, 1936, have paid an aggregate duty of $23,600,000 on a total of 1,900,000 cattle, over $10 per head considering all classes. Cattle are not exactly on the free list.

I wish to insert at this point in the RECORD a table showing the duty paid on various classes of cattle, as follows:

This table shows:

First. Imports of beef cattle, since the first trade agreement with Canada went into effect January 1, 1936, have paid tariffs averaging $5,906,424 a year and totaling $23,625,698 in that period.

Second. The reduced tariff rates applicable to the annual quota—225,000 head—of cattle weighing more than 700 pounds each, has resulted in a duty ranging from $14.22 per head in 1938 to $19.21 per head in 1936. The reduced tariff rates applicable to the annual quota—100,000 head—of calves has resulted in a duty that has ranged from $2.21 per head in 1937 to $2.52 per head in the first 11 months of 1939.

Third. In 1937, 1938, and 1939 more cattle paid the tariff rates fixed in the Tariff Act of 1930 than have been imported at tariff rates reduced under trade agreements.

Fourth. The class of cattle showing the greatest increase in imports—cattle weighing from 175 pounds—200 pounds in 1939 to 700 pounds—has not had its tariff rate reduced in any trade agreement.

I can say without fear of contradiction that the increased consumption of beef has more than taken care of the entire importations of beef. Since 1932 the per capita consumption in the United States on beef has increased from 42 to 54 pounds. Taking 10 pounds per person on 120,000,000 people would be 1,200,000,000 pounds increase in the consumption of beef since 1932. The greatest importation of beef has occurred this year and, considering dressed beef and canned beef this year, you have an importation of some 476,000,000 pounds of beef.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, the cattlemen feel like they have already made their concessions. I am not advocating any new concessions, but I do feel we should now have the privilege of enjoying the increased consumption of beef caused by new industrial activities. I know a majority of the farmers, a majority of the cattlemen, are not ready to join Mr. Mollin in his Republican doctrine of defeating reciprocal-trade treaties and returning to the Hawley-Smoot tariff of 1930. The cattlemen have made their concessions. We are now in a position to benefit from increased trade, which means more wage earners, which means greater consumption of beef, which means continued good prices for our beef products.

Certainly no thinking man who has enjoyed the prosperity of the cattle business the last 4 years wants to trade cheap money, industrial activity, high beef consumption, sound banks, restored ranges, ponds, lakes, and water development, all the many blessings that the cattlemen have enjoyed, which is reflected in the bank balances of the man engaged in the cattle business, for that golden calf, that mess of pottage, the Hawley-Smoot tariff that Mr. Mollin would have us substitute, for all the efforts that have been made on behalf of the farmer and cattlemen by this administration.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON].

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] made an address in this House in which he urged that at least half of the first-day Mark Twain commemorative stamps should go on sale in Hartford, Conn., instead of Hannibal, Mo. I got to thinking about Mark Twain—which took me a long way back—and the conclusion I came to was that Connecticut should have all the Mark Twain stamps.

Samuel Langhorne Clemens was born in the village of Florida, Monroe County, Mo. Monroe County adjoins Ralls and Marion Counties, and he later lived in Hannibal, in Marion County. In those three counties of Monroe, Ralls, and Marion, lived the most rugged and substantial citizens of Missouri in the period immediately preceding and during the Civil War. They were largely natives of Virginia, Kentucky, and Tennessee, who had come to Missouri to make their homes.

MISSOURI A BORDER STATE

Missouri was a border State during the War between the States. It produced great characters. General Grant was a resident of St. Louis prior to the commencement of the conflict. General Sherman likewise was a resident of St. Louis before the war, as well as after the war. The great Frank Blair, a Kentuckian by birth, also lived in St. Louis at that time. St. Louis was about 100 miles distant from the counties of Monroe, Ralls, and Marion. The feeling was very tense in Missouri in those days. The partisans on both sides treated the involvement most seriously, and their actions and words bespoke their candor and sincerity.

COL. LOUIS H. WATERS

I can best illustrate the type of Missourian who took part in the Civil War by recounting an anecdote concerning Col. Louis H. Waters, a great lawyer and a fine soldier, who served on the Union side. Colonel Waters never hesitated to speak his sentiments. Most of the men of his day are dead and gone, but he typified the group that Mark Twain associated with a little bit during the war. Whether they were Confederate or Union soldiers, they were sincere in their convictions, they were fearless, and they were plain-spoken.

Colonel Waters had been a soldier under General Harrison, who afterward became President of the United States. On a visit to Washington the Colonel called at the White House. A secretary who knew him ushered him into President Harrison's presence. When he went into the room the President was writing—and he continued to write. The secretary announced, "Mr. President, Colonel Waters, one of your old soldiers, is here to see you." The President, without looking up and still continuing to write, said, "Well, what do you want?"

Colonel Waters, mindful of the respect due the holder of the highest office of the land, very politely backed away from the President at this curt inquiry. As he backed he said, "I want nothing, sir. Nothing, sir. Not a thing, sir. Not a single thing." Then just as he got close to the door, true to being a real Missourian, he added, "Not a ——— thing at your hands."

Now, that was the type of man and soldier that came from Missouri on both sides of the War between the States. You will see in a moment why I am getting to Mark Twain in this roundabout way. I want to illustrate plainly that he was not of the same kidney as real Missourians.

HENRY NEWMAN

Just one other illustration. At Huntsville, a town in central Missouri, there lived a rugged noble soul by the name of Henry Newman. He served as a soldier in the Civil War on the southern side. At times he was a bit willful, especially if he had taken a drink. It once fell to him, in the later years of his life, to introduce the speaker of the evening at a Democratic rally. The speaker he was to introduce was a very eminent man who had held most of the high offices in the State of Missouri, and who had represented his congress-sional district in the National House of Representatives. He was a high-class gentleman and a polished orator.

Henry took the platform, and he said this:

Ladies and gentlemen, it is my pleasure tonight to present the speaker of the evening. It is a double pleasure for me to introduce him to you. First, he is a member of my political party; and second, he served on the same side I did in the War between the States.

As you all know, I am a Tennessean by birth. You also know that I served 4 years with the Tennessee contingent of the Confederate Army. The gentleman I am going to present to you as tonight's speaker likewise served on the Confederate side. He belonged to what was known as the Home Guards in Missouri and served with a group in his home county, Sullivan, who pledged themselves not to leave the county unless the enemy came. He served 4 years in Sullivan County.

The distinguished citizen never again permitted a speaker to introduce him without first knowing what he was going to say about him.

If there was one thing that a fighting man disliked, it was the so-called Home Guard who did no active service. I asked Henry after the meeting why he had embarrassed our friend in that way. He said it was on impulse. "You know," he said, "we hate the fellows who gave lip service without taking active part." That was the feeling of all who were involved on both sides.

MARK TWAIN AS A SOLDIER

As I listened to the address yesterday by the gentleman from Connecticut I could not help but think of Mark Twain in connection with his service as a soldier during the Civil War.

Mark Twain ridiculed everything and everybody. One of the special objects of his derision was religion. As a young man he was a sort of a tramp printer, going about from place to place. When the call to arms came, he was living in Hannibal. Col. Jack Burbridge, of Pike County, organized the Confederate forces in that portion of Missouri. A meeting was held at Hannibal for the purpose of enlisting men to fight for the Confederacy. The colonel took charge of the meeting, which was well attended. Among those who were there on that night was Mark Twain. Mark joined the forces and became a lieutenant.

His company had no sooner organized, however, when a fighting Kentucky Democrat, Frank P. Blair, whose brother, Montgomery Blair, was the Postmaster General in Lincoln's Cabinet, organized four regiments in eastern Missouri, composed largely of the German population of St. Louis, and offered these regiments to the Union cause. These soldiers gave contest to Colonel Burbridge and his forces in northern Missouri. Colonel Burbridge met them, and so did Mark Twain—for a few moments only. Mark Twain met them; and, as someone said, a Minié ball came whizzing past his ears, and he started running. He ran; and, oh, how fast he did run. He never stopped until he got to Keokuk, Iowa. Colonel Burbridge fought 4 years in the Southern Army; Mark Twain about 4 minutes.

New London, Ralls County, Mo., was where Mark Twain took the oath of allegiance to the Confederacy. New London, Ralls County, Mo., was where he deserted. He was 26 years old when he took the oath. He was 26 years old when he deserted. It was all done in the year of our Lord 1861. "He walked right in, turned around, and he walked right out again."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. I take it the gentleman from Missouri would be just as well satisfied if the Mark Twain commemorative stamp were put on sale elsewhere?

Mr. SHANNON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I hope the gentleman will make his sentiments known to the Postmaster General. It might help.

Mr. SHANNON. Mark Twain reached Keokuk; and when he reached there, as he said afterward, he met an old lady who was an abolitionist, and she convinced him that that was the right side. Notwithstanding that he was convinced, he did not enter the ranks of the other side, you understand; he knew he might be shot on the other side just as well. So he continued on his marathon race until he got to Virginia City, Nev., where he was safe from any attack of any kind whatsoever. And there he stayed until the war ended—until a year and a half after the war ended. He was taking no chances. He wanted to be sure the war was over for good—no resumption.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is making a most interesting address. I yield him 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SHANNON. These men I speak of—these contemporaries of Mark Twain—I knew. They were the salt of Missouri. They were the salt of the Democratic Party. They never flinched anywhere. Mark Twain not only flinched; he ran—fast and furious. When the test came he was a dismal failure as a belligerent. I am pleased at this opportunity to speak about Mark Twain's war record.

CONFEDERATES RE-FORM DEMOCRATIC PARTY

After the war was over those faithful Burbridge soldiers of the Confederacy came back home, and under the leadership of Frank P. Blair, a Union man—they were all Democrats—re-formed the Democratic Party and they continued as such.

Let me read from Edgar Lee Masters' Mark Twain:

He had no real political principles. If he had, he would never have joined the Confederate Army and deserted from it.

The Missouri boys who enlisted with him in the Confederate Army could in time overlook his becoming a deserter. They could overlook his becoming a Republican. Edgar Lee Masters records that after Twain moved to Hartford he became a Tory; even that they could overlook. His "desouthernizing" himself, that too they could overlook. But it was too much to ask that they forget or forgive that Mark Twain, Missouri-born of a Virginia father and a Kentucky mother, consorted with those who laid the heavy and brutal hand of the oppressor upon the southern people in the days of reconstruction. That, they could not forget. That, they could never forgive.

This is the man whom this Nation intends to honor by putting his likeness on a stamp.

In conclusion, let me cite what my good friend, Capt. Billy Ely, company commander of the Burbridge Brigade, and a close and intimate friend of the late Champ Clark—a man among men—said in reply to Mark Twain's bit of sarcasm:

When I withdrew from those Missouri "Bumpkins and Rustics," the Confederacy fell.

Captain Ely said in reply with all the dignity of a soldier:

We went to war. We remained at war for 4 years. We came back home. I can say to my fellow Missourians that we had but one coward in our whole group, and his name was Samuel L. Clemens.

[Here the gavel fell.]

[Applause.]

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, now that the American people are finally beginning to awaken to a realization of the serious part that our muddled money and finances are playing in this economic distress, I think it behooves every Member of Congress to do everything he can to aid and encourage the dissemination of information relating to this problem.

From the testimony given by Mr. Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, it is evident the administration wants the debt limit raised to $50,000,000,000.

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. JOHNSON] asked this question of the Secretary of the Treasury:

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Do you care to express an opinion as to whether or not you think it advisable to go beyond the $45,000,000,000 limit? I mean so far as the Appropriations Committee is concerned.

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Yes; I think it should be raised to $50,000,000,000.

Mr. LUDLOW. Is that your idea of the ultimate debt limit?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. No.

Mr. LUDLOW. Do you think that the obligations might even go higher than that?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Anything might happen, and if it was up to me I would recommend, and am willing to say so, that the debt limit should be raised to $50,000,000,000.

Mr. McLEOD. Beyond $50,000,000,000 would you say it would be a dangerous limit?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. I would consider that as we went along. Say, at $49,000,000,000 I would take another look at it.

Mr. McLEOD. By danger, do you mean that it would naturally be followed by unlimited inflation? Would you be afraid that inflation would follow? Beyond $50,000,000,000 would there be a danger of inflation?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. I am willing to say now, gentlemen, that there is no particular danger involved if Congress would raise the debt limit to $50,000,000,000. Beyond that I would not venture an opinion.

Of course, the fact is that Secretary Morgenthau has no more idea where the danger point is than the man on the street. These things are entirely unknown and will only be comprehended when the fateful time comes and everybody realizes that confidence in our credit is gone.

From this it is clear that the administration wants another raise of the debt limit; this time of $5,000,000,000.

Under the present bookkeeping policies of the Treasury, that amount would perhaps be sufficient to keep the people chloroformed for about another year.

Should there be any doubt in anyone's mind that our Federal expenditures are now out of control? After 10 years of unremitting extraordinarily heavy annual deficits such as no peacetime, free nation that I know of ever experienced, why should it not be sun-clear to everybody that these expenditures are now out of control?

The American people had better wake up, and that quickly, to a realization of this danger. Too long already we have permitted ourselves to be narcotized with the false hope that somehow and somewhere the Budget will be balanced and all will be well. That medicine will not relieve our pains much longer. The hard realities of our political follies and messing are now upon us. The limit of political tampering with the inexorable natural laws of economy, without doing mortal violence to it, has certainly been reached.

It is only by facing the hard reality of our situation that there is any hope whatever of checking the danger and averting something far worse than we have yet experienced.

All about us there is evidence of such a nature and in such volume that even the most blind should be able to see. The appropriation measure before us carries an item of $500,000 for transportation of bullion and coin, which brings up the gold-buying program. Mark Sullivan, in his column in the Washington Post of January 25, calls it "the golden elephant"—"the Fort Knox folly." I do not know what he means by a "golden elephant" and by "folly." In themselves those terms hardly express the effects this gold-buying program is having upon our economy. No one, of course, can know all these effects, because, as Mr. Sullivan says, no nation ever did a thing of this kind before, so that we have no experience to judge from.

I should like to have the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON], who made an eloquent talk here on reciprocal-trade treaties, listen to this:

But a few things we can figure out. It is certain that the nine or ten billions of gold we received from foreigners in the last 6 years represents that amount of labor, services, and goods that the people of the United States have given away to foreigners, for which they have up to now received not a dime's worth of value. Only when and if this hoard is exported will our people receive any real pay for the things they have exported for this gold.

Considering the fact that we have paid an artificially high price for it and that we can never export it without harm to our own markets, the picture looks pretty dreary.

Is it really supposed that the American people can give away all these billions of dollars worth of goods and not harm our economy?

Take the interest the Government is losing on the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund alone. At 4¼ percent, the rate being paid on some of the Government bonds, we have lost over $500,000,000 since the creation of this monstrosity.

Yet the gold-buying program goes merrily on. And the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, which is used in utter violation of the purpose for which the law created it, is being continued. The law specifically provides that it is to be used to stabilize the exchange value of the dollar. It has never been used for that purpose, and could not be. It is being used to bolster the currency and economy of other nations, and for nothing else.

Perhaps one of the most fallacious beliefs that ever gripped the minds of any legislative body is that the Government can, by legislation, create purchasing power. This belief underlies the continual creation of heavy Federal deficits. There is not a scintilla of evidence that a dime's worth of purchasing power has been created by the Federal Government in the last 10 years. The word "create," according to the dictionary, means "to bring into being; to cause to exist." Where can it be shown that any purchasing power has actually been created?

This fallacy is identical with the one that the Government can create money by stamping something on bits of paper. Indeed, that is precisely, in the final analysis, what is taking place now. The Government is merely coining credit or debt, which is the same thing as the printing of money. In substance, the credit created by the heavy Government borrowing is the same as the continental bills of credit, the French assignats, and the John Law money.

The same thing is happening to us that happened to the French and our colonists in their use of irredeemable paper. No new purchasing power is created whatever, but only the savings and capital of the people are being consumed.

Nor do we need to depend on dialectics to prove this. Taking the figures of the National Industrial Conference Board, we find that the average annual realized national income, adjusted by the general price level, in 1930, 1931, 1932, and the first 3 months of 1933, was $67,000,000,000. During that period about $3,000,000,000 of credit money was created.

The average annual income on the same basis, beginning with April 1, 1933, through 1938, was $67,930,000,000. This is about $930,000,000 more per annum in the latter period of the depression than the former. During the latter period the credit money created was about $15,000,000,000, or three times as much per annum as that of the former period.

On the basis of these figures alone, it is ridiculous to claim that the program of spending is creating any purchasing power whatever. Even if there had been an actual increase of purchasing power, it could not be attributed to the spending. Certainly the economic body must be given credit for still having some normal functions and life.

It is utter folly and short-sightedness to even suppose that the finances of the Government can be got under control with irredeemable paper money. Of course, if we should stop buying gold and do nothing else, it would cause trouble. But we should ask ourselves, What kind of trouble? The only important trouble it would bring would be that our exports would be decreased, which, when analyzed, means that the American people would stop giving away their goods, as they are now doing under the gold-buying program. It would mean that the politicians had stopped fooling the people into believing that they were selling their goods abroad, when, in reality, they are giving them away. This is the only serious effect I can see that would result from a discontinuance of the gold-buying program.

But if the gold-buying program is discontinued and an open gold-bullion market reestablished and the country put back on the gold-coin standard, with all paper fully redeemable, the effect will be the same as that which has always resulted from resumption of specie payment, namely, the revival of all enterprise. [Applause.]

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JOHNS].

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the speech that was made a few moments ago by the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma on the reciprocal-trade treaties. I was interested in that speech because of the things he said that the farmers in this country were getting. You know it makes a big difference if you happen to be on the receiving end and know something about it yourself and do not have to take somebody else's word for it.

For the six and a half or seven years of this administration I have been an operator of farms, and also since 1918. I have an accurate account of what I have been taking in and what has been done to the farmers of this country, and I do not need to take anybody's word as to what you get for the produce or animals that you sell on the farm or the cheese that is produced by the cows on the farm, because I have a complete record of it.

Now, with respect to these reciprocal-trade treaties we have in this country at the present time, I was interested in what the gentleman from Oklahoma had to say, because he stated that the Smoot-Hawley tariff, if I understood him correctly, was the cause of all the economic ills in the world today, and especially in the United States. If that were true, why has not the Democratic Party repealed the Smoot-Hawley tariff law? I do not know whether the people of this country or whether the Members of Congress realize that this "infamous" bill that he has talked about here today is still on the statute books, and 58 percent of its schedules are now in operation, and it is lucky for this country that such a large percentage of its schedules are in operation.

They talk about canned beef coming in here from South America and how good it is. These canned-beef stories remind us of the canned platform of the Democratic Party of 1932, which has been done away with entirely.

We have been handing out thousands and millions of dollars, and even billions of dollars, to the American farmer of this country, and last year the Secretary of Agriculture said that if we did not grant $125,000,000 for the purchase of surplus commodities the prices would go as low as they did in 1932, and if it were not for the war in foreign nations today we would have that situation confronting us now and they would be as low as they were in 1932. The price of hogs today is 5 cents a pound. Do you know what the prices of dairy products are? Do you know that last August the price of butterfat from the cheese factories was down to 28 cents a pound, while in 1928 and 1929 it was as high as 60 cents a pound? This is the situation that confronts us today.

The trade treaties mentioned here are nothing more nor less than free trade. The tariff law is still in effect, but it is inoperative. In 1893 we had free trade, and I am old enough to remember what free trade is.

At that time an old German in my locality figured it out pretty well, I think, when he said, "Naught is naught and figure is a figure, but nothing is coming to Schuster." That is what we have under these reciprocal-trade treaties. They have been dressed up in nice new clothes and called reciprocal-trade treaties, while in reality they are nothing more nor less than the free trade of 1893.

We are gradually going to get away from the situation because the farmers of this country understand they are not getting any place with paying out these billions of dollars by the Government. A few years ago we only had a small number of employees in the Department of Agriculture. We only had small appropriations, less than $100,000,000. Today we have over 100,000 employees in the Department of Agriculture alone and last year we appropriated $1,300,000,000 for the farmers of this country. You can see where they are today. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, at this time, after having spent 4 or 5 weeks working on this bill with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] and other members of the subcommittee, I want to say that I believe the bill represents as satisfactory a cut as we could get under the circumstances in the estimates that were presented to us for the Treasury and Post Office Departments. It is only $11,000,000 in a total of $1,100,000,000, but it is almost entirely a service appropriation and almost entirely one of activities that cannot be cut out. The only way you can really save large sums of money is on bills that are for activities that can be done away with or curtailed.

There were some problems in connection with the bill that still exist. For instance, on October 31, 1939, there were 7,423 so-called emergency employees, paid out of relief funds, doing work in the Treasury Department. They are mostly employed on activities that are created with reference to disbursement, auditing, and procurement work relating to the relief problem. But, nevertheless, there are a large number, probably ten or twelve hundred, who are not engaged at all in relief activities, but who are paid from that roll. That presents a situation where it is absolutely impossible for any committee of the House to supervise and scrutinize properly the rolls that are presented to us by the Treasury Department. I am in hopes that before long we can reach that stage where we will be able to cut from any activity not absolutely strictly relief, in the different departments, all funds that are appropriated for relief purposes. It is about time that we began to do business where we could tell something about it and where the Congress could have the checks that it should have upon relief activities and its appropriations.

Now, in the last year we have gone on buying silver and buying gold, and in the course of the 12 calendar months of 1939 we have added something like $3,000,000,000 in gold to the stocks in the Treasury. This is a menace to our entire economic set-up. It is true that of the $17,000,000,000 of gold in the Treasury only a small part of it, something like two and a half billion, or a little less, is really the property of the United States.

The rest of it is not available to issue certificates against. It is not available for any purpose that the Government has in mind, because certificates are outstanding against that fund to the tune of upward of $12,600,000,000. So the statement that some have made to the effect that all that $17,000,000,000 of gold was available to issue certificates against, or as a sinking fund to protect a large increase in currency, are not correct and they are not based upon the Treasury statement or gold in the Treasury.

We have another situation, the continued purchase of silver. I especially deprecate the continued purchases of foreign silver. As we get that silver into the Treasury at a market price of something like 35 cents an ounce, we are issuing silver certificates against it based on $1.29 an ounce. The result of that is that these silver certificates are issued at nearly 4 for 1; that is, all the value there is back of them is about one-quarter of the face of the certificate. So that situation is growing more and more acute as we continue to buy large quantities of silver. The purchase of silver should at least be confined, regardless of whatever other position one might take, to domestic-mined silver.

There is an especially acute condition in the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department. They have 400 employees there who are paid from the relief rolls, who are devoting themselves entirely to other things—to the regular activities of that Procurement Division. Frankly, I have always thought, and I still think, that the Procurement Division is more of a menace than it is a help to the governmental organization. They enter into contracts with different people on competitive bids to supply any quantity that different departments of the Government may ask along certain lines of commodities. Then the departments make a practice of going on and buying on those contracts. The result of that operation is that largely they pay more money for the commodities than they would if they were advertising for any substantial, definite quantity themselves. They avoid, in effect, the operation of that statute which requires that departments buy their commodities upon competitive bidding. I think that outfit requires a great deal more careful study and a great deal more reorganization than the Appropriations Committee, in the time it can give to such an organization, can allow. I think that the proper committees of this Congress should go into that question thoroughly and should revamp and revise that outfit, doing away with a very large portion of its operations. Cut it down. I think it would save the Government money.

I want to call attention to another thing that has not particularly to do with the bill but which to my mind is quite significant.

On page 229 of the Treasury Department hearings there appear the amounts of the exports and imports for the fiscal years beginning in 1923 and ending in 1939. Those figures indicate that in the period from 1925 to 1929, when we had a high protective tariff and the people of our country were employed and busy and had money in their pockets to spend, the imports of this country ranged from $4,147,000,000 up to as high as $4,400,000,000. Most of those imports were not competitive imports, but because people had money with which to buy they were buying noncompetitive foreign products; whereas, in the years from 1935 to 1939 the imports run from $1,700,000,000 to $2,900,000,000, and for the year 1939 they were $2,094,000,000.

What does this mean? It means that a larger volume of competitive imports came in not as a result of the reciprocal-trade agreements in 1935-39. We have not so much imports in toto, and the reciprocal-trade agreements do not promote foreign trade, but stifle it, because they destroy the purchasing power of the American people.

I now want to call your attention to a matter that, to my mind, is very important, something that was developed in the hearings. I call attention to the testimony of Mr. Irey, for many, many years the head of the Secret Service Division of the Internal Revenue Bureau, with reference to the Louisiana cases. I am not going to read all of his testimony, but shall read a little of it:

Mr. TABER. Are you familiar with the investigations that we have been hearing about a good deal concerning the Long income-tax matter in Louisiana?

Mr. IREY. Yes. We conducted the investigation. Mr. Burford, who is present, was the agent in charge of that investigation.

Mr. TABER. What was the result of those operations?

Mr. IREY. Quite a number of individuals were indicted who were not tried after the first case. A Mr. Fisher was convicted and sentenced; and then there was a trial of another case, Shushan, which resulted in an acquittal. There were no further cases tried after that.

Mr. McLEOD. What about the head of the university?

Mr. IREY. I was talking about the older cases; they were prior to the case you mention.

Mr. McLEOD. I see.

Mr. IREY. That was back in 1935, and the others were in 1939.

Mr. TABER. Why were not those cases followed up and brought to a conclusion?

Mr. IREY. You are asking me a question, Mr. TABER, that I cannot answer. We made these investigations and made reports to the Department of Justice, which prosecutes these cases. The question as to determination of prosecution is entirely within the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice.

Mr. TABER. Did you complete your investigations?

Mr. IREY. We did complete the investigations of these cases and there had been indictments, I think, in 20 or 25 cases. We had completed our investigations and reported them to the Department of Justice.

Mr. TABER. And you had developed evidence that seemed to you sufficient to warrant convictions?

Mr. IREY. Yes.

Mr. TABER. In 20 or 25 cases?

Mr. IREY. Yes.

Mr. TABER. And what actuated the Department of Justice in easing off in that situation is beyond your ken?

Mr. IREY. It is not within our province.

Mr. TABER. But there was no slip-up so far as your organization was concerned?

Mr. IREY. None that I know of.

Subsequently the Bureau of Internal Revenue successfully disposed of the civil features of these cases before the Board of Tax Appeals.

Mr. McLEOD. That was in the same cases which were not brought to trial?

Mr. IREY. In the same cases.

Mr. McLEOD. And you recovered in the civil action?

Mr. IREY. Yes.

Mr. TABER. How much money was involved in those cases?

Mr. IREY. Mr. Burford can tell you that.

Mr. BURFORD. We have collected about $2,000,000, which includes taxes, penalty, and interest.

I wonder if it would be out of place for me to ask: Where was the Department of Justice? And if we have a Department of Justice, and if it is on the job doing what it ought to do? To my mind, this situation discloses a picture where the Department of Justice has not been on the job. I have known many cases being heard before the Judiciary Committee of this House which were not nearly so bad as this picture which is painted here by Mr. Irey on page 392 of the hearings.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Is that under the caption "Louisiana Purchase"?

Mr. TABER. It is supposed to be the second Louisiana Purchase. [Laughter.] There has been no activity whatever with reference to upward of 20 of these cases, and the fact that in each of these cases the Bureau of Internal Revenue was able to make collections along the line that Mr. Burford suggested indicates they had a good case. I do not know what consideration moved the Government or anyone else to prevent the prosecution of those cases, but I do know that it presents a disgusting and appalling situation when we cannot have and do not have the prosecution of criminals by the Department of Justice where it is perfectly apparent that a good case exists upon which that prosecution might be had and might be carried to a successful conclusion. I do not know of any case within my service in the Congress that to me is more appalling and more disgusting. I think it calls for the most sincere and outspoken action on the part of those in charge of the Government to try and clear up that situation, and I cannot see why the Department of Justice has not been on the job. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired; all time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Refunding internal-revenue collections: For refunding internal-revenue collections, as provided by law, including the payment of claims for the fiscal year 1941 and prior years and accounts arising under "Allowance or draw-back (Internal Revenue)," "Redemption of stamps (Internal Revenue)," "Refunding legacy taxes, act of March 30, 1928," and "Repayment of taxes on distilled spirits destroyed by casualty," $42,000,000: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress by internal-revenue districts and alphabetically arranged of all disbursements hereunder in excess of $500 as required by section 3 of the act of May 29, 1928 (sec. 3776, I. R. C.), including the names of all persons and corporations to whom such payments are made, together with the amount paid to each.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the members of the subcommittee handling this bill to the proviso which begins at line 14 and ends on line 20. That report comes out every year and is referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, of which I am chairman. It lies over there about 30 days, during which time the newspapermen are allowed to come in, look at it, and, if they want to copy anything off of it, they do so. The amounts involved are small. When large amounts are involved, where the Joint Committee on Taxation had to pass on the matter, they are published at the time. Likewise, when the Board of Tax Appeals renders a decision and orders a refund, the facts are published then. You see, there is a duplication to a certain extent.

Mr. Chairman, I believe it would be well for the committee to consider next year the advisability of striking out this proviso. I can see no useful purpose in printing this information, and it costs the taxpayers money to prepare this list. You have the totals of refunds in your hearings; and then again you must remember that while the law provides that the refunds must be published, the law also prohibits any information disclosing the additional amounts that are collected. It so happens that every year the additional amount in taxes, penalties, and interest collected are about 25 or more times as much as the refunds; but when you announce to the public the amount of the refunds and give them no information in reference to the additional collection, they are bound to feel that all the money is going out and nothing coming in. I do not think that the preparation of this list, in view of the important refunds being made public during the year, serves a useful purpose that justifies the expense, and I therefore offer my suggestion to the committee that next year it consider the advisability of leaving out this proviso.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional airplanes: For additional airplanes and their equipment, including radio equipment, spare parts, and accessories, to be constructed or purchased in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, $500,000 ("B" item), to remain available until June 30, 1942.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to propound a couple of queries of the chairman of the subcommittee.

I understand the amount allowed for airplanes in the Budget was something over $2,000,000.

Mr. LUDLOW. That is correct.

Mr. CULKIN. And the committee has cut this to $500,000?

Mr. LUDLOW. We reduced the amount to $500,000.

Mr. CULKIN. I am interested in this item by reason of being a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. The bill authorizing this appropriation was given a full hearing before our committee, and it appears that these new planes were necessary for the protection of the lives of the traveling public.

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to the gentleman that the planes to which he refers in the estimate submitted by the Coast Guard were not asked for that purpose at all. They were asked for enforcement of neutrality and not for the regular operation to which the gentleman refers. In connection with the enforcement of neutrality there is a co-operative arrangement between the Coast Guard and the Navy. The Navy has any number of planes for this service. With this in view and considering the accretions of new airplanes we have regularly been giving the Coast Guard Service, this addition, which would have consisted of eight long-range planes and seven intermediate planes, we felt was not necessary and not justified; so we reduced the amount to $500,000 without any effort to apply the appropriation to any particular type of plane, leaving that to the discretion of the Commandant of the Coast Guard. We respect the gentleman's great interest in the Coast Guard and we assure you of our own interest in that splendid service.

Mr. CULKIN. I may say to the gentleman our committee was very much impressed with the necessity of having a stronger type of plane with a greater cruising radius. The gentleman will probably remember that not long ago one of the Coast Guard planes landed alongside of a tramp steamer to take off a sick man, and as the plane landed in a sea with moderate crest it broke in two. Several men lost their lives. Of course, the committee assumes full responsibility for this deduction. I am not going to offer an amendment at this time.

Mr. LUDLOW. We certainly were very conscientious in giving to the Coast Guard all the planes we thought were justified, and, while we recognize the force of what the gentleman is saying, still there is a bottom to the United States Treasury. We felt that we ought to cut down the expenses, when it can be done with sense and reason. We do not regard such a large number of additional airplanes as essential for the operation of the Coast Guard. That is the view we took of this matter.

Mr. CULKIN. May I say to the distinguished gentleman that the maintenance of an adequate Coast Guard properly equipped is one of the very essential functions of decent, civilized government. It cannot be cut out on any theory of economy. It performs the dual functions of police and fire departments over both oceans and is doing a magnificent job. No one would think of crippling the fire department in his own city. The Coast Guard is in the same category.

Mr. LUDLOW. We recognized that, and we did not deprive the Coast Guard of its necessary facilities. We feel we have been very generous with the Coast Guard.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

When used herein under the heading "Coast Guard," the words in parentheses, "A" item and "B" item, shall mean, respectively, "amounts for or relating to regular activities" and "amounts for or relating to activities pursuant to Executive Order No. 8254, dated September 18, 1939."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to express my gratitude to the committee for the consideration that has been given the Coast Guard station in my congressional district.

As early as June 15, 1936, there appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD my interest in this necessary improvement. Detroit is the fourth largest city in the Nation. The nearest Coast Guard station, and a temporary one at that, is located at Trenton, some 25 miles away. Chicago has three lifesaving stations, Buffalo and Cleveland have one each.

The traffic through the Detroit River is recognized as the greatest water traffic in the world. The necessity for the improvement was apparent to the committee. Accordingly and rightfully so they saw fit to grant this much-needed improvement for which the people of a great city will be most appreciative. Roughly 15,000 pleasure and commercial craft are registered out of the district. These include speed, sail, and small craft. The lake is a winter as well as a summer playground and this, coupled with heavy tonnage and lake transportation, adds to the danger of the situation.

The record further reveals that 170 bodies have been recovered from the waters since 1936. Therefore, the committee is to be congratulated upon its recognition of the facts as they exist and in appropriating the funds to establish the ever-vigilant Coast Guard at the city of the straits.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

This title may be cited as the Treasury Department Appropriation Act of 1941.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the committee before we leave this title if they gave any consideration to cutting out the entire appropriation for the Federal Alcohol Administration. This item appears on page 21 and amounts to $415,000.

Mr. LUDLOW. I can say to the gentleman that, of course, we were acting pursuant to law. This is an activity set up by law. It would have been a pretty drastic procedure for us to have stricken down an institution that has statutory authority back of it. I may say that I believe there is some thought that the Alcohol Tax Unit of the Internal Revenue Bureau might properly extend its jurisdiction and assume those activities, but that is just a desultory thought and it was not given any consideration by the committee so far as striking out altogether the appropriation for the institution was concerned.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think it should have been. How much was the request reduced by the committee?

Mr. LUDLOW. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. O'NEAL. Coming from Kentucky, I probably have somewhat the same viewpoint as has the gentleman about the Federal Alcohol Administration. However, under the law permits have to be issued, and the persons engaged in the industry in the gentleman's district and in my district could not function if there were no funds appropriated to administer the law. Therefore, although the gentleman may have certain opinions about the Federal Alcohol Administration, it was necessary for the purpose of maintaining the industry, at least, to let them exist. The committee made the cut which they felt should be made, and a not excessive one.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota may be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As I said the other day in my remarks in connection with the independent offices appropriation bill, I believe we could well consider cutting out a lot of these administrative commissions and agencies, and this is one of those I have in mind.

I have here a pamphlet which I received yesterday, I believe from Brewery Age. I do not know anything about Brewery Age, but this article is written by Mr. Joseph Dubin, who seems to be somewhat of an authority on this subject of the Federal Alcohol Administration. He evidently is an official or is employed in connection with the brewery business or the distillery business.

Mr. Dubin states that we should eliminate the Federal Alcohol Administration for the reason that its functions, with minor exceptions, are duplications of the functions of other and older departments of the Government, and that the F. A. A. has not demonstrated that it can perform these functions with any greater results than can be and have been produced by the older departments. We could thereby save over $400,000.

He refers specifically to the Food and Drugs Department, a department that has demonstrated its ability to operate with outstanding efficiency. He refers specifically to the Federal Trade Commission as a commission which is duplicating the activities of the Federal Alcohol Administration, and he also refers specifically to the Internal Revenue Bureau and its Alcohol Tax Unit as doing exactly the same things the Federal Alcohol Administration is set up to do. Manifestly we should do away with either one or the other of these overlapping groups.

I shall later ask permission to place this entire article in the RECORD so that Members of the House can read the argument of this man, who is evidently an expert on this subject, probably much more so than any of us, that being his business. I assume he knows what he is talking about. It seems to me he is making a good suggestion, one which we should adopt and carries a good sound line of argument in his article.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. O'NEAL. The gentleman may be making a good suggestion for legislative action, but it certainly would stop the industry entirely were no appropriation made for the activities of the F. A. A. for the year 1941. Until such legislative action is taken, such action as will set up the proper machinery for taking care of the work if the law relating to the F. A. A. is done away with, this object cannot be attained by denying the appropriation. Probably a great improvement could be made, however, by the proper sort of legislation, possibly handling the work as it was handled a few years ago.

Mr. ALEXANDER. May I say that Mr. Dubin in his article makes a very good argument on that subject, as he has covered every important function of the Federal Alcohol Administration.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. May I say to the gentleman that I believe this outfit is totally incompetent. I believe they do not have enough legitimate business to do, so that they are able to spend all their time figuring out how they can spend the last dollar of their appropriation. Last year they had an appropriation of $425,000, and they had it figured down so that they had left of the appropriation only $11, a smaller percentage of balance than any other Bureau or Department of the Government. All they have to do is figure out how they can spend their money. I believe this is a situation which should have a little help from the Congress as far as getting incompetents off the payroll is concerned.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. I believe the gentleman will observe by this time that he has developed a good deal of sympathy for his viewpoint. I may say, however, that what he seeks to have done would have to be done through legislative action. The statute states that the various liquor establishments must have permits to operate, and if this machinery is stricken down and there is no way to obtain permits, I can see no other outcome than the wiping out of the industry. Of course, the gentleman does not have in mind doing that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As I understand from this article of Mr. Dubin's, the only permits involved are for interstate operation, and there is very little of that going on now. Most of the business is intrastate.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. Every establishment has to get a permit to operate.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I still think we should save this money and get along without this commission and many others. [Applause.] I ask permission to insert herewith the article by Mr. Dubin entitled "Save $425,000, Eliminate the F. A. A."

The article is as follows:

[From Brewery Age for January 1940]

SAVE $425,000; ELIMINATE THE F. A. A.

(By Joseph Dubin)

In these days of $8,000,000,000 Federal Budgets and of a $45,000,000,000 public debt, the sum of $425,000 may appear to be relatively insignificant to the executive and legislative branches of our National Government. Nevertheless, at least the former branch, as evidenced by the President's Budget message submitted to Congress on January 4, has placed itself on record as favoring operating economies and consequent reductions in the operating expenditures of the Federal Government provided the reductions do not result in the impairment of vital governmental activities and functions. In his Budget message the President pointed out that reorganization of Government bureaus had resulted in a saving of $11,000,000 in the current fiscal year and the reduction of a similar sum in the Budget for the 1941 fiscal year, adding: "With further readjustment in the machinery and business practices of the Government, additional savings will be realized."

Elsewhere in his Budget message the President, in commenting on that part of the proposed Budget covering the operating costs of the regular departments of the Government, said: "These are down to the bedrock of the activities and functions ordered by the Congress. If further savings are to be made in these operating costs, the Congress will have to direct by statute the elimination of many functions. And even if they should do so, the amount saved in this Budget could only be a small percentage of the total. Therefore, those who call for further cuts should have the courage and honesty to specify where they should be made."

We do not pretend to be familiar with all, or even many, of the phases of Government operation in which further economies are possible. Unquestionably, there must be several places where, as the President said, "readjustments in the machinery and business practices of the Government" will result in savings. However, we are familiar with one phase of Government operation where a saving, substantial in itself even though a small percentage of the total Budget, may be effected without any impairment of essential Government activities and functions. Hence, we offer what we believe to be the constructive recommendation that the Federal Alcohol Administration be eliminated and that the resultant saving of $425,000 annually (the sum allotted to it for the current fiscal year and also recommended by the Budget Bureau for allotment to it during the 1941 fiscal year) be used to reduce the Budget or for national-defense purposes.

Why eliminate the Federal Alcohol Administration? For the reason that its functions with minor exceptions are duplications of the functions of other, and older, departments of the Government, and that the F. A. A. has not demonstrated that it can perform these functions with any greater results than can and have been produced by the older departments.

One function of the F. A. A. is to safeguard the public against false or misleading branding and labeling, a function that is a duplication of a function of the Food and Drugs Department, a Department that has demonstrated its ability to operate with outstanding efficiency.

Another function of the F. A. A. is to safeguard the public against false or misleading advertising, a function that is a duplication of a function of the Federal Trade Commission, a commission that has demonstrated constantly increasing efficiency and activity in eliminating advertising that misleads or deceives the public.

Another function of the F. A. A. is to issue so-called basic permits to manufacturers, bottlers, importers, and wholesalers of alcoholic beverages, except to brewers, a function that is not a duplication of that of another agency. Issuance of permits is conditioned on the fitness of the applicant to become a potential legal member of the alcoholic beverage industries and retention of permits is conditioned upon compliance with the twenty-first amendment and with all Federal liquor laws. Through the threat of permit suspension or revocation the F. A. A. is afforded a weapon with which to assist in the enforcement of the twenty-first amendment, principally as it applies to the movement of liquor across State lines in violation of State laws. During the latest fiscal year, 16 permits were suspended, 1 was revoked, and 23 surrendered due to such violations. However, the Internal Revenue Bureau and its alcohol tax unit have far greater powers to enforce the twenty-first amendment, including the institution of criminal proceedings, whereas the most drastic penalty the F. A. A. may impose is revocation of permits. If the issuance of basic permits is essential to the enforcement of the law, which we doubt, that function could readily be transferred to the Internal Revenue Bureau and joined with the issuance of special tax stamps, a present function of that bureau.

Another function of the F. A. A. is to attempt enforcement of the trade-practice provisions of the F. A. A. Act, provisions which prohibit producers and wholesalers of alcoholic beverages from requiring or inducing a retailer to purchase their products to the exclusion in whole or in part of products of others, by agreement, by having an interest in the retailer's license or premises, by giving or lending things of value, by commercial bribery, etc. We use the term "attempt enforcement" advisedly and in keeping with the admission of the F. A. A. that "the results obtained have not been commensurate with the time and effort expended." The lack of results in enforcing this part of the law is attributed by the F. A. A. to the uncertain language of the section, the F. A. A. requesting the enactment of legislation that would make the prohibited practices "categorically unlawful." However, even if that recommended change were enacted, it would have little, if any, effect on enforcement. That is a fact that the F. A. A. cannot successfully dispute.

It must be remembered that the twenty-first amendment, as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court, gives to the States the supreme power to regulate and control liquor within their respective borders. Hence the jurisdiction of the F. A. A. is limited by the amendment to interstate transactions. Its jurisdiction is further limited to interstate transactions by the language of the F. A. A. Act, and even its jurisdiction in interstate matters is limited with respect to malt beverages unless the State into which the product is shipped has similar prohibitions or requirements on purely intrastate transactions.

Hence, it is clear that even if the trade practices mentioned in the F. A. A. Act were made "categorically unlawful" and the limitation of the F. A. A.'s jurisdiction over malt beverages were lifted, the F. A. A. would still have jurisdiction over only interstate transactions and the interstate shipper would be prohibited from doing things which the intrastate shipper might continue to do lawfully. The interstate shipper would then, in order to be in a position to meet competitive conditions, find it necessary to employ circuitous methods, and circuitous methods that comply with the letter of the law would not be too difficult to discover.

Under the existing interpretation of the twenty-first amendment, it is up to the States to enact and enforce whatever prohibitions they individually deem desirable. It is up to the States to prescribe the type of labeling and branding they will permit on liquors sold within their borders. It is up to the States to decide the extent and the wording of liquor advertising originating within their borders for distribution within their borders. Only on interstate advertising does the F. A. A. have control and then only jointly with another Federal agency. That is, as we have previously pointed out, likewise true in the case of other F. A. A. activities and functions.

Inasmuch as the jurisdiction of the F. A. A. is so limited on many phases of liquor regulation and control and its work on other phases is merely a duplication of work delegated by other laws to older and more experienced agencies of the Government, we sincerely recommend to the President, to his Budget makers, and to Congress the complete elimination of the F. A. A., with the saving of $425,000 to be used for a reduction of the Budget or for more essential Government activities, such as national defense.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOBBS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8068) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a few extracts from a speech made by former Ambassador Gibson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including an address by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] on Maury, Jackson, and Lee, delivered at Confederate Memorial Hall.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the majority leader will tell us at this time what is the program for next week.

Mr. RAYBURN. On Monday, omnibus claims bills will be called. On Tuesday we expect to take up the agricultural appropriation bill. On Wednesday we will call a committee or two on the calendar following the Committee on Naval Affairs, which was called last Wednesday, and on Thursday we will continue the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. D'ALESSANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESSANDRO. Mr. Speaker, there is now pending before this body a bill entitled "A bill to prevent discrimination against graduates of certain schools and those acquiring their legal education in law offices in the making of appointments to Government positions the qualifications for which include legal training or legal experience." This bill has passed the Senate with but one dissenting vote. The debate just prior to its passage will be found on page 9674 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Senate, under date of Friday, July 21, 1939.

The most amazing aspect of this pending bill is the fact that a situation has arisen which makes it necessary. We are but recently emerged from an era of domestic unhappiness and confusion. Under the leadership of our great President, we have been and are now pushing forward on new frontiers. We have won many victories which are apparent to all men regardless of their political affiliations or party loyalties. We have preserved intact the great fundamental liberties found in the Bill of Rights. That this is so, Mr. Speaker, is proof of the fact that democracy still works, at least in America.

To my mind, the heart of these guaranteed liberties is the offer of hope and of promise for the future. To my mind, the fact that any man, however humble his origin, may hope to gain the highest office of our land is an awesome and wonderful thing. That "all men are created equal" and that all shall have equal opportunity to share in the natural abundance of our great country is our American ideal. After a century and a half this ideal has become known throughout the world and is a symbol of America.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the "price of liberty is eternal vigilance," and, accordingly, I now invite your attention to the situation which has made necessary the bill which I have just read.

We all know that the several States of the Union have some means for determining who shall become members of the legal profession. We know that in most instances a board of examiners is set up which requires that certain examinations as to character and intelligence of the applicant must be taken. We have thought that any young man of industry, intelligence, and good character might aspire to become an attorney at law. We have been led to believe that after such a young man has passed his bar examinations and had been admitted to the bar he was then entitled to practice law. We have assumed that he might work to the top of his profession; that he might become a member of the legal staff of the United States Government; that he might become Attorney General of the United States. In short, we have been led to believe that after he was admitted to the bar he might seek employment as an attorney nearly anywhere he might choose.

We have been wrong, Mr. Speaker. We have slept on our liberties and are now awakened to find that while we slept they have been, and are now being jeopardized. At the hearing before the subcommittee of the Committee on Civil Service of the United States Senate held last April and ably presided over by Senator NEELY of West Virginia, evidence was adduced and is set forth in that subcommittee's report, that in the Department of Agriculture, and in the agency known shortly as "wage and hours", numerous instances occurred where candidates for legal positions within that agency and within that Department were denied the privilege of even filing an application as an attorney even though they were members of the bar in good standing. We learn that the solicitor of the Department of Agriculture has issued a rule that no attorneys will be considered for legal positions unless they went to a school approved by the two associations mentioned in the committee's report. On page 31 of the hearing before the subcommittee above referred to, the solicitor of the Department of Agriculture says that he did in fact promulgate such a ruling as to all applicants for legal positions in the Department of Agriculture. On that page and for several pages following, under the questioning of several members of the Senate's Committee on Civil Service he attempted with little or no success to explain his reasons for the discriminatory order.

This situation has actually come to pass and is continuing and will go on unless and until this body does something about it. And, if nothing is done about it, perhaps in a few more years the rules promulgated by that individual will be, that all applicants for legal positions, even though members of the bar of the highest court of their States or of the United States, must have all gone to a certain law school in order to be considered as applicants for a position in any legal department of the Government. And the rule might then well embrace a clause that the attorney should have been born into a well-to-do home, that his father earned the son's way through college and the father belonged to the best and most well-stocked clubs, and had an income of no small means.

Mr. Speaker, my quarrel is not with any law school. Fortunate perhaps is the man who was able to study law at certain law schools. My point is simply that all young men are not able to go to certain law schools. I am thinking of the young man, who, having been forced to work at an early age to help support others in his family, does not find the money nor the time to enter law school until he is perhaps 30 years of age. There are hundreds of thousands of these young men in America. Employed adults who pay their own way through law schools conducted after working hours. We all know dozens of them right on Capitol Hill. Secretaries to Members of Congress, clerks, elevator operators, and the like who are getting their law the hard way in an evening law school. These young men should at least not be hindered if we cannot help them. Their path should not be made more difficult.

These young men would doubtless have liked to have gone to a large full-time university; to have earned an A. B. degree and lived a life of secluded ease and luxury and then have gone on to a full-time law school. They might have been the better for having gone and then they might not. Woodrow Wilson, when he was president of Princeton University, told a graduating class composed of its rich young men:

Most of you fellows are doomed to obscurity. You will not do anything. You will never try to do anything, and with all the great tasks of the country waiting to be done, probably you are the very men who will decline to do them. Some man who has been "up against it," some man who has come out of the crowd, somebody who has had the whip of necessity laid on his back, will emerge out of the crowd, will show that he understands the crowd, understands the interests of the Nation, united and not separated, and will stand up and lead us.

Too often, Mr. Speaker, this happens and Woodrow Wilson spoke a great truth. Let us not, therefore, close the door of opportunity to these hard-working young men and women. Let us not say that we deny our great American ideal of equal opportunity and that it is a thing of the past.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the remarks I made this afternoon an article by Joseph Dubin, which was carried in Brewery Age.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

CIVIL SERVICE—THE ALL-AMERICAN CAUSE

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield for a question. I seem to hear no question; I hear none and, therefore, I shall proceed for 30 minutes unyieldingly—though, I hope, not ungenially.

Mr. Speaker, I harbor the conviction that every politician has at least one speech in him, and I make of myself no exception. I am, however, extraordinarily choice about the subject on which I am willing to commit myself in public, and especially in a forum of such ancient dignity and present competence as the House of Representatives. I do not like to speak on unpopular causes. I am "agin" communism, I am "agin" sin, I am "agin" disunion in nation or party. I am for righteousness and I am overwhelmingly for national unity, for patriotism—and, I may add, for mother and home and heaven. [Applause.]

I am fortified to see that we are agreed upon these fundamentals.

A POLITICIAN IN QUEST OF AN ALL-POPULAR CAUSE

I have been looking for a cause more timely than these, however, upon which I might get the one speech out of me that I think is in me. It has to measure up to the specification that there is not going to be anybody "agin" it. I have been greatly surprised during my sojourn in the House of Representatives to find out how few causes there are that somebody is not opposed to. I thought at one time I would seek an opportunity to speak in behalf of the committee investigating un-American activities, and then I discovered there were 21 Members of this House against that. Certainly I am not going to be caught out on any limb like that, with 21 people against my cause, for I can recall one historic supper, according to ancient and sacred report, from which hardly more than half of that number of people went forth to overturn an empire and themselves to become the seed-sowers of a new justice, both merciful and wise.

I was also afraid to speak upon that measure, though I was happy enough to vote for it, because as I observe the course of American public life, we are extraordinarily slow to honor prosecutors with subsequent opportunities for civic responsibilities. I hope we can save the members of that committee from the fate of later neglect by weaning the committee from prosecution to investigation. With these thoughts in mind, I passed up that fairly popular cause in the interest of finding one very much more popular on which I could exhibit myself.

THE CAUSE FOUND IN CIVIL SERVICE

Rejoice with me, Mr. Speaker; for I have at last—at long last—found such a cause. It is that of civil service in the Federal Government of the United States.

I propose, therefore, during my remaining time, without fear of getting in bad with anybody here or with my constituents back home, to celebrate, not so much the merit of the civil service as the extraordinary situation which I have discovered, that here is a matter on which there is no disagreement in the House of Representatives. Here is a cause in which we fearful ones, as well as we fearless ones, can unite, assured of the acclaim of all of the galleries in an election year.

Why do I say so? I say it, in the first place, because last week we witnessed numerous forms of the celebration of the fifty-seventh anniversary of the establishment of the civil service in the United States. I heard many voices raised in celebration, but I did not hear one voice, by radio or otherwise, in deprecation. I can recall that even such a popular matter last year as the celebration of debt week by my friends on the left developed a good deal of opposition. I, myself, raised then a dissident voice in favor of a more practical sincerity. But to this celebration of the first half century of civil service I heard no reproachful voice.

I say it, in the second place, because out of a heavy mail on the Ramspeck bill—H. R. 960—I have not had, so far as I recall, one single letter opposed to the extension of civil service.

These reasons for believing in its popularity partake of the personal, and might lead me astray. Imagine my relief, therefore, in finding that both our great political parties had unanimously revealed the popularity of civil service—with the Gallup polls—by declaring unequivocally for its integrity and expansion. Politicians do not put things into writing for light and transient causes. My mind was made up—I had found my cause—when I read these two planks of the platforms of 1936.

The Democratic platform says:

For the protection of government itself and the promotion of its efficiency we pledge the immediate extension of the merit system through the classified civil service, which was first established and fostered under Democratic auspices, to all non-policy-making positions in the Federal service. We shall subject to the civil-service law all continuing positions which, because of the emergency, have been exempt from its operation.

The Ramspeck bill, shortly to be before the House of Representatives, legislatively empowers the President to fulfill that promise.

But that promise is no more forthright and—given an exchange of power—I take it, no more sure of fulfillment than is the Republican promise of the same year in its platform. It reads:

Under the New Deal, official authority has been given to inexperienced and incompetent persons. The civil service has been sacrificed to create a national political machine. As a result, the Federal Government has never presented such a picture of confusion and inefficiency. We pledge ourselves to the merit system, virtually destroyed by New Deal spoilsmen. It should be restored, improved, and extended. We will provide such conditions as offer an attractive, permanent career in Government service to young men and women of ability, irrespective of party affiliations.

You will note here the final confirmation of my presumption of full popularity for the civil service. It is cold in print but warm in promise. The parties compete with each other, not as to its merit but as to the speed of its enactment. What Mr. Farley has assured us could be done—

With time, patience, and hard work, I could construct a major political party in the United States without holding out a single job to deserving partisans.

this very thing both parties have assured us in their platforms should be done and would be done. They spur each other, sideways, only in their haste each to be the first to do it. Proud as I am of the promises, grateful as I am for a cause, I am made to reflect, nevertheless, by the joint sideways spurring, to reflect, I say, upon the competition of merit between the proverbial rooster and the legendary crow:

I sometimes think I'd rather crow
And be a rooster than to roost
And be a crow. But I dunno.

A rooster he can roost also,
Which don't seem fair when crows can't crow.
Which may help some. Still I dunno.

Crows should be glad of one thing though;
Nobody thinks of eating crow,
While roosters they are good enough
For anyone unless they're tough.

There are lots of tough old roosters, though,
And, anyway, a crow can't crow,
So mebbe roosters stand more show;
It looks that way. But I dunno.

The dubiety of the poem, my colleagues, applies only to the manners of the political parties, not to their devotion to merit. Their devotion culminates a demonstration satisfactory to me—and I hope to each of you—of the unanimity of us Representatives upon this very popular cause.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE CAUSE AS REASON FOR ITS POPULARITY

Now, I ask myself, and I ask you: Why has this cause become so popular in the course of 57 years, starting below scratch, as it did, and proceeding through many, many scratches, as you know, from both sides? It is a singular incident in our national history that an unpopular cause in a short half century could come to be almost unanimously approved by the American people, as the Gallup poll suggests, and approved unanimously today by all loyal party members in the House of Representatives. Why is this? It is to this question, primarily, that I address myself in my remaining moments.

I would like to argue the question, if you will allow me a little elbow room and some intellectual leeway, from two points of view: From the point of view of the importance of civil service and then more earnestly and more lengthily from the point of view of the "unimportance" of civil service, so to say. I have a hunch, you see, that the primary business of a legislative body is not to concern itself with the enactment of things of first magnitude but with things of lesser degree. I intend to develop a distinction between the "important" and the "significant," if you will be good enough to follow me.

If I argued merely the importance of civil service, I would point in fashion prosaic to the efficiency and the economy of a scientific system of maintaining the administrative personnel of government as contrasted with the method of political pull before a victory and of political push after a defeat. The one method is relevant and logical; the other is irrelevant and adventitious to the job at hand. There is unquestionably a case to be made out upon the ground of importance from the point of view of economy, which is another popular watchword of the hour, and, from the point of view of efficiency, which is even more important for personal happiness. I content myself with arguing the importance of civil service only in an indirect, an historical manner.

When one looks at the history of these efforts on the part of a great and continuously expanding government to deal effectively with the problem of the proper personnel to carry on that government's permanent work, one will see that we have passed through three stages. The first was the stage represented by Thomas Jefferson's philosophy for equal participation of the two great parties in the selection of the administrative personnel of the Government. The second was Jackson's emphasis upon party monopoly. The third and last was Cleveland's insistence upon party neutrality. I ask you now to attend to these three in order. And first Jefferson's proposal with his reasons therefor:

If a due participation of office is a matter of right, how are vacancies to be obtained? Those by death are few; those by resignation none. Can any other mode than that of removal be proposed?

This is a painful office, but it is made my duty, and I meet it as such. It would have been to me a circumstance of great relief had I found a moderate participation of office in the hands of the majority—

That is, the newly elected Democrats, victorious for the first time—

I would then gladly have left to time and accident—

A euphemism for death—to raise them to their just share. But their total exclusion calls for prompter corrections. I shall correct the procedure; but, that done, return with joy to the state of things, where the only questions concerning a candidate shall be, Is he honest? Is he capable? Is he faithful to the Constitution?

That was the view which Jefferson had, that the parties could be allowed to select the permanent administrative personnel, but that it had to be done on the grounds of equal participation of the parties as they oscillated in and out of power. That theory did not prevail, as we well know. So by the time of Andrew Jackson, though not wholly to be credited or blamed on Old Hickory, we had come to another view of the best way to select the people who work for the Government; that view was that it ought to be a matter of party monopoly.

Though Andrew Jackson declared that "the most disagreeable duty I have to perform is the removal and appointment to office," he nevertheless presented his philosophy justifying the painful job. Though his words sound to us like a sleepwalker talking anachronisms, they were sincere enough in him and portentous enough for the Federal service.

There are—said Old Hickory—

perhaps few men who can for any length of time enjoy office and power without being more or less under the influence of feelings unfavorable to the faithful discharge of their public duties. Their integrity may be proof against improper considerations immediately addressed to themselves, but they are apt to acquire a habit of looking with indifference upon the public interests and of tolerating conduct from which an unpracticed man would revolt. Office is considered as a species of property, and government rather as a means of promoting individual interests than as an instrument created solely for the service of the people. * * * The duties of all public offices are, or at least admit of being made, so plain and simple that men of intelligence may readily qualify themselves for their performance; and I cannot but believe that more is lost by the long continuance of men in office than is generally to be gained by their experience.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the philosophy of party monopoly before the age of science and before the extension of the services of government to include every science and every art.

The third position is that illustrated by Grover Cleveland, who had found the job situation, cumulative from Jackson's day, so inimical to efficiency and economy in government that he enunciated the great principle of party neutrality with reference to the personnel problems of the Federal Government. "Public office is a public trust," this to our very day is our most moral public prescription. Fortunately for the Nation, it is Cleveland's policy, with some variation and some recession, which has been carried on down to our time. I take it that, in passing from Jefferson's plea for equal participation of the parties in choosing the personnel, through Jackson's view of party monopoly, to Cleveland's contention that parties ought to be neutral with reference to the administrative service of the Government, on down to our day when both great parties reaffirm their devotion to this principle in their published solemn pledge to the Nation, we have unanimously convinced ourselves that neither economy nor efficiency can be served save through party neutrality with reference to the permanent personnel of the Federal Government. That, my colleagues, is what the civil service is about. There may be some Rip van Winkles in the civil service asleep on the job, but they are not going to be awakened by political sleepwalkers who mumble against the principle of merit and keep walking in their sleep toward the Dark Ages of treating public jobs as private property for party or personal favorites.

Those who speak publicly and responsibly for the great parties speak in the light of our historic experience as to the utter importance and finality of merit in carrying on this vast personnel enterprise in the Federal Government. So much for the importance of civil service for efficiency and economy.

Its overt importance, however, is not enough, I suspect, to explain the enormous popularity, which has drawn me to it as my cause.

A PHILOSOPHY OF THE UNIMPORTANT

From importance, then, let us turn now to unimportance, if you allow me this verbal leeway. I cannot but guess that the permanently significant does often transcend the pressingly important. If so, it pays us to keep clear a distinction between influence and power in reckoning up the tale of man's personal and collective life. I came to this view in a fashion so curious that I beg you to give me a moment to relate the story.

MY GRAND OLD MAN OF THE SEA

Worn out, like many other politicians, with my first campaign for public office over the entirety of a very great State, I was advised by my better nature to seek some recuperation in solitude and quietness, and that under a more beneficent sun than Illinois affords at every season. I found myself in the State of Arizona, far from civilization, and I compliment the distinguished gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] when I say that. I see that he would like to say a further word for his great State. I do not yield, for I can say for him that it is indeed a great State that can still offer to citizens and visitors the priceless boon of solitude. I went where there was but one other man—but what a man he proved to be! I bless the day I discovered Arizona—and him.

He was the most curious combination of human characteristics I have ever seen rolled together in one mortal shape. That man became my "ancient mariner" of land as well as sea. He was, on the one side, an old sea captain, rough from the pages of the past when sailing vessels made maritime life still adventurous; but he was, on the other side, a complete composite of glorified landlubbers that I had known in the Texas of my childhood and of my youth. He was the embodiment of a singular, almost feminine, grace and elegance, but was also possessed of a temper mercurial and terrible as a cyclone. He was, my colleagues of the House, a picturesque combination and rare, a veritable Sampson of the Southwest. I shall not soon meet his like again. I can see him now, with my mind's eye, gentlemen, ripe in years and radiant in wisdom, there in the desert of Arizona recuperating from tuberculosis and living over again for my benefit the great experiences he had had, not only on every sea but in every land. But I lose myself in reverie, while my story tarries.

Learning that I had been recently elected to Congress, he offered to give me some advice. He said, "You will smile at this no doubt to begin with, but if you live to be as rich in experience and years as I am, you will no longer smile at the curious ways in which human influence works its way to power." Then he told me the story of a legislative experience which he himself had had in earlier life, a story, as you will see, which started me upon this train of thought. As I remember, he said it was in a certain "Principality of Excelsioriana." I did not identify the place on the map, I forgot to ask him where it was, and I may be mistaken about the name. But the logic of his experience there and the extraordinary clairvoyance of his advice to me will remain, I think, the high day of my whole life.

Warming over the coals of his own memory, he said: "You have noticed in the modern world that where fanatics like Hitler, or like Stalin's predecessor, Lenin, come to power and undertake through executive fiat, or even through legislative activity, to enforce upon a group matters admitted to be of final importance—national unity, let us say, or correct beliefs about religion, or even about economics—the very effort to legislate upon these finally important things has turned their importance to the poison of power in social life. 'Ah,' he said, 'I could have warned them long ago about communism and nazi-ism, because I came to see, through the strange wisdom of my friends in 'Excelsioriana,' that it is not the business of politics to concern itself, save by abstention, with things of the very first moment, but only with things of second- or third-rate importance.'"

I am aware, Mr. Speaker, of the great injustice I do that rare man's elegance in reporting his advice so bumblingly; but I must seek in my own humble way to convey to you the depth of his insight.

After a quiet period of musing, which the Arizona ozone facilitates, my patron continued: "I therefore not only give you the advice to seek popular causes, but I will tell you how you can find them. On the great issues that men concern themselves with of utter and pressing importance and moment, do not stick your neck out, because somebody is going to step on it." He said: "Go behind the pressing, or sit it out, to inquire into the principles of things and ask yourself, not what is important to be done directly by legislation but what is likely to get done two or three removes from the pressing through a proper sense of strategy. Do that and find a way from the empty pomp of power into the path that leads to human influence. In this way Fate works with you, and its little finger is more to be regarded than your own clenched fist."

That said, he pointed the moral of all his saying: "You know as well as I do that to maintain the dignity of the law, the proper respect for constituted authorities, and inner reverence for the genius of cooperation—that is the important thing. It is not this law or that which counts. It is whether you have a people law-abiding in their hearts, a people who reverence their traditions and adhere with pride to the unspoken and unwritten spirit of the group. These things of the last importance you know, as well as I, cannot be legislated."

"Yes," I said, "I know that, but I thought such matters belong to philosophers and poets, not to politicians." "No," he said, "it is the business of politicians, and I will show you how I worked it out in this Principality of Excelsioriana, betwixting at last the instructions of my friends there." Reflectively he continued: "I looked around for a long time for a matter that seemed not important on which I could legislate. I seized upon the matter of nudity," he went on, "not that I give a damn whether people wear clothes or go nude." At that, he gave his own bare body a resounding whack, as I moved beyond the reach of his mighty arm.

"No," said he, "nudity is not important. That is the reason I got a law passed against it. I was able to get the death penalty assessed against it. 'That's going pretty far,' I ventured. 'I was out,' countered he, 'to establish the majesty of law, not to hurt nudists. And do you know that only one of them dared his way to the gallows?' 'Poor fellow,' I sighed. 'Yes,' agreed he, 'but a small price to pay for the fear of God implanted, and, yes, for the love of the good which irradiated from that simple act of legislation.'"

"But," he said, "that was not my main stroke. It was important only for emboldening me to go the limit of the logic. I looked around for another and more important emphasis upon the unimportant as subject for significant legislation, and what I discovered finally was the weather. You'd think that there I'd hit many, too many, people, to remain popular. I got a law passed that made it illegal, with the penalty death, for anybody to say that it was colder than 40 degrees or that it was hotter than 70 degrees. We had to execute seven people, only seven, mark you, before they saw we were in earnest. Thereafter you'd have been amazed at the difference in spirit and, I may say, happiness of the people. In the first place, it took all the jokes away from that ancient and outworn subject of sex, and built them about the weather. Everybody vied with everybody else to see how close he could come to saying it, without saying it. Their 'information, please,' had a whole program built around the weather. A new theater arose and a wholly different and better 'Plutophone,' as he called the radio. 'It gave us,' he concluded, 'a new understanding of the deep motives of men and furnished a harmless way out past the censor of the subconscious.'"

I remember now how the old war horse's eye glistened, with the trace of a tear, as he told me in the desert of Arizona of the magnificent appeal he made before the packed galleries with all Members present the night his weather bill was passed. His speech closed with a peroration like this, as I recall the lines:

What is it molds the life of man?
The weather!
What makes some black and others tan?
The weather!
What makes the Zulu live in trees?
And Congo natives dress in leaves,
While others go in furs and freeze?
The weather! The weather!

UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES: A HINT TO THE SUFFICIENT MAY BE WISE

I confess, Mr. Speaker, though I can only suggest the rare character of this old man, that I take his wisdom as my personal watchword in politics. I mean presently to apply that wisdom, as best I may, to the popularity of the civil service, whose declared devotees both our great parties now are. But first, if I may hazard the application of an afterthought to—I do not say the Dies committee, but—the committee investigating un-American activities.

As I have confessed, I barely escaped risking my own precarious popularity on that cause. I still like, therefore, to linger over that danger escaped, and to consider how the danger might be mitigated for others. The committee's greatest danger lies, I suspect, in getting obsessed with the genuinely important things, with correct beliefs about religion or economics, and seeking legislatively to establish principles or to persecute persons. That, as my grand old man of the sea taught me, would prove fatal to the committee and possibly precarious to the Nation. If, however, the committee but continue the "unimportant" business of letting bray in public the asses who otherwise would not be heard beyond their own barnyards, it may serve at two or three removes the morale of our people. Already it has taught some silly citizens that thoughtful men and women require more reason for joining organizations than that they have no reason for not joining them. "Unimportant" as this result may appear, it seems to me a matter of the greatest "significance." It harbors in its womb the seeds of personal independence. The committee might indeed prove to be a homeopathic remedy for what the old captain and I agreed was the worst disease of our time, "Organizationitis." To start that cure a-working would be something, really.

APPLICATION OF MY ANCIENT MARINER'S WEIRD WISDOM TO CIVIL SERVICE

Returning now to civil service, let us connect its popularity with its "unimportance." And among the things in this sense "unimportant" I mention two. The first is sportsmanship. The second is skill.

SPORTSMANSHIP WITHOUT LEGISLATION

I want to indicate, first, that when we have put the whole of our Federal personnel under the civil service we shall have established a spirit of sportsmanship for the first time throughout American political life. I say sportsmanship, which we cannot legislate. I, for one, am aware, as a public officeholder, that I already have the advantage over any man that offers to run against me, because of the very office I do hold. I am ashamed as a sportsman, so far as I can control it, to have one vote influenced for me on the basis of patronage. It is not right, and it is not sportsmanship. [Applause.]

But, I repeat, we cannot legislate sportsmanship. We can, however, establish an example by forswearing any undue advantage which patronage gives us. Some creep toward this ideal down the criminal path marked by the Hatch bill, others take it the easy way of civic good manners. If we can approach this practice of sportsmanship by enacting civil service, under the guise of its being unimportant, we shall have passed from the mere preaching of fair play to the actual practice of sportsmanship in American political life. Upon this I should like to dilate at great length, but I may safely leave the rest I would say to your fertile imaginations.

SKILL WITHOUT LEGISLATION

The second of the unearned and indirect fruits that have great significance but concrete unimportance is reverence for skill. We politicians need to have our people understand that politics is in itself a work of extraordinary skill. I want to do my part to remove from the mantle of the practicing politicians the aroma of skulduggery. Most of us know that most imputations against the politician are not true. We know that he is skilled, and we know that a nation's efficiency and its morale, and therefore its happiness, are always determined by the practice of skill and respect for that practice.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend for a moment?

Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois will be allowed to complete his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, gentlemen.

I have a fancy of my own that as over against the technological and industrial skills of mind and muscle in our day, the skill which constitutes a man a good politician is of such superior significance that if it were once understood that not just anybody can be a good politician, but that it takes an extraordinary person, with an unusual bent of mind, with an unusual soft heart and an unusual thick skin, to be a politician, then we would have established, not only our right to become what we are—the secular saints of this scientific society, spreading the cement of sociality in the thousands of crevices rent in our social fabric by the division of labor and the specialization of these technological skills—but if once we could establish that it is the business of the politician to be practitioner in general of the art of interpretation across all human cleavages, we should have established a fact of revolutionary reach and influence.

The art of conversation is everywhere admitted to be almost a dead art. The art of "radiatority" has hardly yet been born. The art of public address is confined to so small a section of the natural aristocracy of the human tongue that it is pathetic how few men and how few women in our society can really grace the use publicly of our noble language and can tie together in one seamless web the glistening insights of the majestic mind and the flowing motions of human sentiments.

Now, that is what we politicians are mostly good at, and it is a gift that is so near like that of the gods that if we could ever turn ourselves loose to learn how to practice that magnificent gift, instead of being distracted by the wretched business of patronage, at which we are not any good for the Nation, we might then come to develop once more a parliament of Websters and Calhouns and Douglasses and, in an age that despises the spirit of oratory, grace once more the noblest of the human arts, the art of oral and elegant expression. But what chance has a politician to learn to do this job superbly? To put it simply, what chance has a man to know enough about many subjects, even one subject, to be able to make magnificent and moving statements of inner meaning, of complex and interlaced problems, when nine-tenths of his time is given up to the practice of the civic turpitude of political partisanship in affairs administrative? What chance have we got to be more than mediocre in the practice of the great skill of moving eloquence? I do not, I may say, voice here a personal complaint, since my job as Congressman at Large carries no patronage.

There is not a man and there is not a woman here who does not know how pathetic we all feel in having to move through faux pas of ignorance to faux pas of ignorance because we have not any time here to master our problems. We have not any time here or at home to master the intricacies of even the bills, not to mention the achievement of clairvoyance with the inner genius of this great Republic. We have no time systematically to read its history. We must neglect its poets, gulp at its novelists, and overlook its philosophers. Yet in these artists, more even than in our scientists, is brewed the very spirit of our national life. Give ourselves the chance once to practice the skill which we profess, and we shall not only have redeemed our profession from the imputation of jobbing skulduggery but we shall have set in motion—and mark this, for this is the main point—we shall have set in motion, through our example, a restoration of pride in every form of skill that goes to make this the great industrial Nation that it is.

The one complaint against my country which I allow myself, as a patriot, while I go up and down this land constantly, arises from the growing realization that this reputedly efficient Nation is losing its joy in the job, the humble jobs that men and women are doing. The ancient instinct of workmanship is on the decline throughout the whole of this industrial Republic, and the best we can do about it lies beyond the power of legislation. No more than we can legislate sportsmanship can we legislate skill; but if we would practice the consummate political skill of accommodation and compromise through the spoken word, we should have set in operation throughout this Republic, in the words of my old sea captain, "influences that would become tidal waves of civic restoration." A full and complete civil service would free not only us from job-brokerage but free also a thousand special skills from our blundering political interference. I cannot go further into this line of thought, thus imposing upon your graciousness in allowing me generous extension of time.

A LITTLE STATE LEGISLATOR MAY LEAD US

I am pleased to have here in my hand a document that makes it unnecessary for me to extend myself further upon that subject. It is a statement by a State legislator who has given me permission to use it, but who, modestly for a State politician, asks me not to reveal his name. It is taken from a speech which he himself, apparently, made.

Gentlemen, let me not close this sober defense of freedom of speech upon a somber note. It is in defense of the joy of life that I live and talk. Better an hour of freedom than a day of caution, than a year of fear, than a life of suppression. Talk is a form of freedom too cheap to make dear by prohibition. How dear, indeed, this freedom is to have which is so cheap to allow. Yet talk so telling in the tale to the teller is mostly nonsense to any outside listener. Consider now how few nuggets you carry with you from all the Pullman, poolroom, and parlor talk you have ever heard. Consider, too, how few violent deeds you can recall as flowing from all the bold, bad talk you have ever heard. The fruit in action of even the tallest talk is mostly but more talk.

This thought might warn us against taking talk too seriously and thus leave us free to commit it more joyously. The Communist may talk loud and long of his perfect order—of the classless society which he professes to see in the crystal ball of dialectical materialism—and even talk of the necessity of helping the crystal ball to bring to birth its blood and thunder. Let him talk! Let him talk! He's as little likely to perpetrate his secular perfection of Saturday night as we our sacred perfection of Sunday morning. The reason is the same in each case—perfection is to preach, not to practice.

Nevertheless, half the fun of life is in flowing freely at the mouth. It may be but a bubble at the tea table, rising to a bubble before the liquored bar, and striding to a bickering before the enrobed bench. It may be the whispered retinue of sweet nothings—all-important, it is said, in the high art of making love. It may rise to a nobler gushing from the rostrum and the stump. It may become an avalanche of foam and fury in the presence of hardly suffered wrong. In whatever form the flowing flows the heart is eased of fullness so that it may enjoy itself to fullness once again and back again.

Nobody knows the supreme worthfulness of this wordy pleasure more than we politicians. We get elected on the verbal easement of oratory. We swell the flood of wind and word during our terms of talk. And we pass, when we pass we must, upon the gentler receding flow of elegiac whisperings "too full for sound or foam." While we live and dignify the larynx, legislation is the heroic by-product of our profession. Half the rewards of all our silent days arise from talk projected or from talk remembered. In nothing are we more representative of our people than in the chronic taste for talk. Of our people? Not merely. It is written down in sacred sound that "in the beginning was the word." As in the beginning so in the ending and in the middle. The word remains and abides.

Newspapers are but talk still sticky with ink; magazines talk where the ink has dried; books talk canned in decorous code and preserved against hours of solitude and silence. Our meditative musing is but free-wheeling talk, and our most cogent thinking, talk rehearsed in private against the happy hour when the stage will once more be ours. Talk is full telltale of our simian ancestry, chattering among the trees; talk is full commemorative of our human heritage, sharing sense through sound; talk is faintly predictive of our fairest clairvoyance, in some romance grounded after gloaming of perfect understanding. Meantime they live fullest who talk best. And as for service we also serve who only stand and talk.

Off with the brakes! On with the fest! Let talk grow more and more refined!

After that paean of praise for our political art, I say no more. Only this I ask you to let me do, and it in reverence for my mentor, the old sea captain, who awakened me to life and wisdom—let me close my first appeal to you as he closed his last and greatest appeal to his parliament, with a fitting poem. Allow me this conceit, and I will take off my hat in public to the day-by-day eloquence of this honorable body. For, colleagues in laryngeal liquidity—

I eat and drink your precious words,
My spirit grows robust.
I know no more that I am poor
Or that my frame is dust.
I dance along the glad days,
And my bequest of wings is but your talk,
What liberty a loosened tongue may bring!

[Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] may extend the remarks he made today and include certain quotations from the hearings on the Treasury and Post Office Department appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
There was no objection.

VERMONT

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I had a little word that I intended to say about the State of Vermont. I decided not to say it at all, but merely received permission to extend my remarks and inserted it in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It was just a few words about the State of Vermont, which I thought were complimentary to that State, even if I did not entirely agree with the national policy of Vermont as was revealed in the few remarks.

I rise today—and, by the way, it is a good time to do it, since I am filled with the delight and charm of the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] who just preceded me. I would have been a poor man, indeed, had I not heard that diverting and charming address, and it will always be a cherished hour that kept me here today.

But I want to say of Vermont that I am sure that delightful State, so rich in the history of this Nation, sending as it does to this body a man that I think is the composite of Vermonters—if there is a statesman, a kindly, pleasant, and delightful gentleman on this floor, it is he. He is not here just now, so I am not trying to merely compliment one who is immediately present. If there is anything there that makes an offending sound in the ears of any Vermonter, or certainly that may seem ill-natured to that statesman and charming gentleman, I am sorry indeed. But in those remarks I spoke of the people of Vermont as the kind of people we refer to as the salt of the earth. I was very seriously sincere when I made those remarks. All I want to say is that it was entirely in the spirit of good humor and good will. The only reference I made was concerning the national policy.

I have a number of letters and editorials revealing that they have compared Vermont with Alabama—Alabama is my home State, you know.

I was not discussing Alabama, however; neither was I discussing State matters; I was discussing national matters. So I have taken this time today to declare against any intent of offense.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I am interested in one other important matter that has shown itself, and I hope we can work out some way in which to take action on it; if we can, we should.

The gentleman at the head of the C. I. O., Mr. John Lewis, is in the news again, as many of you have noticed. Since he first took the Vice President from the prospective Presidential list and doomed him, he has attacked the eminent administrator, the ex-Governor of Indiana and so forth, the Honorable Paul McNutt, and doomed him, and has now doomed the President of the United States. I wonder what we can do about our comrade and friend, our esteemed colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]? He is in distress—and this other gentleman, Chief Big Thunder No Rain—he is in the same category, and there may be a few others also. They have been belaboring us Democrats constantly about Mr. Lewis, but I think in view of what has now happened to them, indeed a catastrophe, we, as a body, ought to get together and see if we can do something, especially for these two gentlemen; something to relieve the pain and suffering they are undergoing at this time; if we could have a caucus—something that has never been done in this body—a caucus of Democrats and Republicans; if we may all get together and have such a caucus to help these poor boys we should do so, because their only harp is broken and their one chord is lost; the cold winds are blowing right through their clothes today, and they are in sore and dire distress. They are desolate and marooned on the island of despair. If we can, for once, clasp hands and do something to save them we shall have done something that is sorely needed at this moment. For some time it has been the only string to their bow, and now, alas, it has broken. I thank you. [Applause and laughter.]

BIRTHDAY CAKE PRESENTED TO PRESIDENT BY THE BAKERY AND CONFECTIONERY WORKERS' UNION

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the celebration of the President's birthday and the campaign in behalf of those suffering from infantile paralysis, the labor division of the committee for the celebration of the President's birthday, under the direction of Mr. William Green as chairman and Mr. Gilbert E. Hyde as executive secretary, brought to Washington three charming young ladies who are now sitting in the Gallery of this House, to present to the President a beautiful birthday cake made by the Bakery and Confectionery Workers' International Union, and also to present to the President for the use of this foundation money contributed by union officials.

In the extension of my remarks I shall put in a history of this cake and the part these young ladies played in presenting it to the President of the United States at the White House today.

The matter referred to follows:

The Misses Elnore Myrup, Marilou Winter, and Elsie Schmidt are three Chicago girls, the daughters of the three leading officials of the Bakery and Confectionery Workers' International Union, which made the huge birthday cake to be presented to President Roosevelt today in commemoration of his fifty-eighth birthday, January 30.

The cake was donated to the labor division of the committee for the celebration of the President's Birthday by the Bakery Union as a means of raising additional funds for the "Fight Infantile Paralysis" campaign. A. F. of L. unions bought the 58 candles on the cake, which grossed more than $5,800 for the paralysis fund.

The labor division, of which William Green is chairman and Chester M. Wright director of organization, distributed close to three and one-half million President's birthday greeting cards to members of organized labor throughout the Nation and its Territories, and asked each member receiving a card to return it to the White House loaded with dimes and dollars for the war on the dreaded scourge.

Yesterday evening the cake itself was placed on exhibition at a large reception at the Mayflower in honor of the three young ladies who flew here to present President Roosevelt with the cake.

While in the city, the girls are the guests of the labor division and will be dinner guests of William Green as well as the Washington local of the Bakery Union, whose national affairs are directed by their fathers.

[Applause.]

PATRONAGE AND STATESMANSHIP

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, inspired by the intellectual and intriguing discussion by our colleague from Illinois [Mr. SMITH], and stimulated by the wit of the inimitable gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK], I am driven to make a public confession here this afternoon.

I must admit that up until today I did not know why it was that as a new Member I discovered that the statesmanship on the Republican side of the aisle was so much greater than I found it to be on the other side of the aisle. Today that has been driven home to me, and I see that it is because my Republican colleagues are not troubled by patronage problems of any kind but can dedicate themselves to the tasks of true statesmanship. I realize now that it is because of the complete freedom on our Republican side from all problems of patronage that we can and do proceed without partisanship, patronage, or pelf to the study of the facts at hand and to the summation of conclusions which are so logical that they frequently entice the support of the able and patriotic gentleman from Illinois. He is a man of great ability and persuasive eloquence. I therefore invite the cooperation of my Democratic colleague from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] in helping us Republicans in our efforts to unseat the New Deal in the coming election so that he and his political associates may share with us in having that freedom from problems of political patronage which he has so effectively shown to be the cause of so much suffering on the part of Members on his side of the aisle. It really does not seem fair to deny you Democrats any longer the blessings of ample opportunity to study the facts as they are presented and to engage in the great art of the spoken word in true statesmanlike style. Verily, you have earned the right to be freed for a time of all problems of patronage. I think the country, as a whole, is mindful of that fact.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I would remind the gentleman that there is a much more direct way of accomplishing the same purpose, namely, by supporting the bill H. R. 960, which the gentleman from Georgia has introduced, and which I hope will be before us soon.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. PATRICK. Does not the gentleman believe, in keeping with his desire and his sentiment, that it would be much easier to hold the present party in power until that is cleared up—until all that is taken care of—that matter which is such a problem in the life of the minority party? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MUNDT. I presume in that statement the gentleman from Alabama refers to the Democratic Party which has been traditionally, and now seems soon to again become, the minority party of America.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT]. Does not the gentleman realize that if H. R. 960 is passed a great many of these people would be blanketed in without benefit of a real civil-service examination? That it would be no test of merit or efficiency?

Mr. MUNDT. I think that is true. I am sure the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] would object to having people blanketed in the civil service in that manner, because I know he is sincere in his desire to improve the public service, as are both you and I.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am sure he is. I know he would like open competitive examinations. His altogether delightful speech proved that.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The record of the Republican Party shows thousands of similar cases where employees appointed politically were blanketed in without even the benefit of a noncompetitive examination.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know the gentleman will agree with me that a very small number, comparatively, was blanketed in under the Republican administration. In this case approximately 300,000, I believe, will be blanketed in. There is a great difference. However, that does not excuse the Republican Party, and I hold no brief in behalf of either the Republican or Democratic Party for blanketing in people into the civil service.

[Here the gavel fell.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HARE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

6274. By Mr. SUTPHIN: Petition of the United Sugar Refinery Workers Local Industrial Union, No. 151, of Edgewater, N. J., requesting that Congress make a provision to exclude the importation of refined sugar; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6275. Also, petition of the Women's State Republican Club of New Jersey, Inc., opposing the Wagner health bill (S. 1620); to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 29, 1940

The Chaplain, Rev. ZēBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, the ever living One, who alone abidest, in whom is all our life: Make us glad in the confidence that we are Thine, that in Thy loving care we may keep ourselves in all truth and purity, plastic to the touch of Thy gently shaping hand. As the laughter of evil or the song of victory leaves lingering echoes in the house of life, enable us to realize that in the little things, which we are so apt to overlook, we are preparing tears and shame or beauty and love in the lives of others, so great is the unforeseen might of our most trivial deed and thought. Help us, therefore, day by day to cultivate habits of goodness, established by the constant inspiration of Christlike thoughts in us, that we may never miss life's great things which do not strive or cry as they draw near, but move in gentleness and quiet calm, as they reveal in the soul's great moments the wondrous purpose of Thy will. In our dear Saviour's name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, January 25, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 8067. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 8068. An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

H. R. 8067. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 8068. An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

CANCELATION OF CERTAIN CHARGES AGAINST INDIANS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, copy of an order for the cancellation of certain charges in connection with reimbursable charges of the Government existing as debts against individual Indians or tribes of Indians, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENT OF RETIREMENT ACTS—CREDIT FOR MILITARY SERVICE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, transmitting a copy of proposed legislation to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act and other retirement acts, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate petitions of the Maybury Alumni Association and sundry citizens, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to exempt handicapped persons, such as arrested tuberculosis workers, on W. P. A. projects from the operation of the lay-off provision after 18 months of such work, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Local No. 114, Alkaline Salt Workers, of Trona, Calif., praying for the continuance of the so-called La Follette Civil Liberties Committee, investigating the question of civil rights and the rights of labor, and expressing appreciation for the work of the committee, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Social Democratic Federation of New York City, N. Y., favoring the enactment of the so-called Wagner-Steagall housing bill, providing for the issuance of additional U. S. H. A. bonds in the amount of $800,000,000, etc., so as to provide better housing conditions, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Laymen's League of the Church of Our Father (Unitarian-Universalist), Detroit, Mich., favoring all possible material assistance, short of war, to the Republic of Finland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Pennsylvania State Camp, Patriotic Order Sons of America, Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the appointment of Myron C. Taylor as representative at the Vatican and requesting the recall of Mr. Taylor, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Local No. 10 (C. I. O.), United Federal Workers of America (Social Security Board), Washington, D. C., favoring the prompt enactment of pending antilynching legislation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Bogata National Farm Loan Association, of Clarksville, Tex., favoring the restoration of the Farm Credit Administration to the status of an independent bureau and the placing of the operations of the Federal land banks, National farm-loan associations, and other units of the Administration under the supervision of a bipartisan board appointed by the President for fixed terms, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, which was referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization.

Mr. CAPPER presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Local No. 1, Citizens' Workers Union of America, of Kansas City, Kans., signed by Nellie M. Hubbard, secretary-treasurer, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide old-age pensions and relief for the unemployed, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of St. John and sundry citizens of Climax and Severy, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 517) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by radio, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying for the enactment of Senate bill 1766, providing a pension for sightless persons who have not sufficient income to be self-supporting, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of North East, Md., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant a loan to the Republic of Finland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying for the prompt enactment of legislation to impose an embargo on the sale of all war supplies and materials to Japan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOLT presented resolutions of Eph Boggs Post, No. 49, American Legion, Department of West Virginia, of Williamson, and Huntington Post, No. 16, American Legion, of Huntington, both in the State of West Virginia, favoring continuance of the so-called Dies committee investigating un-American activities and appropriation of the necessary funds therefor, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution of the twenty-first annual convention of the American Legion, Department of West Virginia, at Bluefield, W. Va., favoring the enactment of a general pension law for World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Twenty-first Annual Convention of the American Legion, Department of West Virginia, at Bluefield, W. Va., protesting against the enactment of legislation providing for the forced retirement of Army officers who have reached a certain age in grade, regardless of their capacity, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented letters in the nature of petitions from sundry citizens of Middlebourne, Buchanan, Webster Springs, and Jane Lew, all in the State of West Virginia, praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 517) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by radio, which were ordered to lie on the table.

SHIPMENT OF WAR MATERIALS TO JAPAN—RESOLUTION

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I present and ask to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point a resolution adopted by the congregation of the Second United Presbyterian Church of Jersey City, N. J., with reference to our trade relations with Japan. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for their most serious consideration.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We, the congregation of the Second United Presbyterian Church, hereby petition the United States Senate that in the new treaty to be entered into with Japan all materials that could be used to create weapons of war be excluded from said treaty and rigid legislation to carry out this provision be enacted by the Senate.

Submitted by Rev. James Parker, pastor, Second United Presbyterian Church, 110 Hancock Avenue, Jersey City, N. J.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

REPEAL OF SECTION 16 (B) OF EMERGENCY RELIEF APPROPRIATION ACT

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to repeal section 16 (b) of the joint resolution entitled "Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1939." I ask unanimous consent at this time for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut introduces a bill and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The bill (S. 3210) to repeal section 16 (b) of the joint resolution entitled "Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1939" was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

Section 16 (b) of the joint resolution entitled "Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1939," approved June 30, 1939, is hereby repealed.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, let me, before I ask the consideration of the bill by the Senate, point out exactly what I have in mind by this particular bill.

When we adopted the appropriation for work relief in 1939 we wrote into it section 16 (b), which reads:

(b) There shall be removed from employment on Work Projects Administration projects all relief workers, excepting veterans, who have been continuously employed on such projects for more than 18 months, and any relief worker so removed shall be ineligible to be restored to employment on such projects until after (a) the expiration of 30 days after the date of his removal, and (b) recertification of his eligibility for restoration to employment on such projects.

That is sufficient to indicate the purpose in mind. The Administrator has recently conducted an extensive survey. The reports of his survey are available. He points out that of the hundreds of thousands of relief workers who were discharged pursuant to that provision less than 13 percent have been able to find reemployment; that a very considerable percentage of them are destitute and without means of any kind whatever; and the remaining percentage are on direct relief in the cities and States of which they are residents. It seems to me that, with all the talk about relief for Finland and other nations, we can very properly take care of the hundreds of thousands of Americans who find themselves in that position. It seems to me further that Congress ought immediately undertake, through the Senate, to set the wheels in motion to correct that inequity. I, therefore, speak as I do in asking unanimous consent for the present consideration of the proposed repealer.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations in the usual way. I object to its immediate consideration, since it should be referred to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee objects, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ADVERTISEMENT OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES BY RADIO—AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 517) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by radio, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

REPORT ON THE NATCHEZ TRACE

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, the Seventy-third Congress, second session, appropriated $50,000 for a survey of the Natchez Trace. I submit at this time a resolution requiring that the report prepared pursuant to the expenditure of the $50,000 be transmitted to the Senate. I ask that the resolution may lie over under the rule, so that I may speak about it at the next meeting of the Senate.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 222) was ordered to lie over under the rule, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the Report of a Survey of the Old Indian Trail, known as the Natchez Trace, which was made pursuant to an act approved May 21, 1934, with a view of constructing a national road on this route to be known as the Natchez Trace Parkway.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	King	Russell
Andrews	Ellender	Lee	Schwartz
Ashurst	Frazier	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Austin	George	Lucas	Shipstead
Bailey	Gibson	Lundeen	Slattery
Bankhead	Gillette	McKellar	Smathers
Barbour	Glass	McNary	Smith
Barkley	Green	Maloney	Taft
Bilbo	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Gurney	Miller	Townsend
Bulow	Hale	Minton	Tydings
Byrd	Harrison	Murray	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hatch	Neely	Van Nuys
Capper	Hayden	Norris	Wagner
Chandler	Herring	Nye	Walsh
Chavez	Hill	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Clark, Idaho	Holman	Overton	White
Connally	Holt	Pepper	Wiley
Danaher	Hughes	Pittman
Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe
Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is detained on official business for the Special Committee on Civil Liberties.

Mr. McNARY. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

CELEBRATION OF THE PRESIDENT'S BIRTHDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on tomorrow all over the Nation the President's birthday will be celebrated, as it has been celebrated for a number of years, in a very unique and commendable fashion. The President's birthday will be celebrated by balls and festivities throughout the Nation for the purpose of raising funds to contribute to the elimination of that dread disease, infantile paralysis. On tomorrow 17, or about that number, outstanding movie stars and other actors and actresses will journey to Washington at their own expense in order to honor the President's birthday, and make their contribution to this great humanitarian cause.

One of those stars of the cinema, famous and well known to every household in America, who will be here tomorrow, and is here now to join and participate in the celebration of the President's birthday, is Miss Olivia de Havilland, who plays the important part of Melanie in Gone With the Wind. She is not only an accomplished actress, but is a charming personality on and off the stage. Miss de Havilland is honoring us today by her presence in the family gallery, and I am proud to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that she is here, and among those who are to assist in the celebration of the President's birthday.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ELLENDER obtained the floor.

Mr. NEELY and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Some days ago the Senator from Louisiana gave notice that he desired to address the Senate today. Therefore, the Chair thinks it is his duty today to recognize the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, just a moment, please. Has a request been made for recognition at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; the Senator from Louisiana has requested recognition and has been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. McNARY. We are all very anxious to hear the able Senator; but, in view of the rule, it can be done only by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McNARY. We are to have a short session. I should like the Senator to yield for a few minutes in order to enable the Senate to dispose of the routine morning business. It will not take long.

Mr. ELLENDER. I thought that had been done.

Mr. McNARY. No; I do not think it has been done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We have reached the point of the consideration of bills on the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Louisiana will yield, I understand that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has a report from the Committee on Appropriations of an urgent deficiency bill which can be taken up today only by unanimous consent. I had spoken to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] about the bill, and I understood that there would be no objection to its consideration today. It will take only a very few moments, I think, to dispose of the bill; and if the Senator from Louisiana is willing to wait until that bill can be disposed of, I think there will be no further cause for delay.

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it is true that the able Senator from Kentucky spoke to me informally about the bill as I came into the Senate Chamber a moment late. Subsequently I discussed the matter with the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], in charge of the bill.

The practice of waiving the rules under unanimous-consent agreements is one which I deplore. It always leads to some dissatisfaction and misunderstanding or disappointment. The able Senator in charge of the bill is very fair about such matters. I think it best to let the bill go over and defer action on it until tomorrow, so that Senators may read the bill and the report. Then there can be no complaint from anyone.

For that reason I must state to the Senator from Kentucky that I think it best that the bill go over.

LOUISIANA DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana ask unanimous consent that he may address the Senate?

Mr. ELLENDER. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Louisiana will proceed.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate so that I may discuss a few phases of the Democratic primary election that was held in Louisiana on January 16, which may excite the interest and attention of Senators.

At the outset, I desire to state that it has been my privilege to participate actively in the gubernatorial campaigns of my State since 1920. Never have I witnessed one that has been so bitter, so vitriolic, and wherein there was more slander, libel, and vilification resorted to by some of the candidates seeking the high office of Governor, than in the present campaign. Certain organs of the press of the State have been most vile and abusive in their attempt to further the cause of their choice, candidate Jones, and they resorted to a most disgraceful abuse of the privilege guaranteed to them by our Federal Constitution—freedom of the press.

There were five candidates for Governor. Hon. Earl K. Long headed the ticket sponsored by the Huey Long organization. The remaining four—Sam Jones, James A. Noe, James H. Morrison, and Vincent Mosely—ran as independents. The four independent candidates and all of the newspapers published in our State, except a few weeklies, centered their fire against Governor Long. No candidate for public office has ever been subjected to more vile, vicious, and unjust criticism than Governor Long. The independent candidates likewise criticized each other in no uncertain terms, with the result that the electorate of our State was thrown into a panic of confusion, indecision, and mistrust, and, in short, was subjected to a harrowing ordeal.

This deplorable condition was fanned into flame by the newspapers of the State and the independent candidates, who found the comfort they needed by using the Federal grand jury investigations as the basis for their attack against all candidates supported by the Long administration. As I shall hereafter point out, on several occasions I commended the press, as well as the Federal prosecutors, for their splendid work in exposing certain conditions that existed in our State, and for prosecuting persons who had violated their trust. My statements were ridiculed, twisted around, and grossly misrepresented by the press of the State, because I dared to defend and support the administration ticket headed by Governor Long.

Mr. President, the candidates on the Long administration ticket are able and capable executives. Their honor and integrity have been found to be beyond reproach. The finger of scorn was often pointed in their direction by malicious scandal mongers, but they always weathered the charges. With scores of Federal investigators scouring Louisiana since June 1939, these candidates have been thoroughly investigated, and no evidence of wrongdoing has been found to warrant prosecution, and yet they have been continuously abused and vilified by the opposition.

Today there are two Federal grand juries in session in the eastern district of Louisiana; one has been in almost continuous session since June, and the other since November 1939. I will not discuss the nature of the indictments presented to the court by these grand juries. I have no criticism to make of their work in bringing wrongdoers to justice, but I do believe that their work has been unnecessarily delayed and prolonged.

On several occasions I publicly complimented Mr. O. John Rogge, special prosecutor for the Justice Department, for the splendid service that he had performed in my State. However, on January 4, my attention was called to the following news item which appeared in every daily newspaper in my State. I am now reading from the New Orleans States of that date. In bold type, written across the entire page, appear these words: "Warns vote thieves here."

This appeared on January 4, 1940, 12 days before our election. I read from the article:

VOTE THIEVES WARNED BY ROGGE ON PRIMARY—PROBE CHIEF SAYS VIOLATIONS IN JANUARY 16 ELECTION TO BE PROSECUTED

Assistant Attorney General O. John Rogge, before leaving New Orleans at 1:30 p. m. today for Washington, D. C., issued a warning against fraud in the approaching Democratic primary when he invited any persons who may know of any fraud which may be thought to have been committed in any election in Louisiana now or in the future to report the facts to the Department of Justice or to the Attorney General's office.

In the New Orleans Item, an afternoon paper published in the city of New Orleans, under date of January 4, 1940, is another headline:

Warns on vote fraud.

And again appeared this statement:

ROGGE ASKS EVIDENCE BE REPORTED

A warning against the commission of any fraud in the forthcoming January 16 primary election was issued by Assistant United States Attorney General O. John Rogge today, a few hours before he departed for a conference with his chief in Washington, and as the new Federal grand jury took up its investigation of alleged frauds committed in previous Louisiana elections.

Mr. Rogge invited anyone with knowledge of fraud in the coming election, to report the facts to the Department of Justice or the United States attorney, to determine whether such frauds would fall within Federal jurisdiction.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune, another newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, carried this headline:

Rogge invites citizens to offer evidence of frauds in elections.

This appeared 12 days before the primary election held in Louisiana. It goes on in sum and substance with about the same story I have just read from the other newspapers.

I hold in my hand the Morning Advocate, a newspaper published in the city of Baton Rouge, La., on January 5, 1940:

United States ready to investigate any reports of fraud in Democratic primary here.

Rogge issues warning on eve of leaving for capital.

This is under an Associated Press byline:

The Federal Government today gave warning it was ready to investigate any reports of fraud in the January 16 Democratic primary, in which Gov. Earl K. Long is seeking reelection over the opposition of four other candidates.

Assistant Attorney General O. John Rogge issued the warning shortly before a Federal grand jury began an investigation of reported frauds in previous Louisiana elections.

The following headline appeared in the New Orleans States on January 3:

Launch vote probe. Murphy for court.

Here was an investigation which evidently was timed with our election, which was to take place on January 16. Those in authority were attempting to investigate an election which was held 2 or 3 years ago, and in which the candidate had no opposition. I charge that all of this was timed in order to have the grand jury in session during the primary election. As a matter of fact, grand jurors were in session on the day we held our election, and commissioners and other men high in office in Louisiana were summoned before the grand jury a few days before the election, on the day of the election, and after the election was held.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator for me to make an inquiry?

Mr. ELLENDER. Not at all. I yield.

Mr. KING. By what authority is the Federal Government interfering with an election which is purely and exclusively a State election? Are we to go back to the day of the reconstruction period and have the Federal Government inject itself into elections local in character within the various States?

Mr. ELLENDER. I am coming to that, I may say to the Senator from Utah, and it is that consideration which leads me to bring this matter to the attention of the Senate. I propose to point out how the newspapers of our State used these statements by Mr. Rogge, and used the Federal grand jury to further the cause of their own candidate. I do not say it was done with the knowledge and consent of the Department of Justice in Washington, but the newspapers of my State have been using the grand jury in the State of Louisiana, and have been using statements made by the Federal prosecutors in order to help their candidate, and I propose to demonstrate that.

I hold in my hand a newspaper, the Sunday Item-Tribune, published in New Orleans on December 24, 1939, from which I read a headline:

United States to probe elections.

This appeared nearly a month before the time of the election. Although the grand jury had been sitting in my State since June, they saw fit to wait until a few weeks before our State primary election to ventilate these matters.

I read again from the New Orleans Tribune under date of January 5:

HE WARNS ON FRAUDS AT POLLS

O. John Rogge, assistant United States attorney general in charge of the Federal probe of Louisiana's public life, left for Washington yesterday on the noon train, issuing a last warning against the commission of any fraud in the forthcoming January 16 gubernatorial primary in Louisiana.

I became incensed; I felt that Mr. Rogge was exceeding his authority in assuming that an election, to be held 12 days hence, might be crooked. I considered his act an encroachment on States' rights. I felt that all candidates were amply protected under our State laws in that they were represented at the polls by commissioners and watchers. On the other hand, why should the Federal Government interfere in a State election to select State officials? The exercise of such a right would interfere with purely domestic affairs of the State and infringe upon liberties reserved to the people. I was convinced that the newspapers of the State would seize upon Mr. Rogge's announcement and use it as a means of intimidating the voters of a sovereign State. I immediately contacted a friend in New Orleans and suggested that he send copies of the newspapers printed in New Orleans to Attorney General Murphy, and that I would wire Mr. Murphy.

On January 8, after my return to Louisiana, I wired Mr. Murphy as follows:

HOUMA, LA., January 8, 1940.

HON. FRANK MURPHY,

The Attorney General, Washington, D. C.:

Hope you have received newspaper clippings sent to you my request, particularly one appearing Times-Picayune, January 5, with headline written across entire page as follows "Rogge invites vote fraud evidence." As I stated to you on many occasions, I do not mind a fair and just investigation, but I believe it unfair for a Federal prosecutor of Mr. Rogge's prominence to issue such statements in advance of the election. Our people cannot be intimidated. I feel confident you do not countenance such tactics, but I am calling them to your attention for your scrutiny. A telegram from you indicating your position in this matter which I may use would be very much appreciated. In the meantime I am making a newspaper file for probable presentation to the Senate at an early date. In view of the fact that our election will take place on the 16th this month, and in further view of the fact that our State has been under constant investigation since last June, is it not apropos to ask that the grand jury investigations be postponed until after election? I believe this is a fair request, and I am in hopes that you will accede to it.

ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
United States Senator.

On the same day I wired the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] as follows:

HOUMA, LA., January 8, 1940.

HON. EDWARD R. BURKE,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Am air mailing clippings reference Louisiana situation and Justice Department which may be of interest to you. Would like opportunity of presenting more. I do not want to believe that head of Justice Department is aware of how his assistants are misusing their sacred trust. These tactics are nothing short of persecution and are intended to intimidate the citizens of a sovereign State. Regards.

ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
United States Senator.

In a few minutes I will read a prepared statement that I submitted to the press, which will explain why I wired the Senator from Nebraska.

Before I proceed further, I desire to exhibit a few newspaper headlines and advertisements to show that the newspapers did use Mr. Rogge's statement, did use the Justice Department, in order to further the cause of Sam Jones, the press-supported candidate.

I hold in my hand an advertisement which appeared in every daily newspaper in the State of Louisiana, under date of January 11. The advertisement covers a whole page. It shows a United States soldier standing guard next to a letter box, and at the top of the page is written in bold type:

Uncle Sam protects your vote.

And in that advertisement is quoted the warning of Mr. Rogge as to what he intended to do in this election, and at the bottom of the page are these words:

Vote with confidence for Sam Jones.

All of this was done notwithstanding the law of the United States which provides—

That Army and Navy officers will be punished if they bring troops to a place where a general or special election is being held, unless needed to repel armed enemies of the United States.

I have before me another advertisement which, I am informed, appeared in all the daily newspapers of the State, under date of January 14, headed:

Your civil liberties and your vote * * * the safeguard of democracy * * * are protected by State and Federal laws.

The Statue of Liberty with glowing torch is very prominent. And in that advertisement appears the statement of Mr. Rogge, which is headed:

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT TO PROBE ELECTION IRREGULARITIES

Assistant United States Attorney General O. John Rogge says that the Government will seek to apply the mail-fraud statute as a result of the case of United States v. Aczel, reported in 219 Federal 917, in which Alexander Aczel and others were indicted for conspiracy and for using the mails to carry out a scheme to defraud in Indiana by threatening the liberty of voters in the election of certain officials.

And then the advertisement goes on to cite the case itself.

Here is another full-page advertisement which appeared in the newspapers of my State. This particular advertisement appeared in the Times-Picayune under date of the 9th of January 1940, and it shows Candidate Jones standing with a great big American eagle hovering over his head. He must be ashamed of the good old "pelican" which happens to be the emblem of our State.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have had some little experience in connection with elections. I should like to ask a question based upon the Senator's statement. He just stated that all the newspapers in Louisiana carried these advertisements. The advertisements appear to cover an entire page. To me that would indicate that a considerable sum had been expended to defray the expenses of these advertisements.

Mr. ELLENDER. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that there is no telling how much money was spent in this election, because these advertisements were paid for by those sponsoring Sam Jones, the man who is backed by the corporate interests as well as the newspapers of our State. He was accused during the campaign of having received large sums from corporate interests to further his campaign, and he never denied the charge.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. My question was, or would have been, Who is defraying the expense of this enormous advertising bill, if the Senator knows?

Mr. ELLENDER. Why the Sam Jones' headquarters, I will say to the Senator. The money is expended by the managers of Mr. Sam Jones, who is being backed by the corporate interests of the State, and not only by the corporate interests of the State of Louisiana, but of adjoining States and of other States of the United States. There is no telling the size of the slush fund that was expended and that will be spent from now until February 20, the date of the second primary.

In another newspaper, the New Orleans Item, appears the following:

United States gets Jones' appeal.

Now, what was that appeal?

Twenty affidavits given to Rogge; attempted bribery is charged.

I was informed that a few days before the election the campaign managers of Mr. Jones made an appointment with Mr. Rogge, and had photographers and newspaper reporters on hand, and the managers had asked Mr. Rogge to pose with them. This was evidently done in order to further their campaign advertisement in behalf of candidate Jones. Mr. Rogge refused. But the next best thing was done, which was to have a picture taken of the two managers entering the office of the United States Attorney. On the door of the office leading into the United States Attorney's room are the words "United States Attorney." These pictures which I hold in my hand were published all over the State, with the view, as I said a while ago, of using the Federal grand jury and the Federal prosecutor in order to aid Sam Jones, the corporate-interest candidate.

As Senators will note, the picture on the front page of the newspaper shows two men entering the door and upon the door appears the following: United States Attorney.

Then appears the following:

CANDIDATE'S MANAGER SAYS COMMISSIONERS WERE APPROACHED—CLAIMS BIG OFFER—GOVERNMENT AIDE TOLD OF ALLEGED TRIES FOR SWITCH

Charles C. Zatarain, city campaign manager for Sam Jones, candidate for Governor, today laid about 20 affidavits before Assistant United States Attorney General O. John Rogge, alleging attempts at intimidation and bribery of Jones' election commissioners by campaign workers for Governor Long.

Shortly afterward, Mr. Rogge announced that he had referred the complaints, like others, to members of the staffs of the United States Attorney's office—

And so forth.

Here is another picture that appeared in the New Orleans Times-Picayune under date of January 23, after the election.

LXXXVI—46

The picture shows Mr. Sam Jones, the candidate for Governor against Long, entering the United States attorney's office, and on the door he is about to open appears "United States Attorney." At the top of the picture appears the following:

Candidate Jones sees Federal men.

And below the picture are these words:

Sam Jones, who meets Earl K. Long in the second Democratic primary February 20, Monday, turned in to Federal authorities between 250 and 300 complaints of election irregularities alleged to have occurred at Orleans parish polls last Tuesday.

Another headline appearing in the Times-Picayune, New Orleans, Friday, January 12, 1940, reads:

Rogge pushes vote probe before "new" Federal jury.

He summoned to this probe some of the commissioners who had been selected to serve at various precincts at the election held on January 16. Many of them were brought there, were made to sit in the ante room for hours, and were never called upon, and then told that they could go home. All of this, Senators, was to my way of thinking done simply and solely in order to intimidate the people of my State.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. SMATHERS. Was it pointed out to Mr. Rogge that his name and the Federal Department of Justice were being used and their influence was being used in a party primary, and was he asked to correct the situation?

Mr. ELLENDER. He would have to be blind not to see it from these newspaper articles, I will say to the Senator. I personally called them to his attention, and stated to him that we did not need him or any other Federal official to conduct elections in Louisiana; that we had handled our own elections in the past, and, as far as I was concerned, we did not need his services. As I said, I pointed out all of these newspaper headlines and everything else to him, but it did not seem to have any effect. He took the position that he was acting in line of duty. In justice to Mr. Rogge, he always contended that he would not let the investigations interfere with our election.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Does the Senator from Louisiana consider that particular assistant United States attorney to be one of the governmental officials who are exempt from the Hatch law as a policy-making official?

Mr. HATCH. He would be exempt?

Mr. ELLENDER. No; he is not exempt; of course not. I would not say that he is exempt, if that is what the Senator from New Mexico has in mind. How could it be said that a prosecutor is exempt if he should use the power of his office to influence votes?

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is what I had in mind, because if I recall the provisions of the law sponsored by my colleague the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the idea was to prevent governmental officials from interfering in any way with or intimidating voters in elections.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I have a score more of these advertisements that have appeared in all the newspapers of the State. I have one here that might answer the question propounded to me a while ago by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] with reference to carpetbagging days in the South. I have before me an advertisement which appeared in all the newspapers of the State under date of January 10. It shows candidate Jones reading an inscription appearing at the base of a monument that was built at the head of Canal Street, New Orleans, over 65 years ago. On the base of that monument appears the following inscription:

We therefore call upon the people to assemble at Clay's statue, Canal Street, and declare that they mean to be free.

CITIZENS' COMMITTEE.

What caused the building of that statue was that 65 or 70 years ago the Federal Government was in charge of affairs in the South. The Federal Government permitted liberated Negroes, who had been slaves just a few years before, to vote, and these colored people were placed in charge of the affairs of Louisiana, and of many other States in the South.

And how? By interference on the part of the Federal Government. Sixty-five years ago a band of white citizens of my State met at the head of Canal Street in the city of New Orleans, and there followed a battle which liberated our State from further Federal control in the elections, and made Louisiana a white man's State. Evidently candidate Jones did not know what this inscription was all about.

Let me point out how far some of the Negro newspapers in the South have gone, and the advantage they have taken of this situation. I have before me several issues of the Sepia Socialite, a Negro newspaper published weekly in New Orleans. The issue of Saturday, January 6, 1940, carries the headline:

G-Men may see Negroes vote in January primaries. Editor writes Rogge. Louisiana Negroes eye election fraud investigation with hope.

This is the letter to which I referred a moment ago:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 4, 1940.

MR. O. JOHN ROGGE,

United States Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Hundreds of Negroes in the State of Louisiana, particularly in the city of New Orleans, who have qualified to vote in the January 16 State Democratic primaries, viewed with interest your declaration—according to the New Orleans States of January 3—to uphold the civil liberties statute which provides heavy penalties against infringement of any privileges accorded by the Federal Constitution.

Attempts heretofore on the part of qualified Negro voters to vote in Democratic primaries have met not only with oppression and intimidation but with repeated threats of violence.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the National Urban League, through their local branches, and the local Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, representing thousands of qualified voters in the State of Louisiana, join the Sepia Socialite in making this definite inquiry as to whether or not your declaration to investigate the violation of civil liberties statute would insure their proper franchise in the January 16 primary election and subsequent primary elections.

Yours very truly,

THE SEPIA SOCIALITE,
ALONZO B. WILLIS, Editor.

P. S.—This letter is being published in the National Negro Press, and we sincerely hope to publish a reassuring answer.

A. B. W.

I have not seen the reply. I am very curious to find out what it is going to be.

In another issue of the Sepia Socialite is this headline:

ELLENDER VERSUS ROGGE. In challenge over Negroes' right to vote Senator ELLENDER dares United States to uphold the law in Louisiana; Negro Democrats "scratched."

Then follows an article on the subject and an editorial which is not worth reading.

In order to show further that the Department of Justice has innocently or otherwise helped the opposition, I have before me a printed envelope addressed to—

Hon. O. John Rogge, Assistant United States Attorney General, Post Office Building, New Orleans, La.

In the upper left-hand corner appears:

Sam Jones City Headquarters, 123 Carondelet Street, New Orleans, La.

In order to demonstrate the extent to which the headquarters of Sam Jones went in order to obtain aid from the Federal prosecutor, affidavits in blank were sent to many citizens throughout the State and in the city of New Orleans telling them to look out, that the Government was after crooks, and that the Government would prosecute all crooks in these elections; and citizens were furnished with blank affidavits for use in this election. All of these blank affidavits were enclosed in self-addressed envelopes as above indicated.

Mr. President, the way the Jones headquarters used the Attorney General's office is absolutely wrong. They went beyond the pale of reason in this matter, and in no uncertain manner used the United States attorney's office and the Federal grand jury in order to further their cause. I do not mean to infer that the members of the grand juries were parties, nor the district attorney, to these schemes that were fostered by the Jones managers. Such an exhibition resulted in intimidating and terrorizing timid voters all over the State, because the opposition made it known that those supporting the Long administration had better be on their guard, since their votes would probably be questioned and they would be subject to a Federal investigation. At many voting precincts in our State strange men appeared who pretended to represent the Federal Government, and with the aid of a few confederates sought to harass and terrify voters.

I read a letter from the president of the Board of Supervisors of Elections, Parish of Orleans:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 21, 1940.

Senator ALLEN J. ELLENDER,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In the course of the investigation into alleged election frauds in the State of Louisiana the Federal Bureau of Investigation has been guilty of some very high-handed tactics. After Mr. Rogge made it known through the newspapers that he was interested in receiving complaints concerning past elections, followers of the Jones and Noe organizations naturally presented such complaints to Mr. Rogge and his assistants, Harold Rosenwald and Alfred Teton. As a result of these complaints agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation picked up at their homes and elsewhere persons who were accused by these Jones and Noe people. In some instances they were brought to the office of the F. B. I. in the Masonic Temple Building, New Orleans, and questioned by agents for hours, and some of these people, particularly a man named O'Connor, who is a clerk in the office of the clerk of the criminal district court for the Parish of Orleans, were fingerprinted. No reason was given by the agents to the persons fingerprinted as to why this was done, nor could there have been any reason, as the persons who were so fingerprinted had never been in any trouble in their lives.

After this was done the people who had been questioned by the agents, and many other members of the Long organization, were subpoenaed before the Federal grand jury. In many instances it developed that they had been commissioners in an election held in 1936, and even if they had been guilty of perpetrating irregularities at the polls, and even if those irregularities had violated Federal statutes, such violations had long been prescribed.

It is obvious that the sole purpose in questioning these witnesses by the agents and before the grand jury was to intimidate them, and to give the public the impression that the Federal Government was actively supervising the primary election. It was a common occurrence during this investigation to subpoena large numbers of persons, in excess of the number which could reasonably be expected to be heard on a particular day, with the result that the people were forced to sit around the hall waiting to be called before the grand jury, and then after sitting there for hours they would be told to come back the next day. While some of our commissioners were serving in the polls on election day they were served with subpoenas to appear before the grand jury the following morning; this in spite of the fact that such commissioners had been on duty at the polls continuously from 5:30 on the morning of the election until the next morning when they had to leave the polls and go before the grand jury. After sitting in the hall outside the grand jury room until about noon, they were told that they were excused.

The effect of this so-called investigation and the publicity given to it has been to keep many people away from the polls, for the reason that many people believed that if they made some innocent mistake in casting their ballot, they might be subject to arrest by the Federal authorities. Taking advantage of this situation, the Noe organization filed a list of some 7,000 people whom it claimed were not legally registered. It can be shown that not more than 500 of these persons were illegally registered and the balance were people who had every legal right to vote. No doubt many of these people refrained from voting for fear of some complication.

On the day of the election the New Orleans police arrested a man who threw or assisted in throwing a bottle of ink into one of the ballot boxes in the fifth precinct of the ninth ward. Investigation disclosed that this man was a member of a gang of thugs which Candidate James A. Noe recruited from a seamen's hall and saloons. At least a dozen of these thugs were apprehended by the police and admitted their complicity. These men admitted that they were employed by Noe and that a man in Noe headquarters furnished them with the bottles of ink. All of the men admitted that they had been to various polls during the day and that their instructions were to break up the polling places. The procedure was that two of the gang would pretend to engage in a fight and when the police would take off the combatants the rest of the gang would do their work. This was the procedure followed in the ink-throwing episode.

Although these men were subpoenaed before the Federal grand jury, it was necessary to drop the matter because there was no Federal jurisdiction. Despite this fact, witnesses have been subpoenaed to investigate an incident involving a fight at one of the polls in which a photographer is alleged to have been struck by a Long supporter. Apparently any incident involving a Long supporter may give rise to Federal jurisdiction, at least to the extent of compelling the man to appear before the grand jury, while on the other hand incidents involving followers of Jones and Noe are not matters of Federal jurisdiction. There can be no question but that the purpose of the alleged investigation into vote frauds has as its object the influencing of the election in favor of Sam Jones.

The Jones campaign managers have been in constant touch with Mr. Rogge and his assistants, in person and by telephone. It has gone so far that Mr. Charles Zatarain, one of the Jones campaign managers, and another man active in the Jones ranks called at the office of the Federal district attorney for the purpose of having their picture taken with Mr. Rogge. The whole thing was arranged, even to the presence of newspaper photographers and reporters at the time of the arrival of Mr. Zatarain and his companion. This occurred the day after you made your attack on the tactics of Mr. Rogge, and Mr. Rogge refused to have his picture taken. However, Zatarain and his companion had their picture taken entering the door of the district attorney's office in such a manner that the name on the door was visible in the photograph. This photograph appeared on the front pages of the New Orleans newspapers in connection with a story that Zatarain had given Mr. Rogge 20 election complaints in connection with the then coming primary.

Mr. Rosenwald has stated that the investigations in Louisiana were political, and since the first primary Mr. Rosenwald has stated that he intended to do everything he can within reason to elect Sam Jones in the second primary. As stated above, Rosenwald has been in constant communication with various Jones leaders. His particular friends are J. Raburn Monroe, Richard Montgomery, Jr., and E. A. Stephens, who are official Jones leaders. Montgomery in particular has practically made the United States attorney's office his headquarters. He has been in daily telephonic and personal communication with Rosenwald and with Mr. Rogge when he is in New Orleans. Rosenwald has stated that in his opinion the primary held on January 16 was absolutely fair and honest and that the police had performed splendid work and that in every instance where a complaint was made it was satisfactorily adjusted by the police, and that the few complaints made against the policemen had been satisfactorily explained. He stated further that he intended to issue a public statement to that effect. In spite of this statement, the Times-Picayune and Item quote him as having said that on Tuesday coming the grand jury will proceed with its investigations of election frauds. (See clippings enclosed.) This would indicate that he intends to proceed with the investigation of last Tuesday's primary.

A few days ago Mr. Rogge announced in Washington that his department is investigating the possibility of civil-rights cases in connection with the Louisiana election. Mr. Teton has stated that they are investigating the possibility that election commissioners and officials may be considered State officers in view of the fact that the Legislature of Louisiana has passed laws regulating party primaries. It is their theory that, if such commissioners are State officers, the interference by such commissioners with the right of any person to vote would constitute a Federal offense and would subject the commissioner to a suit in damages in the Federal courts. It was brought to Mr. Teton's attention that this would mean that any Negro who was deprived of the right of voting would have a right of action against the commissioners, and he stated that this was quite true. When it was pointed out to Mr. Teton that this would be a very dangerous procedure in the South, he stated that as far as he was concerned it was simply a matter of a right given by the Constitution of the United States. Of course, in this connection it must be said that Mr. Teton is simply carrying out instructions which he has received from Mr. Rogge to try to find some way in which primary elections may be brought under Federal jurisdiction.

It is obvious that these people are not only meddling in State affairs but they are attempting to influence the coming primary by trying to sell the people of this State the idea that this administration is corrupt and crooked and would have stolen the first primary if it had not been for their presence in the State. In the words of Mr. Rosenwald himself, they have been doing and intend to do everything possible to put over the election of Sam Jones. Of course, Mr. Rosenwald added "within reason," but his idea of reason seems to be very unreasonable.

I hope that the above information will be of some benefit to you.

Yours very truly,

CLEM H. SEHRT.

On January 11, to my complete surprise, I made headlines in the New Orleans newspapers. While walking on Canal Street in New Orleans, I heard the newsboys shouting, "Murphy gets quick O. K. ELLENDER hit." I did not know what had happened. I began to sympathize with the Ellender who had been hit—one of my relatives, no doubt. I thought perhaps a car had run over him, or some bandit had slugged him. [Laughter.] I immediately purchased a newspaper, and the first thing that met my eye was the following editorial appearing on the front page of the New Orleans States.

I shall read a portion of this editorial:

The quality of statesmanship displayed by ALLEN J. ELLENDER, junior Senator from Louisiana, yesterday, when he protested against Federal officials interesting themselves in an honest election in Louisiana, shows that he is still running true to form.

Mr. ELLENDER's protest, telegraphed to Washington, against the activities of O. John Rogge and his aids was really directed at Attorney General Frank Murphy, who has been nominated by President Roosevelt to the Supreme Bench.

In a statement which I shall read in a few moments, I propose to show how wrong the newspapers were.

Instead of forwarding his complaints directly to the chief legal officer of the United States, Senator ELLENDER wired his strictures to Senator BURKE, Democrat, of Nebraska, chairman of the committee which is investigating Mr. Murphy's fitness to sit on the Bench of the highest court in the land.

Mr. ELLENDER has again succeeded in making a laughingstock of himself, and again brought this State notoriety which it can ill afford.

Just how any honest citizen can complain against honest elections is amazing. If the United States Government hasn't a right to see that public officials are elected according to the will of the people, then who has?

In his wire to Senator BURKE, Mr. ELLENDER said: "I do not want to believe that the head of the Justice Department is aware of how his assistants are misusing their sacred trust."

"These tactics are nothing short of persecution, and are intended to intimidate citizens of a sovereign State."

Mr. ELLENDER knows, and everybody else in Louisiana knows, that the political machine of which he is a cog and to which he owes all that he has, politically, has been stuffing ballot boxes and crooking elections in Louisiana for years.

I ask that the entire editorial be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From New Orleans States of January 11, 1940]

MR. ELLENDER'S SLAP AT HONEST ELECTIONS AND MR. FRANK MURPHY
The quality of statesmanship displayed by ALLEN J. ELLENDER, junior Senator from Louisiana, yesterday when he protested against Federal officials interesting themselves in an honest election in Louisiana, shows that he is still running true to form.

In his wire to Senator BURKE, Mr. ELLENDER said: "I do not want to believe that the head of the Justice Department is aware of how his assistants are misusing their sacred trust. These tactics are nothing short of persecution, and are intended to intimidate the citizens of a sovereign State."

Mr. ELLENDER knows, and everybody else in Louisiana knows, that the political machine of which he is a cog and to which he owes all that he has, politically, has been stuffing ballot boxes and crooking elections in Louisiana for years.

Mr. ELLENDER should know that, even now, thousands of illegal names have been registered from vacant lots, vacant houses, tumbledown shacks, and in some cases as many as 15 or 20 alleged voters are registered from one room. And yet Mr. ELLENDER has the unmitigated gall, the colossal nerve, to complain because the United States Government, standing on its rights, has raised a voice in protest at the contemplated stealing of the election by the Maestri-Leche-Long machine, of which Earl K. Long and ALLEN J. ELLENDER are parts.

Mr. ELLENDER should know, as everybody else knows, that his political machine has forced unfortunate women to register in droves, has compelled down-and-out and despondent men to lend themselves to fraudulent registration.

As a United States Senator, Mr. ELLENDER should know that the Constitution of the United States, bought in blood, guarantees to each and every citizen the right to cast his ballot and the right to have it honestly counted.

Mr. ELLENDER should know that his political machine has profited and ridden to power by crooking elections and intimidating voters.

Mr. ELLENDER should take some interest in the city of New Orleans occasionally. He should go to the foot of Canal Street and there bow his head in shame before a monument erected to heroes who gave their blood that Louisiana might be free of carpet-baggery and crookery. But Mr. ELLENDER does nothing like this. While the Senate is in session, while legislation vitally affecting Louisiana is being considered, while New Orleans is losing the Algiers Navy Yard, while the State is seeing its sugar interests legislated against, Mr. ELLENDER is on the stump for a political machine, some of whose members are on their way to the Federal penitentiary, and scores of others are under indictment because they stole money belonging to the poor people of this State.

Instead of aiding Louisiana, Mr. ELLENDER blazons its shame to the world, a shame fastened on its fair brow by a machine which in the past has stuffed ballot boxes and browbeaten voters.

We quote again from Mr. ELLENDER's telegram: "These tactics are nothing short of persecution and are intended to intimidate the citizens of a sovereign State."

Who is intimidating the citizens of a sovereign State? Is it intimidation for the Federal Government to place its arms around the weak and unfortunate and assure them that their ballots will be counted? Is it intimidation for the Federal Government to assure the Nation that Louisiana, with its help, may have an honest election?

Or, Mr. ELLENDER, is it intimidation for the political machine now in power to pad registration rolls, to go out on the highways and byways and tell in many instances poorly paid employees that if they don't vote for the machine they will lose their jobs?

Is it intimidation, Mr. ELLENDER, for the Maestri-Leche-Long machine to take a part of the salaries of State employees, paid them out of taxpayers' money, and tell them, "If you don't come through, we'll kick you out?"

Is this the same Mr. ELLENDER who has seen elections brazenly stolen, defiantly stolen, in New Orleans without one protest by the machine to which he belongs?

Is this the same Mr. ELLENDER who was speaker of the house when hundreds of New Orleans election crooks received legislative pardons after Eugene Stanley, the district attorney, had convicted three of them in the first cases brought to trial?

Is this the same Mr. ELLENDER who insisted to the very last that he was for Richard W. Leche for Federal judge of the eastern district of Louisiana?

Is this the same Mr. ELLENDER who never has withdrawn publicly that endorsement, and so far as the people know is still for Richard W. Leche for the Federal bench?

Is this the same Mr. ELLENDER who when speaker of the house saw administration bills railroaded through that body without the least consideration?

Is this the same Mr. ELLENDER who was quoted as having declared against a free press in this country, but when the going got hot, denied he had taken such a stand?

Is this the same Mr. ELLENDER who never received the support of Huey P. Long for any major office while that political leader was alive?

We are led to believe that this is the same Mr. ELLENDER, that this is the same distinguished United States Senator who has broadcast to the world that because the representatives of the Federal Government here have interested themselves in an honest election, "these tactics are nothing short of persecution and are intended to intimidate the citizens of a sovereign State."

The outbreak of Mr. ELLENDER is an admission of a desperate man who knows that the people of Louisiana wish to see the rule of dictators broken, wish to see democracy restored.

Mr. ELLENDER knows that with an honest election, the Earl K. Long ticket, put in the field by Robert S. Maestri and now backed by all of the gang which has been in power in this State for the past few years, is headed for the scrap pile.

Even if Mr. ELLENDER could be successful in his efforts to curb the activities of the Federal Government in its election investigation, there is not a particle of doubt that Eugene Stanley will be the next attorney general of Louisiana. If the Federal Government fails to put election crooks behind the bars, through some inconceivable twist of fate, Eugene Stanley will put them in Angola.

He has done it before and he'll do it again.

So weep and wail, Mr. ELLENDER.

Your protest, your asinine and ignorant display of statesmanship as conceived by you will avail you nothing.

Mr. ELLENDER. Here [exhibiting] are some glaring headlines over articles which, as I shall show the Senate after a while in my written statement, were not justified. The press simply misrepresented the facts in order to put me and others of the administration in bad favor with the people. The articles appeared in the New Orleans States under such headlines as—

Appointment of Murphy protested by ELLENDER. Rogge is defended against ELLENDER. Applaud Rogge; hit ELLENDER's attack.

I will indicate what that attack was. As I said a while ago, all the candidates on the opposition ticket scored me and others for the position in which we found ourselves because of such unjust and unwarranted newspaper notoriety. They took statements attributed to me, twisted them around, and said that I was opposing the nomination of Mr. Murphy because he had sent some prosecutors into Louisiana to arrest and prosecute crooks. That is the interpretation they put on my statement. At no time was it shown that I opposed Mr. Murphy and as a matter of fact I never opposed him. I am going to take occasion now to read that statement, show the Senate what I said, and then Senators can determine for themselves whether the newspapers were justified in their attacks upon me for what I said about Mr. Rogge.

On January 11, 1940, I issued the following statement, which I caused to be delivered by special messenger to all the daily newspapers and press agencies in New Orleans, including the Associated Press:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR ALLEN J. ELLENDER, NEW ORLEANS, LA., JANUARY 11, 1940

Candidate Jones is quoted as saying, among other things, that, "Senator ELLENDER * * * objected to the nomination of Frank Murphy to the Supreme Court on grounds that Murphy's associates had 'persecuted' this gang in the Federal investigations of the scandals in Louisiana."

The New Orleans States takes a pot shot at me in its issue of January 11, and writes, among other things, that my protest, telegraphed to Washington, against the activities of Rogge and his aides was really directed at Attorney General Murphy; and instead of forwarding the complaints directly to Murphy, I wired Senator BURKE, chairman of the committee which is investigating Mr. Murphy's fitness to sit on the Supreme Court bench; that I again brought this State notoriety which it can ill afford.

The rest of the daily papers published in this State, and which have endorsed Candidate Jones, were quick to publish their version of the affair in their own way, and based their stories on the much-abused term "it is reported" or "it is rumored."

Candidate Jones and the daily press of our State, running true to form, have maliciously distorted and misstated the facts, with the view of again attempting to mislead the public. I seldom answer the newspapers, especially those published in New Orleans, but they have been so unfair in this instance that I am desirous of giving the facts in documentary form so that the public can judge for itself.

A good many of my colleagues in the Senate are very much interested in the affairs of Louisiana, especially my good friend Senator BURKE, of Nebraska. When I attended the opening of Congress on January 3, he inquired about the recent developments in Louisiana, and I proceeded to give him the story.

I am sorry the Senator from Nebraska is not present today. I thought he would be.

I told him of how unfair the press of the State was to our cause, and he suggested that I keep him posted. Attorney General Murphy's name had not been sent to the Senate at the time, nor had Senator BURKE been selected chairman of the subcommittee that later was named to pass on Mr. Murphy's qualifications.

On Friday, January 5, I was advised of a statement given to the press by Mr. Rogge, inviting persons to contact the Department of Justice and report all frauds in the forthcoming election so that proper action could be taken against the offenders. I became incensed and thought it unfair for a prosecutor to prejudge an election and assume that it would be stolen. I am still of that opinion. I suggested to my informer that he immediately air mail copies of the newspapers containing the statement to the Attorney General, and on my return to Louisiana I dispatched the following telegram:

That telegram is the one I read a few moments ago but, as it is a part of the statement, I shall let it go into the RECORD again:

"HOUMA, LA., January 8, 1940.

"Hon. FRANK MURPHY,

"The Attorney General, Washington, D. C.:

"Hope you have received newspaper clippings sent to you my request, particularly one appearing Times Picayune, January 5, with headline written across entire page, as follows: 'Rogge invites vote-fraud evidence.' As I stated to you on many occasions, I do not mind a fair and just investigation, but I believe it unfair for a Federal prosecutor of Mr. Rogge's prominence to issue such statements in advance of the election. Our people cannot be intimidated. I feel confident you do not countenance such tactics, but I am calling them to your attention for your scrutiny. A telegram from you indicating your position in this matter which I may use would be very much appreciated. In the meantime I am making a newspaper file for probable presentation to the Senate at an early date. In view of the fact that our election will take place on the 16th this month, and in further view of the fact that our State has been under constant investigation since last June, is it not apropos to ask that the grand jury investigations be postponed until after election? I believe this is a fair request and I am in hopes that you will accede to it."

The New Orleans States recommended to its readers, in no uncertain terms, that I should have notified Mr. Murphy instead of Senator BURKE. Well, I did notify Mr. Murphy.

After dictating the foregoing telegram, I sent the following message to Senator BURKE, which was in accord with my promise to him:

I read this telegram a few moments ago, but will let it go in the RECORD again as a part of the statement:

"HOUMA, LA., January 8, 1940.

"Hon. EDWARD R. BURKE,

"United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

"Am air mailing clippings reference Louisiana situation and Justice Department, which may be of interest to you. Would like opportunity of presenting more. I do not want to believe that head of Justice Department is aware of how his assistants are misusing their sacred trust. These tactics are nothing short of persecution and are intended to intimidate the citizens of a sovereign State. Regards."

I am informed that when the clippings and the foregoing telegram reached Senator BURKE's office, he was not in the city of Washington.

In response to my wire, Mr. Murphy sent me the following message:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 9, 1940.

HON. ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
Houma, La.:

Department of Justice has no desire or intention to interfere in pending election campaign. Statement of Assistant Attorney General Rogge was issued in response to numerous complaints and in course of regular duty. Grand jury investigations have been completed. Rogge will discuss situation with you on return to Louisiana tomorrow.

FRANK MURPHY,
Attorney General.

Today, January 11, I received the following telegram from Senator BURKE:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 11, 1940.

HON. ALLEN J. ELLENDER:

My attention called Louisiana newspaper reports your opposition to confirmation Attorney General Murphy as Justice Supreme Court. Stop. This report entirely erroneous. Stop. From the first mention of the Attorney General name you have expressed to me your strong approval. Stop. Before nomination was made we discussed Louisiana approaching election, and the danger of unwarranted Federal interference in State elections. Stop. Because of my interest in preserving States rights I asked you to keep me informed. Stop. It is my hope that you will continue to do so. Stop. I favor Federal action where States prove impotent but strongly oppose such action otherwise. Stop. This has nothing to do with pending confirmation of Mr. Murphy, which I feel sure will be granted by overwhelming vote including your own.

EDWARD R. BURKE,
United States Senator.

These are the facts, and I have no apologies to make. Louisiana has been subjected to much unjust criticism. I commended Mr. Murphy, as well as Mr. Rogge, on many occasions for their splendid work in helping to rid our State of wrongdoers. I believe that the same results could have been obtained without the enormous amount of filthy and uncalled-for publicity that has scourged Louisiana for the past 6 months. I am aware of the part played by the press in helping to uncover the frauds committed, and I commend it for its work, but I believe that any fair-minded citizen will agree with me that it has gone too far, and in many cases has grossly abused its constitutional privilege—freedom of the press. I believe it is harmful rather than helpful for a prosecutor to try his cases in the newspapers. The finger of scorn should not be pointed in the direction of any citizen, unless the evidence warrants a conviction.

I have faith in my people. I have always served them conscientiously and to the best of my ability. I know that my record is clean and will stand the test, and I cannot be intimidated by such mean, filthy, and uncalled-for editorials as were written about me in recent months, particularly the one appearing in the New Orleans States of January 11.

I believe the above statement is clear and to the point, and one would imagine that no further attempt would have been made by the press and opposing candidates to distort the facts; but let me read from an Associated Press headline, which appeared in the State Times, published in Baton Rouge, La., under date of January 12, 1940. The Associated Press is considered one of the leading news-distributing agencies of the Nation, and why its representative should deliberately misquote me I cannot understand. It may be due to the fact that the reporters who write for the Associated Press are also employed by Louisiana newspapers. Listen to this:

ELLENDER IN NEW ATTACK ON O. J. ROGGE—ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL GETS AFFIDAVITS CHARGING ATTEMPTS OF BRIBERY OF JONES COMMISSIONERS IN NEW ORLEANS

NEW ORLEANS, January 12 (AP).—

The dispatch is under an Associated Press date line, as I have said—

Senator ALLEN J. ELLENDER (Democrat, Louisiana) declared today that he had "no apologies to make" for his charge that Attorney General Murphy's assistants were "misusing their sacred trust" in prosecuting the Louisiana scandals investigation, under which 10 men are under prison terms and scores have been indicted by Federal and State grand juries.

In other words, the same interpretation that was placed on a statement previously attributed to me was again placed by the Associated Press upon my written statement. I ask if anyone reading my statement, which I have just read, can legitimately conclude that I had "no apologies to make for the charge that Attorney General Murphy's assistants 'were misusing their sacred trust' in prosecuting the Louisiana scandals investigation under which 10 men were under prison terms and scores of others have been indicted." At no time nor place did I even insinuate that I was against Mr. Murphy for the Supreme Court, nor did I charge Mr. Murphy or his assistants of "misusing their sacred trust" in prosecuting scandals in Louisiana. On the contrary, my statement commends them for their work.

The Associated Press reporter continued to make other comments about my statement and concluded his article by quoting my statement verbatim. It is possible that the full text of my statement was not printed in newspapers published outside of the State, but only the distorted version of the Associated Press reporter which I have just quoted. Seven days later one Westbrook Pegler, who I understand was tanning his hide on a Florida beach at the time, uncorked his bottle of vitriol and scribbled the following article under his copyrighted heading "Fair Enough." I read from the Washington Post under date of January 19, 1940, 7 days after I had issued my written statement; but evidently, as I said, this man used the distorted article from the Associated Press and probably others that I did not see. He wrote:

FAIR ENOUGH
(By Westbrook Pegler)
ELLENDER'S PROTEST

For raw effrontery and sneering defiance of the bedraggled American ideal of popular government the protest of Senator ALLEN ELLENDER, of Louisiana, against confirmation of Frank Murphy's appointment to the Supreme Court has had no equal since the last days of the Senator's late foe, Huey P. Long, himself. The question of Murphy's fitness for the Court need not be considered at all in this connection. He has been confirmed, anyway, and ELLENDER's protest, far from reflecting on the appointee, amounted to a tribute.

ELLENDER opposed Murphy's confirmation because the Department of Justice, under Murphy, had repudiated the disgraceful political bargaining between the New Deal and the incorrigible thieves of Louisiana government and politics with whom ELLENDER had closely associated and collaborated for years. Murphy created a Federal receivership of a State which had drifted into civic and political bankruptcy. The Attorney General himself had not been a party to the second Louisiana purchase and refused to be bound by its terms.

Therefore, when a New Orleans newspaper dug up evidence of new rottenness in the State government, Murphy moved in along the same lines of attack that have been followed in Kansas City and Atlantic City.

STATE'S SITUATION CLOSE TO ANARCHY

The gang which ELLENDER himself served as speaker of the lower house of the Louisiana Legislature and as United States Senator in Washington has been thrown into confusion and many of its members have been thrown into prison, where they, and others still at large, belong.

"I do not want to believe that the head of the Department of Justice is aware of how his assistants are misusing their sacred trust," he said in a telegram to the Senate Judiciary Committee. "These tactics are nothing short of persecution, and are intended to intimidate the citizens of a sovereign State."

Now, unfortunately, there may be something to what ELLENDER says about sovereignty, but, more unfortunately, his gang has created a situation so close to anarchy in Louisiana that the national authority had to move in. A State has certain responsibilities attending the privilege of statehood.

If a State simply collapses, as Louisiana was on the point of doing, the other States are endangered. It has been held and by now conceded that if a State is unable to care for its poverty and unemployment the Federal Government has a right and, as Senator ELLENDER has said, a duty to intervene.

STATE INSTITUTIONS WERE GRAFT SOURCE

The same theory would justify the intervention of the Department of Justice to do work which crooked judges and prosecutors of the State court could not be trusted to do. And Louisiana, under the mob of which ELLENDER was a member and to which he had given important service, was not really a State at all. The gang had stolen from every public treasury, from the township up to the Federal; they had robbed the State University, corrupted the education of the students with their foul contempt for the American form of government, and had even chiseled money from the lunatics and the sick poor for "testimonial" contributions to grafters in office and out.

The mental picture of ELLENDER sitting on his puppet throne as speaker of the State house of representatives in the sessions when Huey was abolishing popular government and the right of citizens to inspect the State's financial records, will not be forgotten by anyone who saw him there. He said nothing against persecution and intimidation of the citizens of a sovereign State then, and he owes his job in the United States Senate to the very thieves whom he has the gall to depict as victims of oppression after they have robbed the State into destitution and made junk of the liberties of the people.

RESIGNATION ASKED AS EFFECTIVE REBUKE

Murphy's speech in New York last Sunday is a good reply to ELLENDER and a reminder to the people of Chicago as well as those of Louisiana.

"We need, somehow, to erect safeguards that will protect the public service from corruption," he said. "Don't be so cynical as to believe that there must be corruption or a measure of it in municipal and State and Federal Governments. It doesn't need to be at all."

If ELLENDER really wished to serve the cause of good and decent government he could find no more effective rebuke to its enemies than to resign from the United States Senate as a repudiation of the kind of politics and the type of public enemies who sent him there.

Surely, if this disciple of "fair enough" had taken "enough" time from diving and splashing and dancing with the mermaids on the Florida coast, he could have easily obtained the true facts. But what is the use? He probably would not have considered the true facts, preferring to pad his vicious column with his own interpretations, born of his evil, warped, narrow, malicious, bigoted, and prejudiced mind.

Oh, but how newspapers find comfort in headlining the misdeeds of public officials of any prominence. Although Mr. Pegler violates every rule of the game in his attempt to rob men of their most cherished possession, nothing is said, but he receives commendation rather than criticism. A poor man who steals a loaf of bread to save his family from starvation goes to the pen, but one who deliberately "filches from me my good name" gets by, and receives bountiful remuneration for shattering the truth.

Years ago Shakespeare wrote these lines:

Good name in man and woman, dear my lord,
Is the immediate jewel of their souls:
Who steals my purse steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name
Robs me of that which neither enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed.

If the immortal Shakespeare were alive today he would not be apt to receive the inspiration that prompted the foregoing quotation, because some of our modern columnists—some people call them "calumnists"—are handsomely paid for deliberately robbing one of his most cherished possession.

So much for that incident. Let me quote a few published statements of Mr. Jones, the candidate who is championed by the press of my State. Here is one appearing in the Times-Picayune of Monday, January 15, 1940, under a Lafayette, La., headline:

Jones told the people of this sugar-producing section of the State that "they were sold out by the State-administration gang and their Representatives in Congress."

"The sugar bowl of Louisiana," Jones said, "has a $40,000,000 crop while it ought to have an $80,000,000 crop. The sugar growers were sold out by Louisiana's national representatives for a mess of pottage. Your representatives in Washington sold out for a few jobs for their political henchmen."

"If Louisiana's representatives in Washington had not sold out, the sugar industry of Louisiana should have been at least doubled, which would have meant thousands and thousands of jobs to men who are on relief."

Again, in the Times-Picayune of January 9, 1940, under a headline from Des Allemands, La., Mr. Jones is quoted as follows:

Moving down to Luling during the afternoon, Jones denounced the State administration and its two senatorial adherents, Senators JOHN H. OVERTON and ALLEN J. ELLENDER, for failure to obtain better quotas for the Louisiana sugar growers.

"Instead of being in Washington trying to help the Louisiana farmers," Mr. Jones said, "the State's national representatives are down here campaigning in an effort to keep the State gang in power."

"Louisiana sugarcane planters last year were compelled to plow up 38,000 acres. If OVERTON and ELLENDER were on the job in Washington, Louisiana's sugar crop should be $80,000,000 instead of $40,000,000."

I know that the newspapers of my State are acquainted with the true facts, and that the quoted statements are not well founded, but they print such false statements in the hope that it will help their candidate.

I do not have to apologize to any one for my efforts in behalf of my people. Let me present a few telegrams from some of them, with particular reference to my work for the sugarcane farmers of Louisiana. I am not going to burden the Senate with reading numerous telegrams, but I ask unanimous consent to have a few of them printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BULOW in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegrams are as follows:

JEANERETTE, LA., March 25, 1939.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I stated a few minutes ago, the press of my State, as well as the opposing candidates, stopped at nothing in their vilification, slander, and libel of the supporters of the Long administration. Permit me to refer briefly to their attack on Hon. Robert S. Maestri, mayor of New Orleans. Every effort has been made to indict this good man. He has been depicted and caricatured as a despoiler of public office. He has paid no attention to these accusations but has kept on working for the benefit of the people of New Orleans. Slander and libel have been heaped upon him because he chose to support Hon. Earl K. Long for the Governorship.

In order to expose these scandalmongers and to show their utter insincerity, let me read a few excerpts from articles and editorials appearing in the New Orleans newspapers—Mr. Maestri's present critics—in order to show what they thought of his honor the mayor only a short time before he declared his support of Governor Long.

I read from an editorial appearing in the Times-Picayune under date of August 17, 1938:

RECORD PERFORMANCE

Closing the second year of his administration, Mayor Maestri is receiving deserved praise for his surprisingly efficient conduct of our municipal business. When he took over the mayoralty 2 years ago, New Orleans was floundering in a financial morass created partly by the depression and in part by systematic political oppression which included raids upon its normal revenues and its credit.

It was then in the hands of the opposition.

It owed the banks millions; its bills for purchases of supplies were long overdue; its streets and other physical equipment, lacking money for their maintenance and repair, were in lamentable condition.

With Mr. Maestri's induction as mayor, the political persecution ceased; the city's normal revenues were restored to control of its own government. Because of the accumulated floating debt, growing relief needs, and other conditions, added taxes were provided.

So the Maestri administration was armed with exceptional advantages to meet exceptionally bad conditions. Restoration of the city's finances to what might be termed their normal status—which was not very good—was by way of being assured. Skeptical Orleanians expected that much, but no more. To their astonishment, Mayor Maestri has accomplished in the past 24 months more than they dreamed or his supporters dared hope.

Since he took office, 2 years ago, fifteen and a half million dollars of city debts have been paid, including three and a half millions of its bonded indebtedness, all its borrowings from the banks, and other millions of its outstanding paving certificates. For the first time in modern history, New Orleans is on a cash basis and is taking all discounts on its current purchases.

The physical improvements wrought are no less astonishing. Many miles of city streets have been paved or repaved. City buildings have been restored to first-class condition; our parks have been immensely bettered both in appearance and equipment; playgrounds and the neutral grounds of our boulevards have shared those betterments. Millions of W. P. A. money have aided greatly in the physical transformation of New Orleans. The mayor has enjoyed the cooperation of both State and Federal Government agencies. But the record features of his administration are owed chiefly to Mr. Maestri's leadership and personal qualities—to his efficiency as businessman, to his ability to get things done by teamwork, to his driving energy and personal supervision of the vital details. The city's material achievements under his leadership have not been matched locally within the memory of living men; no other American city, we believe, has equalled them during the same period.

One other high credit goes to the second year of the Maestri administration: By his order and insistence, the slot-machine racket—that formerly filched thousands of dollars monthly from the pockets of people least able to afford the drain—has been driven from New Orleans. The racket is still bent upon the city's recapture; its return is still predicted and feared. But Mayor Maestri has kept it in exile for a period long enough to prove that this mechanical banditry can be driven out and kept out.

Ancient political abuses survive and flourish here. But Mayor Maestri's outstanding services to and for the city in other fields fully entitle him to the sincere praise and hearty congratulations, in which this newspaper joins, that are pouring in upon him this week.

Here is another one from the New Orleans States under date of August 17, 1938:

OUR CHIEF KNOCKER

Meaningless, honeyed platitudes, bombastic exaggerations, sweet-scented words have no place in the vocabulary of Robert Sidney Maestri. He is a blunt, plain man, who speaks your language and our language. He makes no promises. He simply goes ahead about his business giving the city a day's work in return for the privilege of being its mayor.

Mr. Maestri is today observing the second anniversary of his occupancy of the mayoralty office of the city of New Orleans. In these 730 days he has been the biggest knocker that New Orleans ever knew or had. He has knocked vociferously and continuously.

"If you can't boast, don't knock," a pet phrase of civic organizations and complacent citizens, means nothing to Mr. Maestri. He ignores such a platitude.

When he took office, he told the citizens of New Orleans that they had the worst streets in America, and he immediately set about giving the city better streets. Today, miles of paving, miles of sidewalks, great boulevards placed with an eye to traffic, comfort and beauty, have taken the place of mud thoroughfares; of crooked and rough streets. Robert Maestri knocked the old order of things and is still knocking—knocking for better and more arteries for the convenience of New Orleans.

Seven hundred and thirty days ago Robert Maestri knocked the financial set-up of the city; plainly and bluntly he told us that the city's funds were being dissipated in interest; that debts were being piled up, and that money was being spent extravagantly. How he wailed, and how he knocked! As the result of his knocking, the city's government debt has been reduced nearly $15,000,000, the last loan obtained from the banks has been paid, and the city has not borrowed a dollar from the banks since December, 1936. Notes have been paid to the value of more than $6,000,000, and accounts long past due have been paid. The city's bonded indebtedness has been reduced, and New Orleans today has a financial set-up regarded as better than that of any other city in the country. But Mr. Maestri is still knocking. He is never satisfied.

Tax dodgers have been made to pay their taxes, and how he did knock the shirkers in this direction!

Mr. Maestri got as mad as a wet hen when he inspected some of the public buildings in New Orleans. What he said about them cannot be printed in a family newspaper.

He had them repaired, he had them cleaned, some he had demolished. New fire houses, repaired fire houses, and many other new and cleaned city buildings marked the progress of his trail.

And this knocker, regardless of how much he tried to hide it, has poetry in his soul and music in his heart. Ugliness ruffles him. When he took office he immediately commenced knocking the condition of our parks and neutral grounds. Today flowers bloom where weeds grew. Today fountains musically splash where spots, repugnant to the eyes, once dotted the city's grounds.

Mr. Maestri, like all of us common people, knows the problem of the boys and girls in the streets. His heart is with them. He knocked their treatment by the city. So he has enlarged and extended playgrounds.

He knew the trials of the poor and the needy. He said it was a shame the way the city treated its dependents. Today, he is remedying these conditions, and making the lot of the underprivileged easier, permitting them to walk in more pleasant paths.

We fail to recall any department of the city that Mr. Maestri hasn't knocked; and we fail to recall a single department that he has failed to improve. When he took office, the "old regulars" and the Louisiana Democratic Association were at each other's throats, snarling and growling as only political wolves can snarl and growl. Mr. Maestri told them they were a bunch of soreheads, ruining the city, and now they commune together as brethren.

When Mr. Maestri took office, city employees, as they do in every other community, neglected their work. Now the city gets a fair day's work for a day's pay. Contractors were accustomed to slip things over on the city. Today Mr. Maestri demands a dollar's worth of value for every dollar spent. All up and down the line he knocked everybody and everything. Out of this chaos he is bringing a smoothly working city organization that will give the best results to the greatest number of people.

Mr. Maestri's success is due to common horse sense, common business sense applied to the operation of a city. He is recognized as a great businessman, and he has applied the same rules of operation toward a city as he has to his private enterprises.

Mr. Maestri has shown the people of New Orleans that truth is greater than fiction. We have a wonderful city, we have a great city, we have a city where it's pleasant to live and peaceful to die, we have a city with tremendous advantages, we have a city to love, but we will never get the greatest good from all of these qualities until we also recognize our faults and admit them. Mr. Chief Knocker Maestri, we salute you.

May you knock long and loudly.

Who knows but that your knocking may extend to other and wider fields after you have finished with us.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point another article commending the mayor for the fine work he did. The article was published in the Houston Post for May 21, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

RECONSTRUCTION OF NEW ORLEANS PUTS SPOTLIGHT ON MAYOR MAESTRI—NO. 1 POLITICIAN LEADS BANKRUPT CITY INTO BLACK

(By Charles P. Nutter)

NEW ORLEANS, May 20.—Many residents here grow lyrical when they begin to tell you about "Bob," whom they claim will outshine the fame of the charming old French quarter as the city's trademark as soon as the United States hears more of him.

"Bob" is what nearly everyone, high as well as low, now calls Robert Sidney Maestri, dour, blunt-spoken mayor who in less than 3 years has accomplished a civic reconstruction job the city challenges any other in America to equal.

The city calls a holiday every time the anniversary of his inaugural rolls around. "Ahead with Bob" placards appear all over town. Firms and individuals far and wide pay for advertisements in the newspapers to thank the mayor for his work.

NO. 1 POLITICIAN

Today he is the No. 1 politician in the State, dominant leader of the still intact Huey Long political machine, and the man whom many say will name the next Governor if he doesn't want the job himself, which he says he doesn't.

"I got too much to do here in New Orleans," he says when anyone asks him about the governorship. His present term has 3 years to run.

New Orleans was in technical bankruptcy when Maestri took over on August 17, 1936; the city owed more than $15,000,000 in current unpaid bills, credit bad, and taxes long in arrears. Today the city is on a strictly cash basis, well over $15,000,000 in debt has been wiped out at an average rate of half a million dollars monthly.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS

During that time the city has financed out of current revenues public improvements which have changed the appearance of the city. Municipal economies have saved millions and put the city on a cash basis.

In 30 months, Maestri, with the aid of the Works Progress Administration, built or rebuilt 231.44 miles of streets, 20 percent of all the streets in New Orleans, more than doubled the facilities of the city park, put in 65 miles of new drainage canals, laid out 55 miles of floral trails through scenic New Orleans, established or renovated 62 public playgrounds, drained and prepared for residences thousands of acres of swamp on nearby Lake Pontchartrain shores, put in 25 miles of new sewers, remodeled and painted most of the city's fire and police stations, and aided scores of public and private schools to remodel and improve their buildings.

W. P. A. WORK PRAISED

Disregarding instructions from Washington, Mayor Maestri took the shovels away from W. P. A. workers here and gave them steam-shovels, trucks, cranes, and draglines to work with. According to Harry Hopkins, New Orleans did the finest work with W. P. A. of any city in the United States.

He accomplished all this with less than 10,000 relief workers and only a third as much funds as allotted to New Orleans prior to his administration. He borrowed equipment from great utilities and private firms and wore it out building streets, and drew the owners' thanks and more equipment to use up.

On April 1, the city administration reported that 66 percent of the real-estate taxes already had been paid for the year, and 59 percent of the personal property taxes.

The mayor's manner is unique.

VISITS PROJECTS

Each morning at 8 o'clock he climbs into his car and in the next 4 or 5 hours personally inspects every major construction project in the city. He averages more than 80 miles daily, and never misses a day; even Sunday, for some of the projects work day and night and Sunday in order to give fullest use of the city's mechanical equipment.

Mayor Maestri, though born here 49 years ago of Italian parentage, has adopted the methods of a Scotchman in remaking New Orleans. He wastes nothing, and no gift of waste or refuse is too small or apparently useless for him to utilize.

In a city where stone lies 10,000 feet down, Maestri and his engineers hit upon tearing up the cobblestones of miles of nearly ruined streets, to form curbstones for other streets, flagstones for parks, park benches, and other beautification work. He replaced the cobblestones with new concrete paving.

WASTE ELIMINATED

An air reduction plant gave him acres of carbide refuse, apparently useless. Maestri discovered a formula to turn it into paint, and has made thousands of gallons of white paint from it, not only for the city's use, but for many schools, churches, hospitals, refuges, orphanages, and others, who get it for the asking.

Maestri found most of New Orleans' police and fire stations broken down, unpainted, in bad repair. He put the police and firemen themselves to work on them, rebuilding 31 at practically no cost to the city. The carbide paint came in handy.

Maestri offered all able-bodied prisoners not charged with major crimes an opportunity to work off their time at the rate of 2 days to 1 if they wanted to help on such projects. He has been using up to 100 such daily, all of whom volunteered.

GIFT FROM MAYOR

When they finish their time Maestri gives them $5, a suit of clothes, and orders to leave town. Scores have written him from all over the country telling of their rehabilitation.

The mayor last year staged a $10,000 open golf championship to advertise the newly improved city park; he put up the funds himself. He got behind the drive to raise $550,000 to improve the Sugar Bowl stadium to compete with the Rose Bowl game, and it went over in jig time.

He recently said he wanted 21,000 people out for the opening baseball game in order to win the attendance cup. More than 23,000 turned out. Other cities' attendance ran under 10,000. He named a city athletic director to promote and organize children's athletics.

OUTFITS POOR SCHOOLS

He keeps boxes of baseball gloves stacked up in his office, and frequently outfits a couple of teams at some school in the poor section, where he already has opened a playground.

His particular interest is children, inmates of institutions. He draws no line, religious, class, or race. He knows thousands of the derelict, the lower third. They all call him Bob.

To utilize fully his limited time, Maestri has worked out a unique method of seeing people at city hall after his morning rounds. Instead of calling them into his office he has them assemble in a waiting room, and in he stalks with a secretary to make notes.

He questions each and all where they wait. His decisions are staccato, either yes or no, with very few told to wait until he can consider their case further.

REAL-ESTATE OWNER

Maestri's fortune, variously estimated by friends at between $1,000,000 and $3,000,000, was made in New Orleans real estate and south Louisiana oil fields, which have been booming in recent years.

He returned from World War service to enter the real-estate business, accumulating large holdings of rental property which increased in value rapidly in the boom period following the war.

Today he is known as the largest individual taxpayer in the city. Married, but childless, Maestri lives frugally. He has no social activities; his sole recreation is to go fishing on Sunday with friends.

MONEY NOT SOUGHT

He has frequently told friends he has more money than he wants and has no ambition for power, but is anxious to leave a monument to himself in an improved New Orleans that will not be forgotten.

His swift-moving program has not gone on without criticism from some quarters, not the least of which were ward politicians whose activities the mayor curtailed. They currently are credited with beating the drum for Maestri for Governor in order to get him out of New Orleans.

Seeking building funds, Maestri passed a 2-cent city gasoline tax which has been roundly criticized by gasoline stations, which complain that frugal folk drive out to nearby parishes to fill up their cars. Maestri contends they've lost no appreciable business and that the money obtained is multiplied many times by Federal funds released through additional city funds.

GAMBLING CHARGE

Other critics claim Maestri has done little to curtail gambling, which flourishes. Maestri doesn't deny this charge; but claims he is mainly interested in building and development of the city and rehabilitation of its finances.

Some reports say there is still some minor graft below the mayor's office, although these same critics often tell how Maestri has waded through much of this with a sharp knife.

Socially Maestri is no success and doesn't want to be. He mixes with very few people; his language is salty, direct, outspoken. He has shocked ministerial delegations thereby, but the delegations usually went away with more than they asked, if it contributed to general civic improvement.

Mr. ELLENDER. Here are some letters from a few bankers and businessmen and civic leaders of our State:

MARCH 4, 1938.

HON. ROBERT S. MAESTRI,
Mayor, City of New Orleans,
City Hall, New Orleans, La.

DEAR MR. MAYOR: We wish to acknowledge receipt of check of the city of New Orleans drawn on us in the sum of $508,008.37, in full payment of the demand notes of the city of New Orleans held by us.

We wish to commend you for the very businesslike manner in which this obligation has been cared for by you, and to extend our compliments and congratulations for the high efficiency of your successful administration.

In retrospect, your services to the people of New Orleans as mayor of this great city, have won the admiration of our people and the businessmen of our community, and if we should take your past performances as a criterion of what is to happen, may we predict that over a period of the next few years, through your genius, New Orleans will be placed in the foremost rank of modern cities. Your efforts as mayor of a great city are praiseworthy and without parallel, since you have accomplished so much in so little time.

With all good wishes for your good health,

Very truly yours,

AMERICAN BANK & TRUST CO.
JOHN LEGIER, President.

MARCH 4, 1938.

HON. ROBERT S. MAESTRI,
Mayor, New Orleans, La.

MY DEAR MR. MAYOR: The fact that you have today paid the last note of the city due to any of the banks does indeed make this a "red letter day" in the financial history of the city of New Orleans. Only those of us who know the difficult financial position in which the city found itself during the depression years, and particularly at the time you assumed office, can appreciate what a remarkable accomplishment it is to have once more brought the city's affairs back to a cash basis. You have indeed done a splendid job, and such financial results could only have been accomplished by the strictest economy and excellent management.

We congratulate you on your fine work. More power to you.

Cordially yours,

THE HIBERNIA NATIONAL BANK.
R. S. HECHT,
Chairman of the Board.

MARCH 4, 1938.

The Honorable ROBERT S. MAESTRI,
Mayor of the City of New Orleans,
City Hall, New Orleans, La.

DEAR MR. MAYOR: I have just been informed that the city has paid out in full all of its current notes and that there remains outstanding only its bonded indebtedness. May I take this opportunity to commend most highly the businesslike way in which the finances of the city of New Orleans have been handled during your administration. I feel entirely sure that when the public becomes fully aware of the capable and efficient manner in which the business and financial affairs of New Orleans are being handled by you, the credit of the city, which is already extremely good, will be materially advanced.

With hearty congratulations upon your successful efforts, I am,
Very cordially yours,

WHITNEY NATIONAL BANK,
J. D. O'KEEFE, President.

MARCH 4, 1938.

HON. ROBERT S. MAESTRI,
Mayor, City of New Orleans,
New Orleans, La.

DEAR MR. MAYOR: We are advised that you today paid the last outstanding note obligation of the city of New Orleans. In addition to liquidating all the city's indebtedness, it is my understanding that you have placed current operations on a cash basis. Since you become mayor it is most pleasing to note the consistent and successful results you have achieved in the conduct of the city's fiscal affairs.

We wish for you and your administration every possible success.
With kind regards,

Very truly yours,

THE NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE,
CLAY W. BECKNER,
Executive Vice President.

THE TULANE UNIVERSITY OF LOUISIANA, SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK,
New Orleans, June 19, 1939.

The Honorable ROBERT MAESTRI,
Mayor of the City of New Orleans,
City Hall, New Orleans.

MY DEAR MAYOR MAESTRI: This is a letter of appreciation for your efforts on behalf of the summer play program for New Orleans children and your recent generous provision of $1,500 to carry on this program.

This playground program is of largest value to the children and youth of New Orleans. As one who has worked for larger recreation services in this city for a number of years, I know that it is a wise expenditure not only for much-needed and pleasurable recreation but the soundest sort of investment in training for good citizenship.

This summer play program is an auspicious beginning. I feel sure it will form the basis for a sound and permanent city-wide recreation program. Such a development will be a splendid contribution to the welfare of New Orleans.

Appreciatively yours,

STUART K. JAFFARY,
Assistant Professor of Social Economics.

HOLLAND'S,
THE MAGAZINE OF THE SOUTH,
Dallas, Tex., July 14, 1939.

MAYOR, CITY OF NEW ORLEANS,
New Orleans, La.

DEAR SIR: Holland's Southern Institute for Town Service has been established to promote town building. In addition to the civic-achievement articles appearing each month in Holland's magazine, we are giving awards of merit to towns that have achieved the unusual. Your town is included with a few others in the South that are receiving such recognition during this next month, and notice to this effect will be made in the August issue of the magazine.

The award in your case is made for the fine work you have done in lake-front development. We are asking you to see that the proper political subdivision or group responsible for such accomplishment is given this award of merit, which goes to you under separate cover.

The program of town building will, we hope, do much to encourage people in all sections of the South to organize their towns and to adopt definite programs of improvements. Under our plan any town that has reached a point of 75 percent of its development, according to our town score card, is eligible for our seal of honor, which is a beautiful bronze plaque. We hope that you may continue in building New Orleans until you are eligible for this recognition.

If you should desire one of our score cards, and if we can be of service to you, please know we shall be glad to hear from you.

Yours most cordially,

R. C. MORRISON,
Director, Holland's Southern Institute for Town Service.

TRINITY CHURCH,
New Orleans, May 26, 1939.

The Honorable ROBERT S. MAESTRI,
City Hall, New Orleans, La.

MY DEAR SIR: At the regular monthly meeting of the Board of the Children's Home of the Episcopal Church there were many expressions of deep appreciation of all that you have done for the home. By unanimous vote I, as chairman of the board, was requested to express to you by letter our sincere gratitude for all that you have done. Especially are we thankful for your personal interest in the matter. The improvements have made the home not only far more attractive but safer and more comfortable.

May I take this opportunity of congratulating you on and thanking you for the splendid work you have done for New Orleans since you have been mayor.

With best wishes for you and your work, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

(REV.) ROBERT S. COUPLAND,
Rector of Trinity Church.

NEW ORLEANS MID-WINTER SPORTS ASSOCIATION,
New Orleans, La.

HON. ROBERT S. MAESTRI,
Mayor, City of New Orleans,
City Hall, New Orleans, La.

DEAR MR. MAESTRI: Now that the drive for stadium funds has been concluded, please accept the warmest possible and most sincere appreciation for the grand part that you played in the work.

You were ever willing to give of your time and good counsel, and the final results surely reflect toward your interest, assistance, confidence, and friendship, all of which I sincerely hope we will ever be able to continually merit.

I believe, too, that you have all the more endeared yourself into the hearts of the populace of our State and city, for surely the undertaking was one of the most civic spirited in many past decades.

You shall always command of us an undying debt of gratitude, which I fear we will never be able to repay.

With assurances of appreciation, thanks, regards, esteem, and wishing you Godspeed, believe me,
Most sincerely,

H. A. BENSON, President.

PORT ARTHUR, TEX., December 26, 1939.

HON. ROBERT S. MAESTRI,
Mayor, New Orleans, La.

DEAR MAYOR MAESTRI: I have been a frequent visitor to New Orleans for 30 years. May I express my thoughts and thanks to you for the many improvements made under your administration. To a visitor, it looks as though New Orleans has improved more under your administration than any other in its history.

I was very much impressed with the beauty of the Canal Street decorations—the row of gigantic candles expressing so well the Christmas spirit and a welcome to the stranger.

Mayor Maestri, I am sure the people of your city and State appreciate your many accomplishments in their behalf, and when I consider all that you have done, that you are reducing the city debt $6,000,000 per annum, I wish that we had men like you in Texas.

May I wish you a happy New Year and that your success will continue, I am,

Yours,

ED. LINN.

Permit me to recite conditions when Mr. Maestri became mayor of New Orleans in August 1936 and some of his accomplishments since that period:

When Mr. Maestri became mayor of New Orleans, August 17, 1936, the city government—

Owed over $6,000,000 to the banks, which it could not pay;

Owed nearly $1,500,000 of outstanding bills for materials and supplies, some of which had been overdue for several years;

It had been unable to meet its pay rolls promptly or in full;

It was paying 5½ percent on outstanding bank loans and could not borrow additional money either from local banks or banks abroad;

It had defaulted its paying certificates;

It was in bankruptcy in the Federal court;

Even vital service of government were restricted;

Garbage collections, for instance, were being made only on part-time basis;

Its streets were run down to a point where many of its major thoroughfares were actually dangerous to travel on;

Its public buildings were a disgrace;

Its playground system had been shamefully neglected;

Its morale was shattered.

As soon as he took office, Mayor Maestri set to work. He pledged his own credit to buy trucks and equipment vitally needed by the city.

He arranged for a reduction in the interest on outstanding bank loans from 5½ to 2½ percent.

By the end of 1936, just a little over 4 months after he became chief executive, the city was out of bankruptcy; its bank loans and outstanding bills were being paid off; its paying certificates had been refunded; and the municipal government was operating on a cash basis for the first time in its history.

By March 4, 1938, the last of the city's bank loans had been paid off. The city was continuing—and is still continuing—to operate on a strictly cash basis.

On the whole, since he has been in office, Mayor Maestri has reduced the debt of the city of New Orleans more than $16,000,000 and at no time since January 1, 1937, has he found it necessary to borrow from the banks.

Every detail of operating cost has been paid out of current revenues, and all of the millions which the city itself contributed toward public improvement work in connection with W. P. A. and other Federal agencies have likewise been paid out of current revenues.

This program of public improvements has been a sweeping one, bringing benefits to every individual section of New Orleans, and all has been carefully planned and coordinated through the city planning and development board.

The city's street system has been completely rebuilt. Over 200 miles of streets have been paved, repaved, or otherwise improved. Traffic arteries, for which New Orleans had clamored for years, are now a reality.

Every public building, including the entire public market system, has been rehabilitated and modernized.

The playground system has been virtually made over and is being rapidly extended, arrangements for eight additional major recreation centers having been made within the past year.

Parks and parkways in every section have been beautified to the extent that New Orleans today stands out among all other American cities in this respect.

The city's sewerage, drainage, and water facilities have been completely overhauled. Over 200 miles of extensions and improvements have been made and an auxiliary water purification plant, which will take care of the city's needs for many years to come, has been constructed.

All of these improvements, including street paving, have been carried on without a cent of additional cost to abutting property holders—a far cry from the past when the cost of paving to the individual property owner often was so great as to amount to virtual confiscation of his property.

Mr. President, I desire to present another glaring example of how unfair is the press of my State, and how it will distort facts and attempt to crush those who differ with it.

On August 10, 1939, when I returned to my home in Louisiana after the adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, I was asked for an interview by two young reporters of my home town, one representing the New Orleans Times-Picayune and States and the other the New Orleans Item and Tribune and a local daily. I began by giving these two boys fatherly advice, especially to young Belanger, who happened to be a schoolmate of my young son, and who stated to me that he was desirous of becoming a journalist. I complimented him on his choice, and stated that he could perform a great service to his country. I said to him, in substance: "Never libel any citizen, write the truth at all times, and your writings are bound to command respect."

I related to these boys how certain writers and columnists had a knack of distorting facts; how good men were libeled; that they had little or no chance to defend themselves. I cited specific instances of how propaganda writers misled people, how some of my colleagues in the Senate were unjustly criticized; and how I was lambasted by certain vicious newspapers and periodicals for my stand on the antilynching bill. I concluded by saying that unwarranted attacks by unscrupulous writers, the publication of filthy and slurring articles attacking the characters and good names of honest and decent people, and the continuous abuse of the freedom of the press guaranteed by the Federal Constitution would sooner or later lead to efforts to curb the activities of such scoundrelmongers. All of the above, mind you, was in the nature of fatherly advice, and given to these boys for their own information and not for publication.

The boys then began their interview. They asked me about the then current scandals in Louisiana, and I said that I would prepare a written statement, which I did, and it is as follows:

I am shocked. I am disappointed, and I do not blame the people for being aroused. I suggest, however, that they remain calm and do all they can to assist Federal, State, and local authorities to unravel this unfortunate situation. I ask that they refuse to listen to the rabble-rousers who preach, in effect, that because some officeholders in our State have violated their trust that all others are crooks and grafters also.

I have faith in our Federal officials and others who are conducting this investigation, and I believe they will leave nothing undone to the end that the accused will be tried, and, if proven guilty, punished. I have confidence in Gov. Earl K. Long and his sincerity of purpose. He is endowed with common rugged honesty, and I have every reason to believe that if given a chance he will weed out any crooked officeholder and make sure that he and others of like character are punished.

It is certain that the Governor is receiving much advice from well-meaning citizens as to how he should handle this situation. Some are finding fault because their suggestions are not being followed. If the Governor is furnished with facts and not rumors

I am certain that he will prove his courage and have the accused prosecuted.

What Governor Long needs most just now is the confidence and help of the law-abiding citizenry of the State.

The lad who represented the New Orleans Item and Tribune and the local newspaper rendered a correct version of our interview, and the newspapers that printed his story were accurate. The boy who represented the New Orleans States and Times-Picayune added a little color to his story, and the newspapers he represented added more distortion. In the Times-Picayune of August 10 I was quoted as saying, without explanation, that "the press of the Nation is losing the confidence of the public by its underhand tactics," and that "I would not be a bit surprised if in a few years Congress took measures to curb it." My colleagues would hardly believe me if I recounted all the distortions which followed. I was accused of everything under the sun—of protecting thieves and crooks and of being one of them. I was ridiculed by the press of the Nation because, it was written, I wanted to curb the press of the Nation—wanted to curb the press because, forsooth, the press had been instrumental in exposing thievery and graft in my State. Surely no honest editor could come to such a conclusion after reading my written statement.

Now, the best of it all is that the two newspapers in New Orleans which printed a correct version of the interview grasped at the unwarranted and uncalled-for interpretations placed on my interview by their two competitors, and themselves wrote vicious editorials condemning me for statements attributed to but never made by me.

Telegrams and letters of condemnation began to pour in. There I was—helpless. I happened to be in New Orleans the next day, and ran across a reporter of the Times-Picayune and Daily States. I complained about the unwarranted attack, and gave him the true version of my interview. A slight correction appeared in the Times-Picayune, but in the same issue there was published another vicious editorial of condemnation.

A few days thereafter I summoned the two young men who had interviewed me, and I laid before them the news articles and editorials. Both agreed that a grave injustice had been done to me. Whereupon I suggested to the boy who misquoted me that he write a correct version of our interview. He refused to do so, saying that if he did he would lose his job. I took the matter up with the managing editor of the Times-Picayune, who said he would look into it, and up to the present time I have not heard a word from him, and, as far as the public is concerned, it has not been made the wiser.

I sincerely believe that such an abuse of the freedom of the press is unwarranted and un-American. In a democracy of the type of that under which we live I realize that a free press is indispensable, but I believe that it is of utmost importance that the press be inspired by a sense of truth, justice, and fair play.

It might be of interest to Senators to briefly summarize the position of the candidates in the past Louisiana Democratic primary election with respect to their views on "Longism." Irrespective of what others might think, I still maintain that the real issue in the campaign was and is, not graft and corruption, but "Longism."

Mr. Mosely was the only candidate who publicly criticized the late Senator Long and his policies, and for his efforts he received less than 1½ percent of a total vote of over 553,000. Mr. Jones pussyfooted around the issue. He represents the corporate and newspaper interests of the State. He had the support of the organized anti-Long group in our State. With the help of the newspapers and a big corporation slush fund, which he never denied having received, he obtained only 28 percent of the votes of the State. The newspapers got a first-class licking. Four years ago the candidate of the Long opposition, with newspaper backing, received about 33 percent of the votes cast.

The two remaining so-called independent candidates were not opposed to "Longism," but on the contrary advocated it to the "nth" degree. Both argued that the candidates on the Long administration ticket were responsible for all of the corruption and graft that was uncovered, and that they, as opponents, should be elected so as to clean the State of thieves and grafters. Mr. Morrison, the youngest of the five candidates, made very extravagant promises to the voters, and received 8½ percent of the votes cast.

Mr. Noe masqueraded as the only real, genuine Huey Long candidate in the field. He was born in Indiana, and knew the late Senator Long for a period of only 3½ years before his assassination. Noe argued to the voters that he not only preached "Longism," but practiced it—that he was the real disciple of the late Senator Long. Mr. Noe was one of the candidates who made much of the indictments that resulted from the current Federal investigations in Louisiana. He endeavored to slur the entire Long administration ticket because of these indictments. He charged that because a few persons in Louisiana had violated their trust, every official and State employee who was active in the affairs of the State administration was involved in crooked deals.

What Mr. Noe failed to tell the people of Louisiana was about his own record. Documentary proof was produced showing that he was indicted by a Federal grand jury in the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Louisiana, Monroe Division, in the case of United States of America against James A. Noe, Y. E. Hildreth, No. 4243, under date of April 8, 1926, where the defendants were charged with using the United States mail to defraud. He was accused of selling worthless oil stock to widows, in fact, to the public in general.

Noe was charged by one of his opponents in the campaign with having interested an oil promoter from Fort Worth, Tex., to help him promote. He guaranteed 300 percent within 90 days. Also in one scheme he guaranteed "a gusher or your money back." He collected $200,000 in those schemes.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD at this point of my remarks, first, two certificates of stock of the Noe Oil Co.; second, one certificate of stock of the Noe Oil & Gas Co., and third, a telegram dated May 2, 1923, to Mrs. M. F. Holloman, Jr., and signed by James A. Noe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GURNEY in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

No. 301, 12 units.

Operating under a declaration of trust.

The Noe Oil Co., Farmersville, La.

This certifies that Mrs. P. P. Price is the owner of 12 units of the Noe Oil Co., fully paid and nonassessable, transferable only on the books of the company in person or by attorney upon surrender of this certificate properly endorsed.

In witness whereof the said company has caused this certificate to be signed by its duly authorized trustee and its seal to be hereunto affixed at Farmersville, La., this 6th day of October, A. D. 1923.

[SEAL]

JAMES A. NOE, Trustee.

No. 48, 30 units.

Operating under a declaration of trust.

The Noe Oil Co., Farmersville, La.

This certifies that Mrs. Mittie Price is the owner of 30 units of the Noe Oil Co., fully paid and nonassessable, transferable only on the books of the company in person or by attorney upon surrender of this certificate properly endorsed.

In witness whereof the said company has caused this certificate to be signed by its duly authorized trustee and its seal to be hereunto affixed at Farmersville, La., this 16th day of July, A. D. 1923.

JAMES A. NOE, Trustee.

No. 106, 100 units.

Operating under a declaration of trust.

The Noe Oil & Gas Co., Farmersville, La.

This certifies that M. F. Holloman, Jr., is the owner of 100 units of the Noe Oil & Gas Co., fully paid and nonassessable, transferable only on the books of this company in person or by attorney upon surrender of this certificate properly endorsed.

In witness whereof the said company has caused this certificate to be signed by its duly authorized trustee and its seal to be hereunto affixed at Farmersville, La., this 20th day of July, A. D. 1922.

JAMES A. NOE, Trustee.

ELDORADO, ARK., May 2, 1923.

M. F. HOLLOMAN, JR.,
Alexandria, La.:

Our well in 27 blew in this afternoon and is estimated at 20,000 barrels. It sure is a fine well. We will have to build more storage at once, and I have to have more money. I am going to give my stockholders a chance to take enough stock to do this. You can get $50 by wiring it at once to Farmersville. You will have the same 300 percent guarantee you had on your first stock. Don't write. Wire it today if you want it. I hope you will take advantage of this great opportunity I am offering you.

I am, most sincerely,

JAMES A. NOE.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, Mr. Noe never denied the charges made against him. Although his record is black, he had announced for Governor 4 years ago. His chief claim to the governorship was based on the fact that Huey Long had died with some of his blood in his veins. It is a fact that Mr. Noe gave of his blood to the late Senator in an effort to save his life a few hours before he died. Because of this, and because he preached Long-ism, he received 21 percent of the votes cast.

I want to take a few minutes of the Senate's time to illustrate how faithful Mr. Noe has been to the memory of Huey Long. After parading around the State for over 3 months; after charging Candidate Jones with being a corporation candidate, operating with a slush fund contributed by the corporations and newspapers; after expressing his undying distrust and hatred of corporation lawyers and corporation-backed candidates, this same Mr. Noe has now gone over into the camp of corporation-backed Sam Jones, and he is going around the State today urging his good followers to vote for Sam Jones.

I have kept a newspaper file of the various speeches made during the past campaign, and I shall read to the Senate now a few extracts from Mr. Noe's speeches before election day and a few extracts from his speeches after he shifted to Candidate Jones. How any man could have the nerve, the unmitigated gall, so brazenly to double-cross his good, faithful, and honest followers in this manner is beyond me. Listen to these quotations from speeches made by Mr. Noe. They illustrate far better than I can describe his utter hypocrisy and lack of conscience and scruples.

Here is a quotation from a speech he made in north Louisiana. It appears in the New Orleans Times-Picayune of December 28, 1939:

WISNER, LA., December 27.—The big-money boys don't want Noe for Governor because they can't control him—they want their boy, Sam Jones, in there representing them just like he has for the past years.

Here is another statement which Mr. Noe made, as it appears in the New Orleans Times-Picayune of December 30:

CHENEYVILLE, LA., December 29.—Sam's real program that was designed by his corporation backers to protect and retrieve their "private interests" will never be publicly announced.

It is Sam Jones about whom Mr. Noe is talking, the same Sam Jones he is now asking his followers to support.

Here is still another statement made by Mr. Noe. This one appears in the New Orleans Times-Picayune of December 31:

JACKSON, LA., December 30.—Sam Jones is a corporation man. I told him that I dared him to deny that corporation heads got together in Shreveport and put up the big money for his campaign.

Senators will notice that Mr. Noe did not "think" that Sam Jones was a corporation candidate—he did not "suspect." Oh, no; he was positive in his statement. These are his words: "Sam Jones is a corporation man."

Here is another news item from the New Orleans Times-Picayune of January 8, reporting a speech made by Mr. Noe:

LAFAYETTE, LA., January 7.—The candidate [Noe] also attacked Sam Jones as "the puppet candidate of the big corporations who have been trying for years to get their hands on the State of Louisiana."

Senators would never guess from those words of Mr. Noe that deep down in his heart he really thinks that Sam Jones is a fine, wonderful man, would they?—that Sam Jones is the great savior of his State? No; and neither would I. And neither did Mr. Noe's good followers in Louisiana—his faithful Huey Long followers. They believed Mr. Noe was sincere in his fight against Sam Jones and the corporate and newspaper interests Jones represents. That is why a good many of the ardent Huey Long admirers voted for Mr. Noe.

I shall read another quotation from a speech made by Mr. Noe before the election—before he associated himself with the Sam Jones crowd. This one is reported in the Baton Rouge Morning Advocate of December 31:

CLINTON, LA., December 30.—Sam Jones is a corporation man. He can't go in for homestead exemption because the funds to take care of these exemptions is made out of taxes on corporations. I told him that I dared him deny that corporation heads got together in Shreveport and put up the big money for his campaign. A man from Texas whom he had never met before came in and put up $25,000. Now you know a man don't put up that kind of money just because you have light or dark eyebrows.

Now it seems that at one time during his campaign Mr. Noe grew facetious. He drew a word picture for his audience of what their State would be like if Mr. Sam Jones and the corporations he represents ever got into control of the State government. The New Orleans States of December 29 reports it. I shall read it. Now remember, this is Mr. Noe speaking, 3 weeks before the election:

TOGA, LA., December 29.—One thing I will say for the corporation set-up is it would probably provide Sam (Jones) with a lot of modern conveniences such as mechanical hand shakers and cabinets with lighted slots where country people that had traveled down to Baton Rouge to ask the Governor how come they hadn't got an increase in the homestead exemption, could drop written questions—and come by in the morning and get a printed answer by pressing a button, and almost immediately the "buttonaire" would replace the gray stain as the mark of a State official. It would probably be a little confusing to a couple of hundred thousand people for a while, but who can say? Maybe a majority vote of 22 corporation boards would save the people from such follies as paved roads, free lunches for school children, old-age pensions of $30 a month, $3 auto-license tags, and the like.

That may sound like a joke to you, my friends, but in effect it is the type of government that Sam Jones offers you.

And again, in a story published in the New Orleans States of January 1—New Year's Day—probably just after Mr. Noe had adopted his New Year's resolutions to speak only the truth—this is what he had to say about Mr. Sam Jones:

LAPLACE, LA., January 1.—If you elected Jones, Louisiana would have a puppet with not 1 but 42 strings controlling his every action.

There never was any doubt in Mr. Noe's mind before election as to the type of men who were backing Mr. Jones in this campaign. None whatsoever. Listen to what Mr. Noe had to say to his audience, as reported in the Baton Rouge Morning Advocate of January 10:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 9.—Noe renewed his dare to Sam Jones to deny that he had met with corporation heads in Washington-Yoursee Hotel at Shreveport and that they had raised $250,000 for him in one afternoon. The gubernatorial candidate attacked John Ewing, publisher of the Shreveport Times, claiming he had praised the action of the Leche administration and adding: "He comes out here for Sam Jones now. Why? Because Sam Jones represents the big boys. And they think they can fleece the public, like they did up in Monroe, when I brought suit to keep them from getting money they had no right in getting."

Here is another statement published in the Times-Picayune of January 5:

If by any remote chance Sam Jones was to get into a second primary with Earl Long I want to tell you this: Seventy-five percent of my votes will come from the people who believe in Huey Long and loved him. The other 25 percent is from the regular anti-Long vote. And that 75 percent will never vote for J. Y. Sanders, Sam Jones, and that crowd, no matter what anybody tells them.

That was before Noe went into his so-called conference with Sam Jones. The following is a report of that conference as carried in the New Orleans States of January 19:

The conference at which the alliance was cemented was held in the St. Charles Hotel, where Jimmy Noe has made his headquarters during the campaign and where his radio station WNOE has its broadcasting studios.

Corridors were filled with Jimmy Noe leaders and workers, waiting impatiently for the news of the outcome of the conference. When the official statements had been typed and signed, the doors of the rooms were thrown open.

"Meet Sam Jones, boys and girls," greeted Jimmy Noe. "I'm starting on the stump for him right now."

And here is also a report that appeared in the New Orleans Item of January 19:

James A. Noe announced at noon today that he would definitely support Sam Jones in the second primary against Earl K. Long.

Noe made his announcement after a lengthy conference with Sam Jones and a group of Jones and Noe advisers, after Jones and his group called on Noe in Noe's quarters at the St. Charles Hotel.

"I will give out a formal statement on the question within the next 2 hours or so," Noe told reporters. But he said, flatly, that he had made up his mind and that his choice was Jones.

Jones remained inside the conference room when Noe stuck his head out to give the news.

Noe was grave, his face slightly flushed, when he made his statement. It came at the end of about 2 full hours of huddling between the two sides.

I shall now read the contents of the signed statement which Mr. Noe gave to the press, as a result of that conference:

I am wholeheartedly joining Sam Jones, throwing the full force of my personal efforts, and that of my organization, into the final stage of the fight to rid Louisiana of graft and corruption, and return to our State honesty and decency in government through a business administration, looking to the welfare of the people.

Sam's assurances that he will carry out the platform, principles, and pledges that I have advocated for the people in this campaign, have been given me, and this is my only consideration in making the decision.

I should like to believe that.

The attainment of this understanding makes my personal fight a success. It is now my duty, as a citizen, and my responsibility to the people who have supported me, to carry on this fight until our mutual goal has been attained.

I am confident that the people of Louisiana will rally to the cause for which we have been fighting and therefore call upon the thousands of my friends who have supported me in this fight to join me behind Sam Jones in a fight that will not be ended until graft and corruption has been driven from the State of Louisiana.

JAMES A. NOE.

And so Mr. Noe suddenly finds Candidate Jones has the same aims and ideals in the campaign as his own.

That is not all of the about-facing, pussyfooting, and boot scraping that has been going on in Louisiana during the past week. I should like to read a few statements that have been made by Candidate Jones, who, according to the words of one of his most ardent supporters and admirers of the moment—I refer to Mr. Noe—is an avowed, dyed-in-the-wool representative of the corporate interests, a puppet of the old J. Y. Sanders-Times-Picayune-New Orleans States crowd of anti-Long agitators. Listen to what Mr. Sam Jones has to say about Mr. Noe, his new-found friend, his long-lost buddy of World War days. Says Mr. Jones, according to a statement appearing in the New Orleans States of January 19:

I welcome the support of Jimmie Noe, which assures the defeat of the present corrupt State machine.

Jimmie Noe's action in continuing this fight in the face of his own elimination, proves his absolute sincerity in fighting for the elimination of corruption in this State. It demonstrates his fine patriotism and proves that he can fight for his country in time of peace as well as in time of war.

I am convinced that Jimmie Noe and I have been fighting for the same cause. I am in favor of the platform, principles, and pledges made by him, and now that the people opposed to the present administration have united, there is no doubt of a victory for the people, and defeat of Earl K. Long, and all he represents, which was overwhelmingly repudiated at the polls last Tuesday.

SAM JONES.

Those are Mr. Jones' own words as reported by one of his backers, the New Orleans States. And in the New Orleans Times-Picayune of January 20, Mr. Jones is credited with making a remarkable contribution to an already topsy-turvy campaign. I read from a news item appearing in the Times-Picayune:

Mr. Jones paid tribute to Mr. Noe as "the greatest man in Louisiana today."

"He is the man who enlisted himself in the fight against this machine at a great personal sacrifice to himself. The only promise he exacted from me for his support was that I fight for his platform pledges to you."

"I want to say to Jimmy Noe that his people are my people, and that I have joined the Noe Legion of Honor."

Mr. Jones thinks Mr. Noe is a great man—a wonderful man—the greatest man in Louisiana. The Times-

Picayune of January 23 quotes Mr. Jones as describing Mr. Noe as "the greatest living patriot in the State of Louisiana." That is what Mr. Jones is saying about Mr. Noe today. But do Senators know what he was saying about Mr. Noe during the days before the election? Let me quote a few of his prize utterances of that period. Here is a statement of his which appeared in the New Orleans Item of December 15:

The administration has Jimmie Noe in this race the same as they've got Earl Long in it. If you want the same kind of government that you've been getting—if you want to keep on with all this crime and corruption and thievery—then vote for Jimmy Noe; he's your man. Who is his candidate for Lieutenant Governor? None other than Dr. J. C. Menendez, the house doctor for Seymour Weiss' Hotel.

And still another by Mr. Jones as it appeared in the New Orleans Times-Picayune of December 14:

VILLE PLATTE, LA., December 13.—"Jimmy Noe was elected to the State senate with the support of the administration. He went to the legislature and pushed the green button for Dick Leche and that crowd. He is simply a stooge for the administration. They've got two candidates in this race, Earl K. Long and Jimmy Noe. Well, I'm glad they have, because I'm going to expose both of them."

"I made the statement at the start of this campaign that the administration had saddled you people with 27 new taxes. Now Jimmy Noe has taken that up and is going around the State crying about those 27 new taxes. Why, he voted for 26 of those 27 taxes himself. The only one he voted against was the sales tax."

"Jimmy Noe voted for all the dictatorial laws; he voted to take your rights away. He was part and parcel with the administration crowd, and yet he comes out here and asks you people to elect him Governor so he can put an end to that sort of thing."

His opponents are asking where Sam Jones was when "they were fighting this administration." Jones said, "Well, while Jimmy Noe was making money for himself up in Kentucky, I was fighting for those rights which were taken away from the people."

I think it useless to quote any more about what these two men thought and think about each other.

Oh, yes; on December 14 Mr. Jones thought Mr. Noe was just a "stooge" for the administration and was part and parcel of the administration forces. Today, according to Mr. Jones, Mr. Noe is "the greatest man in the State of Louisiana." What a transformation. Here we have witnessed one of the glories of Nature—first the worm, then the chrysalis, now the iridescent and resplendent butterfly.

Mr. President, Governor Long, a brother of Huey, was the target for all candidates, as well as the newspapers. He was accused of every crime in the books. Such blackguarding and skulduggery one never witnessed. Every accusation made against him was sifted by Federal and State grand juries, and nothing came of it; his record was clean. He based his campaign on "Longism," pure and simple, and notwithstanding the accusations made, he received 41 percent of the votes. He carried 51 out of the 64 parishes in our State over his nearest opponent, and led in 6 of our 8 congressional districts. He carried 9 parishes over all of his combined opponents.

Permit me to point out briefly what "Longism" means and has meant to our State of Louisiana. Prior to the advent of Huey Long, Louisiana was in the absolute control of the corporate interests of our State. Our natural resources, especially our timber, were being dissipated, and the corporations were escaping their just proportion of taxation. The only crime Huey Long committed, and which led to his impeachment before the lower house of the Louisiana Legislature in 1929, was that he had the courage and leadership to transfer the burden of taxation in Louisiana from the backs of those who could not pay and place it on the backs of those who could and should pay. To be frank, Senators, that is the reason for this newspaper opposition. Our newspapers are pleading the cause of their masters—big business. With the proceeds of those taxes Huey Long provided free school books, pencils, and paper for every child who attends any school in our State; new schoolhouses were built and old ones modernized; more and better teachers were employed at higher pay; free transportation is available to all school children, and no matter where a child lives, be it in a poor or rich community, the same educational advantages are provided for all. More and better colleges were afforded for the higher education of the youth of our State. In addition to Louisiana State University, the State maintains five other modern and up-to-date colleges. Numerous trade schools, maintained by the State, dot our countryside.

Schools for the blind, the deaf, and dumb were enlarged and modernized; a comfortable establishment was built to take care of epileptics; the two hospitals for the insane, located at Jackson and Pineville, La., were enlarged and made more comfortable, and up-to-date treatment is provided for the unfortunates who inhabit them. We have provided hospitals and convalescent homes for the tubercular.

Without exception, Louisiana has the finest free hospital system of any State in the Union. We have six modern hospitals, located in strategic cities of our State, so that any poor person who might need medical care is within less than a 2-hour drive from a hospital. Ambulance service is provided free of charge; in fact, all the expenses for operating these hospitals are borne entirely by the State. In addition to these facilities the State maintains several hundred beds in private hospitals for emergency cases.

The State maintains 10 dental clinics, located in various parts of the State, for the care of the poor.

When Huey Long became Governor in 1928, Louisiana had less than 5,000 miles of improved roads, only 60 miles of which were paved. Real estate in each locality that desired roads was taxed. Today all parish seats are connected by paved roads. We have built more than 14,000 miles of roads, 4,600 of which are paved. This was accomplished by the imposition of a State-wide 4-cent gas tax. Louisiana is criss-crossed by rivers, creeks, and bayous. Toll ferries and bridges were in evidence on all sides prior to 1928. Today, modern free bridges span all of our streams, and we have done away with toll ferries and bridges. Two of these bridges span the mighty Mississippi—at New Orleans and Baton Rouge. They were built at a cost of $25,000,000.

Huey Long raised $5,000,000 to build a magnificent new capitol building which graces our State at Baton Rouge—a building which has achieved world-wide publicity because of its great beauty and magnificence, and which could not be built today for twice what it cost the State. It serves as a mecca for tourists.

Huey eliminated poll taxes. In order for a citizen to exercise his right to vote in Louisiana, he does not have to dig down in his pocket for a dollar or two each year in order to pay his poll taxes. They have been abolished.

All taxes on livestock, such as cattle, hogs, chickens, mules, horses, and so forth, have been removed. Ad valorem taxes on automobiles, boats, and other vehicles have been taken off.

These are some of the advantages afforded the poor people of Louisiana under Longism. We are now providing free hot lunches for poor school children. Dependent children, the aged and blind people of our State, are receiving attention. We plan to better their condition.

In addition to all of these blessings that Longism has provided for the masses of our people in Louisiana, no home owner whose assessment is $2,000 or less pays one cent of State or parish taxes. That means that 82 percent of the farmers and home owners of our State do not pay one cent of taxes on their homes and farms. In some parishes as much as 92 percent of the farmers and home owners do not pay one cent of State or parish taxes.

Mr. President, it is my firm belief that the press of my State has been unfair to our own people and to those of the country at large. To read what is written, one would think that a dictatorship has been established in Louisiana, that anarchy reigns supreme, and that our public treasury has been plundered. Such is not the case. We have a well operated State government. We have a contented people. It is unfortunate that a few of our elected officials and some of our citizens have violated their trust. All of us who cherish good government abhor such conditions. The Justice Department has been relentless in its efforts, and I am of the opinion that just and adequate punishment will be meted out to those who are found guilty of wrongdoing.

I feel confident that a fair and impartial press would convey a different story about Louisiana under the Long regime than what has been written about it since 1928. Visitors are amazed at the steady progress that Louisiana has made since that time. We have forged ahead, and intend to continue advancing, in spite of the adverse and unjust criticism of the press of our State.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator enumerated various taxes which Senator Long, when he was Governor, took off the backs of the people of the State. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] and I are very much interested in knowing what taxes were then levied to take the place of the taxes which were taken off.

Mr. ELLENDER. Prior to the time of Senator Long, a tax was placed on natural resources on a value basis. When oil, for example, sold for a good price the amount received per barrel was very good; but in most cases the value of oil was as low as 30 or 40 cents a barrel, and 2 percent on oil selling at 40 cents a barrel could not bring much revenue. So what we did was to change the tax to a quantity basis. We placed it on a per barrel basis, so that, no matter what oil sold for, whether it sold for 5 cents or $1.50, the State treasury collected from 5 to 11 cents per barrel, depending on the specific gravity of the oil. That was one of the taxes.

Prior to 1928, the oil interests paid $1,200,000 in such taxes. Today they pay in excess of $12,000,000 on these natural resources.

Then we enacted the income-tax law. Today that tax brings into the State treasury between $5,500,000 and $6,000,000 yearly. We have placed a tax of 2 percent on public utilities. We have a corporation franchise tax. All of those taxes, plus a few others that I cannot think of at the moment, added together have given us enough money to accomplish the benefits I have just mentioned.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD, following my remarks, excerpts from a radio address delivered by me, giving the very information asked for by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Are the taxes collected from the various corporations in Louisiana sufficient to take care of all the expenditures on the pay-as-you-go basis?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; for the maintenance and upkeep. We borrowed money to build our roads.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, aside from the roads, Louisiana collects a sufficient amount of taxes to maintain all the various constructive improvements which the Senator has discussed in his statement today?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand, the indebtedness of the State, other than the obligations for roads, has not increased since the Long administration.

Mr. ELLENDER. I will make just a few exceptions to that statement. Prior to Governor Long coming into power the State had a bonded indebtedness of almost $60,000,000. The indebtedness represented some bonds, amounting to $14,000,000, imposed back in 1914 in order to pay deficits of prior governors. The rest of the indebtedness represented a bond issue to build the industrial canal in the city of New Orleans, the bonds for which, by the way, are now being partly retired by some of the taxes imposed by the Long administration and now being collected. The entire amount of bonded indebtedness incurred under Governor Long and his successors is $167,000,000. Of said sum $28,000,000 have been retired, thereby leaving $139,000,000 still due and unpaid. With that amount of money the road system and all the bridges which I have described were built. In addition to building the roads, a part of the money raised through bonds was used to build our State capitol and the executive mansion, and to improve some of the hospitals and other public buildings in our State. However, the retirement of most of these bonds is provided for through taxes imposed, principally the corporation-franchise tax. In Louisiana we collect a corporation-franchise tax equal to $2 for each $1,000 of capital. A substantial amount of the money collected from that source is pledged to retire the bonds which were issued to build the hospitals which I have described and other public buildings.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. What is the present bonded indebtedness of Louisiana?

Mr. ELLENDER. The entire bonded indebtedness today, as I recall offhand, including the balance due on the bonds issued prior to 1928, when Governor Long was elected to office, is approximately $182,000,000. As I have just stated, I have inserted in the RECORD excerpts from a radio address by myself, in which the figures are set forth accurately.

EXHIBIT A

[Excerpts from radio address delivered by Senator ALLEN J. ELLENDER (Louisiana) at New Orleans, La., on January 12, 1940, over radio Station WDSU and State-wide hook-up]

The good people of this State won't be misled by these tactics; they know that Candidate Jones and his crowd and Candidate Noe and his crowd are attempting to gain control of our State government for the benefit of the corporations and oil interests in order that they may restore to Louisiana the old regime which existed before Huey Long became Governor of this great State. They want to undo the great works of Huey Long, who shifted the burden of taxation from the backs of those who couldn't pay and placed it on the backs of those who could pay. It is easy to understand why the corporate interests and the rich interests don't want any more of the Long form of government. They've had enough. They tell you so. They want to get rid of the 26 various taxes which they say our administration has placed on the statute books. And well they might wish to get rid of those taxes, because they are being paid not by the poor people of this State, not by the working people, not by the citizen of average circumstances, but they are being paid out of the treasury of the big corporations and out of the pockets of the rich interests. Oh, yes; Candidate Jones raises a big howl about the many, many taxes that are being paid in Louisiana. He says he is going to do away with them. He is going to abolish them. Well, let us see about some of those taxes that Candidate Jones wants to abolish.

First of all there's the severance tax. That is a tax which is collected from the oil interests, from the gas interests, from the sulfur interests—from persons or corporations who exploit our natural resources. Do you know how much severance taxes were collected from those interests prior to the time Huey Long became Governor of Louisiana in 1928? A paltry $1,200,000, that is all, in spite of the fact that Louisiana is one of the richest States in the Union in natural resources. And compare that figure with the amount of severance taxes that we collected in the year 1938—over $12,000,000. So well might the corporate interests and the rich oil interests want to do something about the severance tax being removed. It hurts them; it hurts their pocketbooks. But it doesn't hurt the workingman, the farmer, the poor, and the underprivileged. It helps them. Because that tax money is used to operate your schools. With it your State government has been able to increase the State contribution to the support of the parish schools and decrease the parish contribution. For instance, in 1928 the State contributed approximately $5,000,000 to the school fund. Today the State contribution amounts to approximately $16,000,000—over three times as large. That severance tax money is being used to improve our schools, to provide better pay for teachers, and raise the standards for teachers; to provide free schoolbooks, paper, and pencils; provide free libraries to all schools in the State; free transportation for all country students; and Gov. Earl Long has just been successful in getting started, with the aid of the Federal Government, a program to provide free hot lunches to the school children.

There is a splendid tenure law in force to protect our teachers. Our colleges and universities have been remodeled and revitalized, and today they rank with the best in the country. We have started to build trade schools throughout the State; in 1928 there was only one trade school in Louisiana, and that was located in New Orleans. Today there are trade schools, all operated at State expense, at Bogalusa, Shreveport, Natchitoches, Winnfield, Opelousas, Crowley, and Lake Charles, and Governor Long has pledged himself to construct trade schools throughout the State until one is within each reach of every boy and girl. We have in effect a State-wide school equalization fund, so that parishes that are poor may receive from those that are richer; and the result is that our schools in the poorer parishes are about as good as those in the richer parishes.

All of those benefits to our school system are made possible mainly through the revenues that accrue to the State from the severance tax, and from another tax that I want to tell you about right now—the State income tax. That is another tax which is paid by those who are able to pay, and not a dime of it comes out of the pockets of the poor and underprivileged. The money collected from that tax is used to take care of your homestead exemptions, and the remainder goes to the State school fund, along with taxes collected from public utilities, sale of alcoholic beverages, and sale of cotton futures—and I again want to point out to you that the person of average circumstances, the farmer, the storekeeper, the laborer, does not pay a dime of those taxes. I don't believe there is a working man in Louisiana, or a farmer, or a small-business man, or a widow or struggling business woman, who wants to do away with the homestead exemption. That is a direct benefit which our administration has given to the people of this State, in order to relieve them of the burden of unjust taxation. I know that it was with a feeling of genuine relief that every man and woman tonight listening to my voice, who owns a home in this State, walked up to the tax collector's office and had him stamp "Paid" on his notice of State and parish taxes on assessed valuation up to $2,000 without having to fork up a thin dime for that privilege.

And then there is the corporation franchise tax—that is another tax which the big boys do not like. And they don't like it because they are the ones who have to pay it. With the money that the State collects from the corporation franchise tax, we were able to improve the Charity Hospital in New Orleans, and the Louisiana State University in Baton Rouge, our other educational and charitable institutions, and furnish other much-needed benefits for the people of our State.

I could tell further of all the benefits that you good people are receiving from the taxes that are now collected, not from the poor people, but from the rich and corporate interests of our State. But time will not permit me to go further into detail.

But let me warn you of this—that when Candidate Jones and Candidate Noe and Candidate Morrison and Candidate Mosely come around yelling to high heaven about the taxes that our administration put on the statute books, and how they are going to take them off if they become Governor—just remember that those taxes are not on your backs, and if perchance they were to be taken off, then some other means of taxation would have to be found to replace the revenues that are thus shut off. And that is when you good people would be taxed, and taxed heavily, just as you were in the days before 1928, before Huey saved the State from the corporate interests, the Times Picayune, the New Orleans States, Shreveport Times, and their like.

Now Candidate Jones also goes around the State telling you good people that we collect $78,000,000 of taxes per year. That is just another one of Candidate Jones' misstatements of facts. I have before me the report of the Census Bureau for 1937, and it does show that the State of Louisiana took into its treasury, from all sources, $78,000,000 during the year 1937. But what Candidate Jones did not tell you is that $16,000,000 of that amount represents money put up by the Federal Government as grants-in-aid for relief, public roads, unemployment insurance, and other similar items. It can in no sense be construed as taxes collected by our State government from our people, but Candidate Jones would have you think that it is.

I went to considerable trouble when I returned to Louisiana last November, in order to analyze the expenditures of our State government. I took the 1938 appropriation bill and totaled the expenditures of our State governmental departments for the fiscal year 1938-39. The expenditures authorized in that bill aggregated $66,900,000 for our entire State functions, for the fiscal year 1938-39. And of that amount 33½ percent went for purposes of education. In other words, out of every $100 appropriated by the State, education got $33.50. Highways got $28 out of every $100; public welfare received $10.50; eleemosynary institutions, $7.50; homestead exemptions, $5; and veterans, $1.50. In other words, those six branches of our State government received $86 out of every $100 authorized to be spent in 1938.

Two and one-half dollars out of every $100 went toward running the legislative and judiciary branches of the government, and the department of agriculture, $2 was expended to retire interest and principal on the old State debt which was saddled on us before the time of Huey P. Long, and $1.50 was used to retire the debts of the ports of New Orleans and Lake Charles, another indebtedness which Huey inherited from his predecessors.

That now accounts for $92 out of every $100 appropriated, and it leaves $8 out of every $100 with which to run all the executive branches of the government—just think of that, only $8 out of every $100, or a total amount of only $5,600,000 to run the Governor and Lieutenant Governor's office, the secretary of state's office, the adjutant general's office, the labor department, registrars of voters and assessors throughout the State, conservation department, auditing department, collector of revenue, supervisor of public funds—in other words, each and every branch of the executive department is taken care of with that $5,600,000 appropriation.

And yet Candidate Jones and Candidate Noe and Candidate Morrison and Candidate Mosely have the temerity to go before the people of this State and tell them that they are going to save enough from graft alone to cut out various taxes altogether, reduce licenses on autos and trucks, and at the same time, without imposing additional taxes, increase old-age pensions to $30 per month. Now I ask you, can't you see for yourself how absurd and ridiculous are those statements. Why, even if these would-be Governors abolished the entire executive branch of the government, abolished all of its functions, even their own office and salary as Governor that saving would amount to only $5,600,000. And we spent out of the State treasury in 1938 for welfare purposes alone—that includes old-age pensions and aid to the blind and crippled and dependent children—we spent for those purposes alone approximately $6,900,000 in 1938. So if they are going to double and triple old-age pensions and grants to the needy, then they've got to get the money somewhere, and they can't do it by reducing taxation. Because common sense tells you, whether you are a bookkeeper or not—any farmer, or housewife, or laborer can tell you that you can't keep taking money out of your pocket to pay for the necessities and luxuries of life without putting some more money back in that pocket to replace what you spend. So I say to you that if these opposing candidates carry out their pledges to the corporate interests and the oil interests and the big-business interests by reducing the taxes they have to pay, then the poor people of this State will suffer, and they will suffer heavily. Because we can't afford to take money away from our schools—they need all the money they can lay their hands on—we don't want to lose the homestead exemptions; we don't want to lose the free schoolbooks; and hot lunches; we don't want to lose our free hospitals, free dental clinics; we want our old-age pensions, and Governor Long has promised a material increase in the present payments; we want to continue our good roads and free bridges program; in short, my good friends, we want all the wonderful benefits we are now sharing under the Long administration, and I know that the great majority of our people are aware of the issues that are facing them in this election, and in gratitude for benefits received they will vote the Earl Long ticket from top to bottom, just as they voted the Huey Long ticket in days gone by.

And now I would like to say a word about our bonded indebtedness. Candidate Jones has gone all over the State charging that when Huey Long became Governor the per capita bonded indebtedness was only $6 per person; well, since we have approximately 2,000,000 persons in Louisiana, this would indicate a bond issue of only $12,000,000. I have made a complete study and analysis of our bonded indebtedness, both as of 1928 and as of today, and the records show that the total bonded indebtedness of the State in 1928, when Huey became Governor, was $58,000,000. Of course, a difference of $46,000,000 in his figures is a mere nothing to Candidate Jones, for he also told the good people of this State that the present bonded indebtedness of our State government amounts to $200 per person, indicating a total bonded indebtedness of $400,000,000; well, the actual figure as of November 1939 is $182,000,000—so Candidate Jones only exaggerated to the tune of $218,000,000 in that instance.

There has been so much misrepresentation and falsification spread throughout the State regarding our bonded indebtedness that I want to spend just a few minutes analyzing the expenditures that have been made since 1928. The State of Louisiana has issued, since Huey Long took office, a total of $129,000,000 of highway bonds, and of that amount $24,000,000 have been paid, leaving a balance of $105,000,000 due and outstanding. With the proceeds of those bonds, we have constructed in Louisiana one of the finest road systems in any State of the Union. Consider this: That when Huey Long became Governor in 1928 we had less than 5,000 miles of improved roads in this State, only 60 miles of which were of high-type pavement. Today we have over 19,000 miles of improved roads in Louisiana, and 15,000 miles are of concrete and gravel. That is how we spent $95,000,000 of the road-bond issues. With the other $34,000,000 of bond money, we built the fine system of free bridges that span the rivers and bayous and creeks of our State, including the magnificent bridge across the Mississippi River at New Orleans, another under construction at Baton Rouge, the beautiful bridges spanning the Red River at Shreveport and Alexandria—I could name dozens and dozens of outstanding bridges that have been built with that money; and remember this, ladies and gentlemen—that those road bonds are retired out of the gasoline tax, which is paid for by those who use our highways and in proportion to the amount of benefit that the users get out of those highways. It is a fair tax—paid equally by Louisianians and outsiders who use our highways.

In addition to the highway bonds that I have just spoken of, we issued approximately $5,000,000 of bonds to pay pensions to Confederate veterans and their widows and dependents—and over $1,000,000 of those issues have since been paid up. We issued $4,950,000 of bonds to liquidate old State debts, which represented the cost of the first building program at Louisiana State University; we issued $5,000,000 of bonds to build a magnificent new capitol, which graces our State at Baton Rouge—a building which has achieved world-wide publicity because of its great beauty and magnificence, and which could not be built today for twice what it cost us—and $1,750,000 of that issue has already been retired.

We issued approximately $2,000,000 of bonds to refinance the operations of the port of New Orleans, and refunding of those bonds is paid for out of port of New Orleans revenues. Then we issued back in 1938, $6,000,000 of bonds to match $4,000,000 in Federal funds, with which to construct new and modern buildings and facilities at our charitable and educational institutions, such as Southwestern Louisiana Institute, Southeastern Louisiana Polytech, School for Deaf and Dumb at Baton Rouge, Southern University for the colored, at Scotlandville. Those bonds are payable out of corporation franchise revenues. We issued $5,300,000 of bonds to construct new buildings at Louisiana State University; those bonds are payable out of corporation franchise tax revenues. And we also issued $8,900,000 of bonds to build the new Charity Hospital at New Orleans, which bonds likewise will be liquidated out of proceeds of the corporation franchise tax.

So that gives us a total of $167,000,000 of bonds which were issued since Huey Long took office, and of that amount, $28,000,000 have been retired, leaving a net balance of $139,000,000 outstanding. And I challenge our opponents to find where any of those funds were spent without the State receiving in return good, substantial, and much-needed improvements, that redound to the benefit of the masses of our people.

Time will not permit me to discuss some of the other issues of this campaign, but I ask the good people of this State to exercise their right of the ballot, unhampered and without fear or intimidation. Pay no attention to the malicious charges of opposing candidates and to the misrepresentations of the newspapers. Go to the polls on January 16 and vote for Earl K. Long for Governor, and for the rest of the candidates on his ticket. Remember, the people have been in charge of their government since 1928, under the present administration, and should you fail to maintain your government where it is, and return it to the privileged classes, years may elapse before you will be able to restore it and operate it for your benefit. Remember, that there will never be another Huey Long to shed his blood to save you from the strangle hold of corporate interests.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 1820) to provide for the transfer of certain land owned by the United States to the State of Texas; and certain other land to the county of Galveston, Tex.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2001) for the equalization of letter carriers.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia, Mr. TABER, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. LAMBERTSON, and Mr. DITTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

LANDS ADJACENT TO TURTLE MOUNTAIN INDIAN AGENCY, N. DAK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GURNEY in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1036) to authorize the purchase of certain lands adjacent to the Turtle Mountain Indian Agency in the State of North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. FRAZIER conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUPPLEMENTAL MILITARY AND NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the request of the House for a conference and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

AUTHORIZATION FOR COMMITTEE REPORTS DURING ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that during the adjournment of the Senate following today's session the Appropriations Committee and any other committee of the Senate may be authorized to submit reports on any measures they may be ready to report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, February 1, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 29, 1940

APPOINTMENT, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY TO QUARTERMASTER CORPS

Maj. Marion Irwin Voorhes, Cavalry, with rank from August 1, 1935.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE NATIONAL GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES
GENERAL OFFICERS

Maj. Gen. Roger Weed Eckfeldt, Massachusetts National Guard, to be major general, National Guard of the United States.

Brig. Gen. William Francis Howe, Massachusetts National Guard, to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 29, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, teach us to be still and know that Thou art God; cleanse us, keep us, and hold us safe. O let our souls wait for the Lord even more than they that wait for the morning. In this fear-haunted world lead us to the shadow of the cross and there inspire us to make our choice. We pray that we may be keepers of Thy commandments, defenders of Thy law, and towers of strength in all Thy righteous ways. Do Thou give us light in our blindness and open wide unto us the gates of knowledge and understanding. Let Thy glory be declared among all nations and Thy wonders among all peoples. Thou who art the Ancient of Days, hasten the hour when they shall come from the east and from the west, from the north and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God. In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 25, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7805. An act making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1955) entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to delegate certain regulatory functions and to create the position of Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. WHEELER, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. McNARY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

LXXXVI—47

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE MILITARY AND NAVAL ESTABLISHMENTS, COAST GUARD, AND FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. TAYLOR, WOODRUM of Virginia, CANNON of Missouri, LUDLOW, SNYDER, O'NEAL, JOHNSON of West Virginia, TABER, WIGGLESWORTH, LAMBERTSON, and DITTER.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

[Mr. COCHRAN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the Record.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short editorial on the subject of neutrality.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOREN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address on bituminous coal delivered by Mr. Carroll B. Huntress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and following the legislative program of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 6 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

WILLIAM M'KINLEY

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, this is the anniversary of the birth of one of the greatest Americans. On January 29, 1843, William McKinley was born at Niles, Ohio. I am proud of the fact that I now have the honor to represent in this House the same district that this great American represented. When we consider who was the greatest American, there can be no definite decision, for many were great. Some were great in one respect, and some were great in other respects. Probably none of our great Presidents was more circumspect in his private life than Mr. McKinley. His tender regard for his aged mother and his invalid wife won for him the respect of the manhood of the Nation and the devotion of the womanhood of the Nation. So splendid was his private relationship with the people who came in contact with him that the mothers of the Nation held him up to their sons as a model. So generally beloved was he, that when the news flashed over the wires that he had been assassinated and had died it was said of him, as it was said of another great character, "the children cried in the streets."

Although McKinley was a great Governor of the great State of Ohio, and although he was a highly honored and respected President, because he was recognized as a man of able purposes and of great ability; and although as the Chief Executive of our country, his was the lot of guiding us through a major war, which he did in such a manner as to win the admiration and the respect of the world, still the public service that he rendered that contributed most to the welfare of our country and to his name and memory were the services rendered by him as a Congressman, and in this very room. There may have been greater Presidents than McKinley. This will depend upon the judgment and feelings of the person making the appraisal. But, to my mind, by any fair appraisal it must be conceded that in McKinley was the greatest Congressman ever to serve in this the greatest and most deliberative legislative body in the world. As a member and as chairman of the mighty Ways and Means Committee, he took an active part in writing and passing tariff legislation. In any list of the great Americans who formulated our tariff policies, the name of William McKinley will lead all the rest. In the years between 1893 and 1896 the country suffered terribly by reason of a stubborn depression which had come because of the economic policies of the Cleveland administrations. The campaign of 1896 was waged upon the tariff and the economic problems of the Nation, with the result that William McKinley was overwhelmingly elected. Immediately upon the election of McKinley, as if by magic, business began to improve, unemployment began to disappear, and an era of prosperity was ushered in that gained such momentum as to carry itself for several years. That was the beginning of an intensive industrial age which carried our country to world power and influence as a producer of goods. The Spanish-American War made the United States a world power in the politics of the world, likewise in this age our country reached a position of great financial importance in the parleys of the other great nations of the world.

McKinley was a statesman of the highest order. His statesmanship was constructive. Although gentle and well mannered, almost to timidity, still he was courageous. His ability, his tact, and his courage carried him to high places. Again I say it is a great honor for anybody to represent in Congress the people of the district which he represented. It shall always be my aim to do what I think he might do if he were in my place. The people of my district hold Mr. McKinley up as their most exalted citizen. They would quite generally approve of what I do if they thought it would have met the approval of Mr. McKinley.

Today we hear much about reciprocity in trade agreements with other nations. It was William McKinley that fathered this policy and made it a part of our methods of dealing with foreign trade. There are some who claim that the present system of entering into reciprocal-trade agreements is in line with the McKinley policy. This is not true. The difference between the two policies is exactly what makes one system constitutional and the other unconstitutional. McKinley advocated trading only in commodities that would not be in competition with American-made commodities and in commodities the importation of which would not displace American labor. His theory would not admit Argentine beef in competition with American beef or Japanese pottery in competition with American pottery.

Next to his clean, shining, personal life, McKinley's life as a soldier most completely portrays his real character. He was just 18 years of age when the Civil War broke. He was teaching school. He volunteered among the first, proving his love for his country. When he enlisted at Columbus, Ohio, he met Rutherford B. Hayes, who was several years older than young McKinley. They formed a friendship then that, through numerous baptisms of fire and blood, ripened into a friendship and devotion like that of David and Jonathan. Each served through the entire war. Hayes came out as general and with a badly wounded arm. McKinley came out as a major, having won all his promotions for gallantry on the firing line. Phil Sheridan in his story of the Civil War gives William McKinley very special mention for personal heroism at Cedar Creek when Sheridan made his famous ride from Winchester 20 miles away. He made the reference long before McKinley was even a Congressman, much less a Governor and a President.

And again, at Antietam, McKinley saved the day. The State of Ohio, by legislative appropriation, has erected on the battlefield at Antietam a very large and imposing granite shaft on the spot under the brow of the hill where McKinley brought relief to the Union Army that saved the day and enabled them to gain a great victory. It was this victory that moved Abraham Lincoln to sign and promulgate the Emancipation Proclamation.

In my home city of Canton, Ohio, is erected a beautiful memorial to McKinley. It was erected at the expense of many thousands of dollars, made up by small contributions from the school children of the Nation. This is a shrine before which millions of loyal Americans have bowed their heads and lifted their hats. Truly, William McKinley was a noble man, a genuine patriot, and a great statesman. I am proud to bring to this Congress the greetings of a splendid people in my district who join me in thanking you for this opportunity to tell you again a brief story of our great and beloved fellow citizen, William McKinley. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter written by Mr. McKinley to a personal friend of his; a report on the funeral obsequies of President William McKinley at Canton, Ohio, September 17 to 19, 1901; and a letter addressed to me from Mr. William T. Kuhns, of Canton, Ohio, together with enclosures, concerning the former President.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 25, 1878.

JOHN POLLOCK, Esq.,

North Lawrence, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 23d is received and contents noted. In reply to your several inquiries, I reply that the tariff question is assuming great prominence and very nearly divides the two great parties and may be fairly said to be a leading issue. It is certainly a highly important one, closely connected with the business interests of the country, and is creating more attention in Congress than any other.

The Republicans, as you know, favor a system of tariffs not only for revenue but for protection also, while the Democratic Party is opposed to protection.

The manufacturing, mining, and agricultural classes are all and equally interested in home protection. If the Democratic Party had its own way, it would flood the country with foreign products, free of duty, to the great detriment and injury of our own productions—our own manufacturers—and I need not tell you that when the manufactures of this country are broken down, labor, now so much depressed, goes down with them. Therefore its importance.

The money question is substantially settled, possibly not in all its details, but silver is made a legal tender for all purposes, the greenback dollar is within 1 cent of the value of gold. So that we have gold, silver, and greenbacks as the circulating medium of the country, varying but little on their purchasing power, respectively.

The Republican Party is now and always has been committed to a good, sound currency, which is always the best for all classes, rich or poor. It is out of the power of any political party to make money plenty. That must come from thrift and economy on the part of the individual and the Nation, and by fostering and protecting our industries at home. I don't know what to say of the National Party. Indeed, I know little about it, except what I see in the public press. I do think, however, that whatever good is to be wrought for this country must come from one of the two leading parties, Democratic and Republican. New parties are apt to injure the party least worthy of injury. Needed reforms, either in principle or administration, must come through one of the two parties, and the question for us as good citizens, loving our country and desiring its prosperity and permanency, is to cast about and see which of the two parties are the best instruments for the accomplishment of reforms. I need not tell you that I believe the Republican Party has in it the virtue, the wisdom, and the courage to achieve for this country and its people of all classes the highest and greatest good.

The record and aspiration of the two parties are known to the country, and we must judge each for oneself between them. The Nationals may have the best and highest purposes in view, and I do not doubt but that this is so among its rank and file, but the question still comes back, What can it hope to accomplish against the two great parties so firmly fixed and long established in this country?

If it be true, as I see by the newspapers, that General Coxe is the leader of the new party, this fact, I am sure, would furnish another reason why good men should pause before espousing it.

I hope our good friends in your locality, who have always stood with the Republican Party, will continue its fealty to that party, whose record is so full of achievements for the good of the country and mankind, and whose future promises still greater good. I am sure it should commend itself to their hearty respect and support. I have written you hastily and frankly, and shall hope to hear from you soon. When I come home we will have a full talk going over the whole ground.

Believe me, sincerely yours,

WILLIAM MCKINLEY, Jr.

REPORT OF LT. COL. HARRY FREASE AS CHIEF OF STAFF OF THE CHIEF MARSHAL FOR THE FUNERAL OBSEQUIES OF PRESIDENT WILLIAM MCKINLEY AT CANTON, OHIO, SEPTEMBER 17-19, 1901

HEADQUARTERS OF DIVISION, OHIO NATIONAL GUARD,
CHIEF COMMISSARY'S OFFICE,
Canton, Ohio, September 30, 1901.

THE ASSISTANT ADJUTANT GENERAL,
Division Ohio National Guard, Akron, Ohio.

SIR: I have the honor to report as follows, in connection with my detail as chief of staff of the chief marshal, as per telegraphic orders received early in the morning of the 17th instant, from Assistant Adjutant General George M. Wright, in response to a request from Chief Marshal Hiram Doll, by the executive committee through its chairman, the mayor of Canton.

Anticipating the needs of the occasion, for the disposition of the troops and the organizations coming to participate in the funeral procession, on Monday afternoon, the 16th instant, through the courtesy of City Civil Engineer Phil. H. Weber, I secured the services of one of his draftsmen, being First Lt. Jesse A. Starret, Company M, Eighth Infantry, Ohio National Guard, who traced an outline of Canton from the camp to the cemetery, from which tracing I secured a zinc etching, and by Tuesday evening had 500 copies of the plate printed for the use of the chief marshal and in the division headquarters. A copy of the outline is attached hereto, and the plate has been forwarded to the Adjutant General's Office at Columbus. On Monday evening I applied to the city council for permission to use the mayor's court room in the city building for the headquarters of the chief marshal and the assembly room in the same building for an emergency division hospital, which permission was granted; and on Wednesday morning the chief marshal's headquarters were established in said court room, which was shared with Major General Dick for division headquarters.

The street arrangements for the reception of the remains and the funeral obsequies of the late President of the United States, which were directed by the chief marshal, were planned primarily by the executive committee and were promulgated in a mayor's proclamation, in several announcements prepared by the committee and issued by it or in the name of the chief marshal, and in four general orders prepared and issued by the chief marshal; which several forms of orders were published in regular and extra editions of the Evening Repository, as follows:

MAYOR'S PROCLAMATION

CANTON, OHIO, September 17, 1901.

To the citizens of the city of Canton:

In compliance with a request of the executive committee having in charge the arrangements for the funeral of the late President, and in conformity with a resolution passed by the honorable city council, it is hereby ordered as follows: That all places of business and manufactories be closed from 10 o'clock a. m. September 18 until 6 o'clock p. m. September 19, excepting, however, hotels, restaurants, eating houses, lunch counters, refreshment parlors, and news depots.

It is further ordered that on September 18, between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 9 o'clock p. m., no vehicles, including delivery wagons, automobiles, and bicycles, shall use or occupy the following streets: East Tenth Street from Pennsylvania Depot to Cherry Street; Cherry Street to Tuscarawas Street; Tuscarawas Street to Cleveland Avenue; and Market Street from Seventh Street to Erie Street.

It is further ordered that on September 18, between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m. and 9 o'clock p. m., no vehicles of any kind and description, automobiles and bicycles, use or occupy the following streets: Market Street, from Lake Street to South Street; Tuscarawas, from Cherry to Harrison Avenue; Cleveland Avenue, from Lake to South Street; Hazlett Avenue to Harrison Avenue; and Deuber Avenue to Market Street.

It is further ordered that no lunch counters or refreshment stands be erected on any of the public grounds of the city, except by special permit of the city council or the committee on public comfort.

By order of

JAMES H. ROBERTSON,
Mayor of the City of Canton.

WEDNESDAY'S PROGRAM

Funeral train to arrive at 11 o'clock—Body to lie in state at the courthouse until 9 p. m.—Canton Post to act as escort when remains are taken to McKinley home

When the remains lie in the courthouse, the people gathered shall form in line, four abreast, at the south door of the courthouse, extending westwardly on West Tuscarawas Street. All persons shall fall in at the end of the line and shall refrain from getting into line at any other point.

HIRAM DOLL, Chief Marshal.

HARRY FREASE, Chief of Staff.

The executive committee announces the following order of exercises for Wednesday, September 18:

In view of the solemn character of the day's proceedings and the large number of people who will be present in joining in paying respect to the memory of our beloved president, the marshal expresses the hope that all the people along the line of march, and others, will cheerfully accord the procession, while moving, the uninterrupted right of travel, and that while the remains are passing the people will remain with uncovered heads, as a token of love and respect to the memory of the illustrious deceased.

By order of

HIRAM DOLL, Chief Marshal.

HARRY FREASE, Chief of Staff.

The proclamation, the respective announcements, and the general orders, together with a few special orders given verbally or by memorandum to the major general commanding, by the committee, the mayor, or by the chief marshal, constituted the instructions to the division, Ohio National Guard, in the performance of its special duties while in the city; and the same instructions, with a few minor exceptions, sufficed to properly inform the various organizations which came to participate in the funeral procession.

The marshals appointed in General Orders No. 2 were all members of the Grand Army of the Republic, and were designed to take charge of the divisions not otherwise commanded; and the aides were members of the Canton troop, who served in receiving and escorting the delegations and in organizing and directing the various parades during the political campaign of 1896; together with several former volunteer and National Guard officers.

The Canton troop, under command of Maj. George W. Perrine, covered all incoming trains on Thursday, the 19th inst., by special details, there meeting the visiting organizations and then conducting them to their respective places of rest for the formation of the funeral procession; each division commander and other proper officer being furnished with copies of the general orders attached on the back of the outline of Canton; and to the collective and individual work of these troopers is largely due the success which attended the proper disposition of the numerous organizations participating in the procession.

Capt. Philip Yost, formerly captain, Company I, Eighth O. V. I., and more recently first lieutenant, Forty-seventh U. S. V. I.; Capt. Ralph Spotts, formerly first sergeant, Company I, Eighth O. V. I., and more recently captain and assistant adjutant general, U. S. V.; and Mr. William T. Kuhns, formerly second lieutenant, Company I, Eighth O. N. G., and more recently first lieutenant and adjutant in the same regiment, were specially detailed to assist the chief marshal in the work of organization in the headquarters, and in the formation and conduct of the procession; and to the untiring and efficient services of these officers is largely due the success which attended the movements.

And more than anything else contributing to the success of the entire series of ceremonies was the thoroughly efficient service of the Ohio National Guard, in keeping the necessary spaces and streets absolutely open and free for all the various movements.

On Wednesday, the 18th inst., at 10:30 a. m., the chief marshal and aides, being joined for the occasion by Maj. Gen. Charles Dick and Brig. Gen. William V. McMaken and Brig. Gen. John C. Speaks, with their respective staffs, O. N. G.; the Grand Army Band; Troop A. O. N. G.; and the local honorary pallbearers, in carriages, assembled at the government building, in South Cleveland Avenue, and in the order mentioned proceeded via Tenth Street to the Fort Wayne railroad station to meet the funeral train. At the station the column was counter-marched to the left and halted with Troop A in line, opposite and facing the station, which formation was completed by 11 a. m. A little later the First Infantry, O. N. G., having just arrived in the city, reported at the station to escort the President of the United States, and were assigned to a temporary position on the left of Troop A.

Upon the arrival of the funeral train the intended program was varied, by direction of Col. Theodore A. Bingham, United States Army, who had charge of the funeral party, so that Mrs. McKinley, escorted by a corporal and four troopers, hurriedly detailed upon request by Captain Bunts, and the other members of the family, proceeded at once in carriages to the McKinley residence.

The casket having been placed in the funeral car at about 12:30 p. m., the escort was formed and marched to the courthouse via Tenth, Cherry, and Tuscarawas Streets, in the following order:

Chief marshal and aides; Major General Dick, O. N. G., and staff; Grand Army Band; Troop A; President of the United States, Cabinet and local honorary pallbearers, in carriages; funeral car, with soldier and sailor body bearers, and guard of honor of Army and Navy walking on either side; soldier, sailor, and marine bodyguard walking in rear, and O. N. G. sergeants leading the horses; Senators, Congressman, and other distinguished members of the funeral party, in carriages; and First Regiment, Infantry, O. N. G.

Arriving at the county courthouse, the chief marshal and aides turned north in Market Street, the Grand Army Band and Troop A formed line facing the south front, the funeral party alighted at the southeast corner, and the casket was borne into the central corridor of the building.

At the same time, the First Infantry followed the chief marshal in Market Street, where the column was halted, left resting at the courthouse. The President of the United States, upon reentering his carriage, was then escorted through Market Street to the residence of Mrs. Elizabeth Harter, the rear of the column being covered by four mounted officers of the troops on guard, directed by Lt. Col. C. C. Weybrecht, Eighth Infantry, at which residence the receiving parade was dismissed.

The remains of the late President rested in the courthouse and were there viewed by the citizens, in accordance with the previous announcement, until 6 p. m., when they were removed to the McKinley residence, under escort of Canton Post, No. 25, G. A. R.

On Thursday, the 19th instant, at 12:30 p. m., the chief marshal and aides, Thayer Military Band, and Troop A assembled at the McKinley residence, in North Market Street, and the President of the United States was then escorted there from the Harter residence by the chief marshal and Troop A. The casket having been borne to the funeral car, the procession was formed and proceeded without halting, via Market and Tuscarawas Streets, to the First Methodist Church, in accordance with the previous announcement, arriving there at 1:30 p. m. The escort was there halted, with Troop A in line, opposite and facing the north front of the church, and the band proceeded to its division post. The casket was borne into the church, where the funeral services were held, and the empty carriages moved south in Cleveland Avenue, thence across to Market Street, where they were formed in column and again approached the church from the east.

The chief marshal and aides proceeded from the church, through Tuscarawas, Market, and Fifth Streets, Cleveland Avenue and North Street, to the right of the First Division at North and Market Streets, receiving en route reports from the commanders of the divisions that the same were respectively formed in accordance with the general orders.

At 2:10 p. m. the funeral procession, headed by a squad of police, the chief marshal and aides, followed by the several divisions, as specified in the previous announcements, started from the corner of North and Market Streets and proceeded over the line of march in accordance with the general orders. The commanding officer of each division was directed when to move by Captain Spotts, the aide detailed for that purpose. The First Division and the military section of the Second Division were halted with the left west of the church, and the part of the Second Division to the rear of the carriage section, and the other divisions were halted with the right east of the church.

At the conclusion of the services in the church, about 2:45 p. m., the casket was borne to the funeral car, and the formation of the middle section of the Second Division was completed. Information to that effect was conveyed to the chief marshal, at the head of the procession, by Maj. Daniel C. Stearns, assistant inspector general, Second Brigade, O. N. G., who, having a specially good mount, kindly volunteered the service, and the march of the procession was resumed to and through the cemetery without further halt.

The funeral car having arrived at the receiving vault in West Lawn Cemetery, the First Division and the military section of the Second Division were halted in line on the right side of South Street and Dueber Avenue, respectively, and Troop A counter-marched and halted in line south of and facing the vault.

At the conclusion of the burial services, about 4 p. m., the President of the United States, escorted by Troop A, and the family and the remainder of the carriage section of the Second Division, proceeded at once over the return line of march, the President returning to the Harter residence, which movement was guided by Captain Yost, the aide detailed for that purpose.

The march of the funeral procession was then resumed, and the same was dismissed at the corner of Market and Tuscarawas Streets, where it was reviewed by the chief marshal and aides. The left of the procession had just cleared this point, going out when the right arrived, coming in at about 5 p. m. By reason of the lateness of the hour and the departure of outgoing trains, some sections of the procession which did not have a military type of organization did not cover the entire line of march, which was probably unavoidable under the circumstances. The movement of the procession around the loop at the cemetery and at the common point at Lincoln and Dueber Avenues and Tuscarawas Street was directed by First Lieutenant Kuhns, the aide detailed for that purpose.

At my request, afterward confirmed by the approval of Major General Dick, Troop A continued in attendance on the President of the United States at the Harter residence, and at 6:30 p. m. escorted him through Market, Tenth, and Cherry Streets to his car on the Fort Wayne Railroad.

After reviewing the procession, the chief marshal dismissed his aides, with his thanks for their efficient services, and, being thus relieved, I reported to the major general commanding at division headquarters at 6 p. m.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
(Signed) HARRY FREASE,
Lieutenant Colonel and Chief Commissary of Division,
Ohio National Guard.

CANTON, OHIO, January 24, 1940.

HON. JAMES SECCOMBE,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JIM: I was away from home for a few days, hence just received your letter of the 19th.

You pay me quite a compliment in asking me to contribute some sentiment in connection with your remarks to be made on President McKinley's birthday.

I fear I have not the ability to send anything that would be worthy of the occasion, especially as I am not clear as to just what you have in mind. All my talks and writing on McKinley have been personal recollections of incidents and anecdotes, hardly suitable for a birthday sentiment. However, I am sending two suggestions. I am not at all proud of either of them and it will not offend me or hurt my feelings if you decide that neither is suitable.

Thanks for the compliment anyway, and with kindest remembrances, I am,

Sincerely,

WILLIAM T. KUHN.

[Enclosure]

Whether or not the policies upon which William McKinley build his political life would in the complex economy of the world of today be the best policies, there can be no doubt but that in his day and age they were the only policies upon which this country could have reached that high state of industrial and agricultural development which resulted in universal employment of labor and higher standards of living in our country than had ever before been attained in the world. During the years of his political life prosperity was continuous except when there was a departure from his policies, then always with the assurance of the reestablishment of these policies prosperity quickly returned.

When the birthday anniversary of William McKinley approaches there come to those of us who knew him and loved him personal recollections of perhaps unrecorded little incidents. Yet frequently these little, almost forgotten incidents shed much light on some of his outstanding characteristics. As I sit tonight, thinking of this great man, memory carries me back over many years to a time when I was a little boy of 10 or 11 years, and Major McKinley, the name by which we of the then thriving village of Canton, Ohio, knew him, was serving his first term in Congress. I was taken by my father and mother on a camping trip arranged by perhaps a dozen friendly families. The camp was set up on the shore of a beautiful stream near the small village of Waynesburg, Ohio. Each family had one of the tents which were arranged around a hollow square, with a dining tent at one end. Major and Mrs. McKinley were in the party. One evening the band from the nearby village came over to serenade the camp, or, more particularly, no doubt, to serenade Major McKinley. This was a big occasion for the five or six small boys in the party, and it gave us an idea. The next day we had organized a band. One boy with a tin fish horn, another perhaps a whistle, one a dishpan drum, while I remember I played the cymbals, consisting of two pot lids. We started around the tents, stopping to serenade each. When we reached the tent of Major and Mrs. McKinley and before we started our serenade the major stepped out of his tent and greeted us with all the courtesy he could have displayed had he been greeting an important delegation. He explained that he greatly appreciated the serenade we intended to give, but, as Mrs. McKinley had a bad headache and was sleeping, he thought we would perhaps like to go over to the village and buy some candy, for which purpose he gave each of us a nickel.

I was too young then and too much interested in the candy to think much about it, but as I grew up I often thought of this little incident. Could anything have more beautifully demonstrated two of his outstanding characteristics? One his inability to offend anyone, even a troublesome boy; the other, his ever-watchful care of and devotion to his wife, who even then was in failing health.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I did not know that my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECCOMBE] was going to discuss today the birthday of former President McKinley, but he has reminded me that another Governor of Ohio since McKinley is here today, the present Governor, Hon. John W. Bricker. [Applause.] He will be here for lunch in the dining room downstairs. I hope every Member of the House will avail himself of the opportunity of meeting Governor Bricker. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] will do it, as well. Governor Bricker is a fine-looking man, and he is just as good as he looks. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, nearly every year since I have been a Member of this House I have embraced the opportunity to say a few words on the anniversary of the birth of William McKinley, but today, out of deference to the fact that my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECCOMBE] represents the district formerly represented by William McKinley, I yielded to him. However, I feel that I should take 1 minute to say that while there were many high lights in the life of McKinley, he laid the foundation of all his greatness right here in this Chamber, as a Member of Congress. I have repeatedly stated that he was the greatest of all Congressmen. [Applause.]

THE LATE IRVING P. WANGER

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of profound sadness that I rise at this time to announce the passing of a distinguished Pennsylvanian who during the years gone by represented one of the best districts of Pennsylvania in the House of Representatives. I refer to the late Hon. Irving P. Wanger, who was a Member of the House during eight consecutive sessions, and who during that time brought honor and credit not only to himself but to the district which he represented.

Irving P. Wanger was born in North Coventry, Chester County, Pa., on March 5, 1852. He attended the public schools and the Hill School in Pottstown. Mr. Wanger was admitted to the bar of Montgomery County December 18, 1875, where he won recognition by his ability and energy.

In 1880 Mr. Wanger was elected district attorney of Montgomery County, in which office he distinguished himself by his painstaking and aggressive conduct of the prosecutor's office.

Mr. Wanger was elected to the Fifty-third Congress and continued to serve as a Member of the House from March 4, 1893, to March 3, 1911. His professional training, his indefatigable energy, and his conscientious regard of public duty won for him the respect and admiration of those who were privileged to serve with him here in the House.

On January 15 of this year Mr. Wanger passed on to his eternal reward. In his passing the State of Pennsylvania has lost one of her distinguished sons, whose record of public service is a challenge and an inspiration.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from Mr. L. J. Wilhoite, of Chattanooga, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time to bring to the attention of the House and the country the fact that the Gallup Institute of Public Opinion has taken another poll on the constitutional amendment I have proposed, which would allow the people of the United States the right to vote on participation in wars overseas. In announcing the result of this latest poll in yesterday's Sunday newspapers the institute says:

Rank and file sentiment for a people's vote has increased in a marked manner since the outbreak of the European war 5 months ago.

The poll just announced is the fifth the institute of public opinion has taken on this subject. All five polls agree that a majority of the people of our country favor the proposal and desire to see it adopted by Congress and ratified by the States so that this principle of democracy may become a part of our fundamental law and the fathers and mothers, wives and sweethearts of our young men of military age, and our young men themselves may decide whether the flower of American manhood shall be drafted and sent overseas to die on foreign battlefields. This latest poll shows 60 percent of the people favoring the proposition, with a rapidly rising tide of sentiment supporting it.

With national interest in the proposal so strongly indicated, and growing all the while, certainly the time is propitious to bring it up for debate and a vote in the House. In keeping with the marked change of sentiment which the Gallup poll has found in favor of the proposal, some of those who have heretofore opposed it have made known their willingness that the resolution be brought up for careful consideration and full debate, and I think that course would be pleasing to the country at large at this time. I have filed at the Clerk's desk discharge petition No. 4, which is intended to accomplish that purpose. From my wide knowledge of the national interest in the proposal, as evidenced by an enormous correspondence in which every State in the Union is represented, I believe the majority sentiment in every congressional district in the country, without any exception, is for my resolution and in many districts it is overwhelmily favorable. So far 49 Members of the House, representing some 12,000,000 American people, have signed discharge petition No. 4. I plead with all of the other Members of the House to go to the Clerk's desk and sign it. Common fairness would dictate that a proposal in which there is such genuine and widespread interest and so much demonstrated merit should not be suppressed in committee but should be allowed its day in the House. It is not American and it is not right to deny consideration of this bill any longer. Let us bring it before the House with the widest latitude of debate and amendment and then let the representatives of the people decide whether they desire that this grand democratic principle shall take its place in the Constitution to complete and round out the Bill of Rights. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] has just stated that this is the birthday of President McKinley. It so happens that I have on my desk at the present time the last address delivered by President McKinley. It was made in Buffalo shortly before he was assassinated.

As you all know, President McKinley was a Member of this body and was at one time chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. That committee is now considering reciprocal trade agreement legislation.

In this address, President McKinley, one of the great Republicans of this country, without reservations, endorsed reciprocal-trade agreements, and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to include in my remarks the address of President McKinley.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The address follows:

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY'S LAST PUBLIC UTTERANCE TO THE PEOPLE, BUFFALO, N. Y., SEPTEMBER 5, 1901

President Milburn, Director General Buchanan, commissioners, ladies and gentlemen, I am glad to be again in the city of Buffalo and exchange greetings with her people—to whose generous hospitality I am not a stranger and with whose good will I have been repeatedly and signally honored. Today I have additional satisfaction in meeting and giving welcome to the foreign representatives assembled here, whose presence and participation in this exposition have contributed in so marked a degree to its interest and success. To the commissioners of the Dominion of Canada and the British colonies, the French colonies, the republics of Mexico and Central and South America, and the commissioners of Cuba and Puerto Rico, who share with us in this undertaking, we give the hand of fellowship and felicitate with them upon the triumphs of art, science, education, and manufacture which the old has bequeathed to the new century. Expositions are the timekeepers of progress. They record the world's advancement. They stimulate the energy, enterprise, and intellect of the people and quicken human genius. They go into the home. They broaden and brighten the daily life of the people. They open mighty storehouses of information to the student. Every exposition, great or small, has helped to some onward step. Comparison of ideas is always educational and as such instructs the brain and hand of man. Friendly rivalry follows, which is the spur to industrial improvement—the inspiration to useful invention and high endeavor in all departments of human activity. It exacts a study of the wants, comforts, and even the whims of the people and recognizes the efficiency of high quality and new pieces to win their favor. The quest for trade is an incentive to men of business to devise, invent, improve, and economize in the cost of production.

Business life, whether among ourselves or with other people, is ever a sharp struggle for success. It will be nonetheless so in the future. Without competition, we would be clinging to the clumsy antiquated processes of farming and manufacture and the methods of business of long ago, and the twentieth would be no further advanced than the eighteenth century. But, though commercial competitors we are, commercial enemies we must not be.

The Pan-American Exposition has done its work thoroughly, presenting in its exhibits evidences of the highest skill and illustrating the progress of the human family in the Western Hemisphere. This portion of the earth has no cause for humiliation for the part it has performed in the march of civilization. It has not accomplished everything from it. It has simply done its best, and without vanity or boastfulness, and recognizing the manifold achievements of others, it invites the friendly rivalry of all the powers in the peaceful pursuits of trade and commerce, and will cooperate with all in advancing the highest and best interests of humanity.

The wisdom and energy of all the nations are none too great for the world's work. The success of art, science, industry, and invention is an international asset and a common glory.

After all, how near one to the other is every part of the world. Modern inventions have brought into close relation widely separated peoples and made them better acquainted. Geographic and political divisions will continue to exist, but distances have been effaced. Swift ships and swift trains are becoming cosmopolitan. They invade fields which a few years ago were impenetrable. The world's products are exchanged as never before, and with increasing transportation facilities come increasing knowledge and larger trade. Prices are fixed with mathematical precision by supply and demand. The world's selling prices are regulated by market and crop reports.

We travel greater distances in a shorter space of time and with more ease than was ever dreamed of by the fathers. Isolation is no longer possible or desirable. The same important news is read, though in different languages, the same day in all Christendom. The telegraph keeps us advised of what is occurring everywhere, and the press foreshadows, with more or less accuracy, the plans and purposes of the nations.

Market prices of products and of securities are hourly known in every commercial mart, and the investments of the people extend beyond their own national boundaries into the remotest parts of the earth. Vast transactions are conducted and international exchanges are made by the tick of the cable. Every event of interest is immediately bulletined. The quick gathering and transmission of news, like rapid transit, are of recent origin and are only made possible by the genius of the inventor and the courage of the investor. It took a special messenger of the Government, with every facility known at the time for rapid travel, 19 days to go from the city of Washington to New Orleans with a message to General Jackson that the war with England had ceased and a treaty of peace had been signed. How different now.

We reached General Miles in Puerto Rico by cable, and he was able, through the military telegraph, to stop his army on the firing line with the message that the United States and Spain had signed a protocol suspending hostilities. We knew almost instantly of the first shots fired at Santiago, and the subsequent surrender of the Spanish forces was known at Washington within less than an hour of its consummation. The first ship of Cervera's fleet had hardly emerged from that historic harbor when the fact was flashed to our capital, and the swift destruction that followed was announced immediately through the wonderful medium of telegraphy.

So accustomed are we to safe and easy communication with distant lands that its temporary interruption, even in ordinary times, results in loss and inconvenience. We shall never forget the days of anxious waiting and awful suspense when no information was permitted to be sent from Peking, and the diplomatic representatives of the nations in China, cut off from all communication, inside and outside of the walled capital, were surrounded by an angry and misguided mob that threatened their lives; nor the joy that filled the world when a single message from the Government of the United States brought through our minister the first news of the safety of the besieged diplomats.

At the beginning of the nineteenth century there was not a mile of steam railroad on the globe. Now there are enough miles to make its circuit many times. Then there was not a line of electric telegraph; now we have a vast mileage traversing all lands and seas. God and man have linked the nations together. No nation can longer be indifferent to any other. And as we are brought more and more in touch with each other the less occasion there is for misunderstandings and the stronger the disposition, when we have differences, to adjust them in the court of arbitration, which is the noblest forum for the settlement of international disputes.

My fellow citizens, trade statistics indicate that this country is in a state of unexampled prosperity. The figures are almost appalling. They show that we are utilizing our fields and forests and mines and that we are furnishing profitable employment to the millions of workmen throughout the United States, bringing comfort and happiness to their homes and making it possible to lay by savings for old age and disability. That all the people are participating in this great prosperity is seen in every American community, and shown by the enormous and unprecedented deposits in our savings banks. Our duty is the care and security of these deposits, and their safe investment demands the highest integrity and the best business capacity of those in charge of these depositories of the people's earnings.

We have a vast and intricate business, built up through years of toil and struggle, in which every part of the country has its stake, and will not permit of either neglect or of undue selfishness. No narrow, sordid policy will subvert it. The greatest skill and wisdom on the part of the manufacturers and producers will be required to hold and increase it. Our industrial enterprises which have grown to such great proportions affect the homes and occupations of the people and the welfare of the country. Our capacity to produce has developed so enormously and our products have so multiplied that the problem of more markets requires our urgent and immediate attention. Only a broad and enlightened policy will keep what we have. No other policy will get more. In these times of marvelous business energy and gain we ought to be looking to the future, strengthening the weak places in our industrial and commercial system, that we may be ready for any storm or strain.

By sensible trade arrangements which will not interrupt our home production we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus. A system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities, a mutual exchange is manifestly essential to the continued and healthful growth of our export trade. We must not repose in fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing. If such a thing were possible, it would not be best for us or for those with whom we deal. We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor. Reciprocity is the natural outgrowth of our wonderful industrial development under the domestic policy now firmly established. What we produce beyond our domestic consumption must have a vent abroad. The excess must be relieved through a foreign outlet and we should sell everywhere we can, and buy wherever the buying will enlarge our sales and productions, and thereby make a greater demand for home labor.

The period of exclusiveness is past. The expansion of our trade and commerce is the pressing problem. Commercial wars are unprofitable. A policy of good will and friendly trade relations will prevent reprisals. Reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the times; measures of retaliation are not. If perchance some of our tariffs are no longer needed, for revenue or to encourage and protect our industries at home, why should they not be employed to extend and promote our markets abroad? Then, too, we have inadequate steamship service. New lines of steamers have already been put in commission between the Pacific coast ports of the United States and those on the western coasts of Mexico and Central and South America. These should be followed up with direct steamship lines between the eastern coast of the United States and South American ports. One of the needs of the times is to direct commercial lines from our vast fields of production to the fields of consumption that we have but barely touched. Next in advantage to having the thing to sell is to have the convenience to carry it to the buyer. We must encourage our merchant marine. We must have more ships. They must be under the American flag, built and manned and owned by Americans. These will not only be profitable in a commercial sense; they will be messengers of peace and amity wherever they go. We must build the Isthmian Canal, which will unite the two oceans and give a straight line of water communication with the western coasts of Central and South America and Mexico. The construction of a Pacific cable cannot be longer postponed.

In the furthering of these objects of national interest and concern you are performing an important part. This exposition would have touched the heart of that American statesman whose mind was ever alert and thought ever constant for a larger commerce and a truer fraternity of the republics of the New World. His broad American spirit is felt and manifested here. He needs no identification to an assemblage of Americans anywhere, for the name of Blaine is inseparably associated with the pan-American movement which finds this practical and substantial expression, and which we all hope will be firmly advanced by the Pan American Congress that assembles this autumn in the capital of Mexico. The good work will go on. It cannot be stopped. These buildings will disappear; this creation of art and beauty and industry will perish from sight, but their influence will remain to—

"Make it live beyond its too short living
With praises and thanksgiving."

Who can tell the new thoughts that have been awakened, the ambitions fired and the high achievements that will be wrought through this exposition? Gentlemen, let us ever remember that our interest is in concord not conflict and that our real eminence rests in the victories of peace not those of war. We hope that all who are represented here may be moved to higher and nobler effort for their own and the world's good, and that out of this city may come not only greater commerce and trade but, more essential than these, relations of mutual respect, confidence, and friendship which will deepen and endure.

Our earnest prayer is that God will graciously vouchsafe prosperity, happiness, and peace to all our neighbors, and like blessings to all the peoples and powers of earth.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein a speech by Judge Matthews.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include a letter by the Honorable Lloyd Thurston, who served in this House 14 years, which was published in the Des Moines Register of January 25, and also the editorial comment thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks and include an editorial by Mr. White upon the life and character of Senator BORAH.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

[Mr. GUYER of Kansas addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, in line with my fight in the Labor Committee to have the fair Wages and Hours Act amended, may I read the following letter received this morning from a cigar maker:

STEWARTSTOWN, PA., January 27, 1940.

HON. CHESTER H. GROSS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GROSS: We have a peculiar situation in our small community of which I hope you can help alleviate or advise the best course to follow.

Our local cigar factory employs about 107 persons, making hand-made cigars, almost all of whom are piece workers and under the Wage and Hour Act only about 10 percent are able to make the code rate. The representatives of the N. L. R. B. have been investigating this situation, and I understand have set a dead line of 15 days hence for the employer to either comply with the code or to stop operations. As you are familiar with cigar-making operations in hand-made varieties, I am sure you can easily appreciate this employer's position. If the act is to be strictly enforced, then there is only one thing for him to do and that is to close his shop.

The weekly pay roll averages about $1,000, which at present is supporting these 107 persons and their dependents. Now, if that pay roll is shut off then their support must come from elsewhere and there are no positions open to this class of labor in the community, so that the only answer is Government support, which will entail that additional expense on the Government.

So far as I can learn the employees are satisfied with their present status and am sure that it is the consensus of opinion in the community that it is far better for the factory to continue at its present wage scale than to be closed entirely.

May I enlist your support in continuing this factory in operation or advise as to proper contact to be made so that the same result will follow, as it is really a serious situation so far as our small community is concerned.

Thanking you for your attention, I am,

Yours respectfully,

ADDIE SHAW,
Republican Committeewoman.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I cannot let the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] to the effect that William McKinley, in the last speech he made in his life, at Buffalo, N. Y., endorsed reciprocity, go by without some further explanation of that speech.

The reciprocity that William McKinley endorsed was not the reciprocity of the so-called Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. It was true reciprocity for which I think you will find every Member on this side of the aisle standing today, just as the Republican Party has always stood for a reciprocity that allows imports from foreign nations to come into this country where they do not destroy jobs and where they consist of such materials or products as are not produced in America or are produced in insufficient quantities for our needs. That is the basis of true reciprocity.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult in 1 minute to discuss the views of President McKinley on reciprocal-trade relations. Certainly, President McKinley never said anything or never did anything in his whole life that would justify anyone now saying that he would support the reciprocal-trade treaties of this administration, based upon the unconditional, most-favored-nation clause that gives to all nations the same advantages and the same benefits that are given to one nation, so that American labor through our agreement to enter into a treaty with Great Britain comes into direct competition with the underpaid labor of Japan where they pay 20 cents a day to skilled labor. The reciprocal-trade agreements suggested by President McKinley were between two nations on a reciprocal basis so they would not bring free American labor into competition with the rest of the world. That is what is ruining the American market today and causing widespread unemployment in the United States. [Applause.]

CITIZENSHIP AND COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES IN PANAMA CANAL ZONE

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7941) relating to the citizenship and compensation of certain employees on military construction work in the Panama Canal Zone.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder whether the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] will explain just briefly the bill in question and then tell us whether the minority members of the committee have approved the bill.

Mr. MAY. I will be delighted to make this explanation of the bill. It is a bill which will provide that in the letting of contracts by the Chief of Ordnance in the Panama Canal Zone the employment of native labor, American citizens, shall be preferable, and that the Secretary of War may be permitted to require contractors who take contracts for construction work to write into their agreements the prevailing wage scale applicable to expert mechanics and others employed in like work.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every contract entered into by the Quartermaster Corps of the Army for construction and installation of buildings, flying fields, and appurtenances thereto in the Panama Canal Zone, pursuant to the provisions of the act of June 11, 1938 (Public, No. 590, 75th Cong.), the act of April 26, 1939 (Public, No. 44, 76th Cong.), the act of July 1, 1939 (Public, No. 164, 76th Cong.), and the act of August 9, 1939 (Public, No. 361, 76th Cong.), shall provide (a) that all personnel employed in such work and occupying skilled, technical, clerical, administrative, and supervisory positions shall be citizens of the United States; and (b) that the compensation of such persons shall not be lower than the compensation paid for the same or similar services to employees of the Panama Canal, as shall be predetermined by the Secretary of War.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN LAND IN STATE OF TEXAS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1820) to provide for the transfer of certain land owned by the United States to the State of Texas, and certain other land to the county of Galveston, Tex.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DITTER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to deal the same with this measure as he did the last one?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, the bill merely provides for the exchange of 2.1 acres of land with the War Department for a like area in another place near the end of the approaches to the Galveston causeway bridge. There is no money involved. The bill has been approved by the Secretary of War, by the Bureau of the Budget, and there was a unanimous report by the House Military Affairs Committee after consideration.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. Does the proposed transfer involve any contingent liability in the future? In other words, have there been improvements made on the land heretofore held by the Government that are not in existence on the land that it is contemplated to take over which will involve additional expense?

Mr. MAY. I understand there are no improvements involved on either tract of land, and that the War Department is merely conveying an easement on a vacant tract of land in lieu of another tract, and that the easement is subject to forfeiture and use by the War Department in case of a national emergency.

Mr. DITTER. Do I understand that the minority Members knew of the request that the gentleman has made and approve of his act?

Mr. MAY. It was brought up in the entire committee, and there is no objection, as far as I know.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to convey to the State of Texas, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all of that certain tract or parcel of land out of lot 525, section 1, Trimble and Lindsey Survey, Galveston Island, Tex., described as follows:

Beginning at the southwest corner of said lot 525 as established by United States Engineers for the southwest corner of a two and one-tenth acre tract owned by the United States of America and described in book 329, page 628, deed records, Galveston County, Tex.; thence north twenty-five degrees eleven minutes west along the westerly line of said two and one-tenth acre tract one hundred and sixty-five feet to the northwest corner of said two and one-tenth acre tract two hundred and forty-one and nine-tenths minutes east along the northerly line of said two and one-tenth acre tract two hundred and forty-one and nine-tenths feet to a point in a right angle jog in the northerly right-of-way line of the State highway leading to the new causeway across Galveston Bay, as said State highway is shown on plat of record in the office of the county clerk, Galveston County, Tex., to which plat reference is hereby made; thence south twenty-nine degrees two minutes west perpendicular to said center line of proposed State highway thirty-two and six-tenths feet to a point two hundred feet perpendicularly distant northerly from said center line of proposed State highway; thence south sixty degrees fifty-eight minutes east parallel to said center line one hundred and eighty feet to the southerly line of said two and one-tenth acre tract; thence south sixty-four degrees forty-nine minutes west along the southerly line of said two and one-tenth acre tract three hundred and twenty feet to the place of beginning, contains nine hundred and ninety-six one-thousandths acre.

It is the intention in the above description to include all of that portion of said two and one-tenth acre tract owned by the United States of America that is within the limits of the right-of-way of said State highway.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to convey to the county of Galveston, Tex., all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all of that certain tract or parcel of land out of lot 525, section 1, Trimble and Lindsey Survey, Galveston Island, Tex., described as follows:

Beginning at the intersection of the northerly right-of-way line of the State highway leading to the new causeway across Galveston Bay, as said State highway is shown on map of record in the office of the county clerk, Galveston County, Tex., with the southerly line of the United States of America two and one-tenth acre tract of land on Galveston Island, Tex., and described in book 329, pages 628 and 629, deed records, Galveston County, Tex.; thence from said beginning point north sixty degrees fifty-eight minutes west along said State highway northerly right-of-way line one hundred and eighty feet to a right angle jog to the right in said right-of-way line; thence north twenty-nine degrees two minutes east thirty-two and six-tenths feet to the northerly line of said United States of America two and one-tenth acre tract; thence north sixty-four degrees forty-nine minutes east two hundred and fifty-three and eight-tenths feet, more or less, to the southerly right-of-way line of the old State Highway No. 6, formerly a county road; thence south sixty degrees fifty-eight minutes east two hundred and three and four-tenths feet along said southerly right-of-way of the old State Highway No. 6 to the said southerly line of the United States of America two and one-tenth acre tract; and thence south sixty-four degrees forty-nine minutes west along said southerly line of two and one-tenth acre tract two hundred and eighty-two and two-tenths feet, more or less, to the place of beginning. Contains one and one hundred and four one-thousandths acres.

SEC. 3. The grantee in each case shall bear any expense (other than for the preparation of the deeds) necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, but shall not be required to pay any consideration for the right, title, and interest conveyed: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to make such deviations in the description of the lands above described as may be necessary to carry out the purpose and intent of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EQUALIZATION OF SALARIES OF LETTER CARRIERS

Mr. BURCH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 2001) for the equalization of letter carriers. The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2001) for the equalization of salaries of letter carriers, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sums proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$1,200 to $1,440"; and the Senate agree to the same.

T. G. BURCH,
ALBERT E. AUSTIN,
WM. W. BLACKNEY,
B. F. WHELCHER,
Managers on the part of the House.
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
CARL HAYDEN,
LYNN J. FRAZIER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2001) for the equalization of salaries of letter carriers submit the following statement in explanation of the effect on the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The bill H. R. 2001, as passed by the House, provided that the pay of carriers in the village-delivery service beginning the first day of the month following approval of the act would be from $1,300 to $1,500 per annum. The Senate amendment struck out the figures and inserted in lieu thereof the figures $1,200 to $1,400. The House conferees agree to recede from the House provision with an amendment which provides that in lieu of the sums proposed in the Senate amendment there be inserted the figures $1,200 to $1,440.

T. G. BURCH,
ALBERT E. AUSTIN,
WM. W. BLACKNEY,
B. F. WHELCHER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BURCH. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, February 7, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and the conclusion of the legislative program, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

OMNIBUS PRIVATE CLAIMS

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore made, the pending order of business is consideration of omnibus claims bills.

The Chair thinks it is proper to state that this bill was taken up in the regular session of the Congress and the bill had been read on May 25 down to title XIV. The Clerk will therefore report title XIV of the bill H. R. 6261.

J. D. WARLICK

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XIV—(H. R. 3784. For the relief of the estate of J. D. Warlick.)
By Mr. PATRICK

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to J. H. Warlick, of Birmingham, Ala., as administrator of the estate of J. D. Warlick, late of Ocala, Fla., the sum of $5,000 in full satisfaction of all claims of such estate against the United States for the death of said J. D. Warlick, who was struck and killed by a Civilian Conservation Corps ambulance about 6 miles from Ocala, Fla., on June 11, 1934: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 17, beginning in line 17, after the word "Treasury", strike the remainder of line 17, all of line 18, and the words "Conservation Corps" in line 19, and insert "not otherwise appropriated."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 17, line 14, at the beginning of the title, strike out all of title XIV.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in offering this amendment is to strike out all of title XIV which appears in this omnibus bill.

The facts that give rise to this claim are that in the State of Florida an accident occurred between an ambulance belonging to the Civilian Conservation Corps and a truck driven by the late J. H. Warlick. Mr. Warlick was killed in the accident, and as a result this bill provides for the payment of $5,000 to his estate.

It appears that just prior to the accident Mr. Warlick had his truck parked on the right-hand side of the highway. He proceeded down the highway a few feet and apparently backed into a driveway with the idea of making a turn onto the highway to proceed in the opposite direction. While he was backed into the driveway the C. C. C. ambulance appeared at the top of a grade, coming around a curve. Observing this truck parked to one side, with the front end jutting over the highway about 2 feet, the C. C. C. ambulance proceeded somewhat to the left in an effort to get around the truck.

At that time Mr. Warlick drove his truck further on to the highway. The driver of the C. C. C. ambulance sounded the horn and he proceeded further to the left. The statements of various witnesses are very much in conflict regarding the details and the facts concerning this particular case, but those appear to be the circumstances that led up to the accident. The ambulance apparently was going at a fairly fast rate of speed. The highway was otherwise clear, and in spite of the fact that the driver of the ambulance sounded the horn, Mr. Warlick, nevertheless, proceeded further into the highway. As a result of that the ambulance drove as far to the left as it was possible. The accident was unavoidable then. As a result of the injury sustained in the accident Mr. Warlick died.

It appears to me, in view of all the circumstances as they appear, that the driver of the ambulance was in no way at fault unless it be possibly the rate of speed at which he was traveling. Mr. Warlick had a clear view of the highway, and the driver of the ambulance having sounded his horn, Mr. Warlick should not have made an effort to enter into the highway, particularly to make a turn, unless he had a very clear, unobstructed view all the way along the highway and knew that he could do so with absolute safety. Apparently this was not the fact. Having entered the highway at a time when it was not safe to do so, it seems to me that the blame for causing this accident rests entirely upon his shoulders.

The War Department has submitted a very full report in opposition to the bill.

The statements of the various witnesses are quite in conflict. It is very difficult to ascertain the exact details regarding the accident, but in view of the fact that the C. C. C. driver was not held on any charge of manslaughter, it seems that the civil authorities in Florida felt that he was not responsible for the accident. I feel, therefore, the views of the War Department should be sustained and this title stricken from the bill.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to cover this case in 5 minutes. The gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] unfortunately has followed but one witness.

There were a number of witnesses, and only that one witness is in any degree seriously in conflict with the others.

This man Warlick was among strangers in Florida. Now I can briefly run over the measurements. He had turned his vehicle around and the truck was practically standing still. Some of the evidence is that at the time it was struck it was standing still. From the place where it was struck there was a clear view in front of this ambulance of 540 feet; in other words, the ambulance driver at the time he first ought to have seen the truck had a clear view straight down the highway of 540 feet, and the hard-surfaced road was 19 feet 1 inch wide. These are actual measurements than cannot be disputed. From shoulder to shoulder the road was 36 feet wide. The truck was hurled a distance of 70 feet by the impact, and after striking the truck the ambulance traveled 70 feet. The wheel of the truck struck the truck of deceased 6 inches from the right-hand side of the road, just 6 inches from the right-hand side of the road. There was no excuse in the world for his being over there. These measurements were made on the 14th of June, only a few days after the accident. The accident occurred on June 11. There is no dispute as to that.

There was nobody there to pursue the manslaughter charge. There was a relationship between those who saw it and the man to be prosecuted. The case was brought up in court but there was nobody to properly appear, no way in the world for Warlick's people to effectively prosecute the case. They perhaps had no intention of doing so, it may be they did not want to pursue a manslaughter charge, yet it was brought; but there was nobody there to adequately prosecute it, and the driver was acquitted.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Government ambulance was on the wrong side of the road when the accident occurred?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes; and not only that, but was 6 inches from the edge of the side of the road on which side he ought not to have been on at all.

Mr. EBERHARTER. How fast was the ambulance going?

Mr. PATRICK. There is a conflict of testimony as to the speed of the ambulance, but all agreed that it was going very fast. It was going at a tremendous rate of speed, such a great rate of speed that the impact knocked the truck 70 feet and the ambulance ran 70 feet after striking the truck. It seems, therefore, that there is nothing here showing any negligence on the part of the truck driver. I do not see a thing in the summing up of the entire testimony, a thing in the world, that does not justify the payment of this claim.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. The evidence also shows that the ambulance was not on any official business at the time of the accident.

Mr. PATRICK. That is right. I did not get to that. The ambulance had no business out, and the driver was not on any official business at the time of the accident at all.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. The point I wanted to bring to the gentleman's attention is that the ambulance was not on official emergency duty in its capacity as an ambulance and there was no necessity at all for the excessive speed at which it was traveling. If on official duty as an ambulance, there probably would have been an emergency existing, which might have justified the speed.

Mr. PATRICK. That is right.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield.

Mr. COSTELLO. And they state that the ambulance was not on official business. If that be the case, I believe that still further removes the Government from any liability in the accident. If there is liability, it rests only on the truck driver.

Mr. PATRICK. We cannot get off on that argument, the argument that because the ambulance was not going after a case therefore the Government was not responsible. Of course, it was being properly used at the time and place by the Government as a Government ambulance, but it was not at that moment going after anyone who had been hurt.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. In other words, there was no emergency existing?

Mr. PATRICK. There was no emergency existing there.

Mr. HANCOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK. Does not the evidence show that Mr. Warlick was endeavoring to turn around immediately in the path of the oncoming ambulance, and in an effort to avoid hitting Mr. Warlick the ambulance got over on the wrong side of the road?

Mr. PATRICK. No; there is no evidence of that, and that is the reason I mentioned it. The driver of the ambulance had all the room he needed.

Mr. COSTELLO. If the gentleman will look at the committee report on page 5, he will find the testimony of Mr. Ted Taylor, who stated that he had just left Mr. Warlick at Highway and had come back and sat on front porch:

Mr. Warlick's truck was parked on right side of road going east and upon starting drove down road to our driveway and turned across road to turn around. He backed out and had faced west and straightened out on the right-hand side of road when Civilian Conservation Corps ambulance came down road at high rate of speed and ran in front of Mr. Warlick's truck on left side of road to ambulance—right side to truck.

Mr. PATRICK. Yes.

Mr. COSTELLO. In other words, he was turning around at the time the accident took place and in doing so he pulled out into the highway, which caused the C. C. C. ambulance to go on the wrong side of the road. The accident was due to the fact that Mr. Warlick was making a turn and in doing so he turned in front of the C. C. C. ambulance.

Mr. PATRICK. The evidence shows he had already turned around and was on his side of the road, a road 36 feet wide. That is the reason I stated, Mr. Speaker, the ambulance driver had a clear view of 540 feet ahead of him, yet he drove right onto the old man and killed him.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COSTELLO) there were—yeas 22, nays 46.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seven Members are present; not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 208, not voting 121, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by Hon. MELVIN J. MAAS at a town hall meeting in New York City.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILLS

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XV—(H. R. 3887. For the relief of Capt. Walter L. Shearman.)
By Mr. GARTNER

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Capt. Walter L. Shearman, United States Army, retired, the sum of $890.49, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for a shortage in public funds due to irregularities in the accounts of a noncommissioned officer, now deceased, which officer was in charge of the commissary, Fort Schuyler, N. Y., February 1 to October 13, 1931, and for which shortage Captain Shearman has accounted to the United States Government: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 18, line 22, after "Provided", strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert the following: "That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: On page 18, beginning in line 10, strike out all of title XV.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced to reimburse Captain Shearman, retired Army officer, in the sum of $890.49, which was charged against him because of shortages in his accounts when he was in charge of the commissary at Fort Schuyler, N. Y., in 1931.

Careful investigation was made by a board of officers, and the shortages were found to be due to carelessness and neglect on the part of Captain Shearman. Apparently he was given his option of paying the shortages or submitting to court martial. He chose to pay the shortage, and so $25 a month was deducted from his salary until the full amount had been paid back to the Government.

I find in the report an official letter addressed to Captain Shearman by Major General Nolan, commanding the Second Corps Area, reading as follows:

Recent investigation has convinced the corps area commander that while commissary and accountable officer at Fort Schuyler, N. Y., you neglected to supervise carefully the administration of the commissary, and that you signed numerous certificates on the receiving reports without verifying the statements contained in such certificates.

It is proposed to impose punishment under the one hundred and fourth article of war unless trial by court martial is demanded.

Apparently trial by court martial was not demanded, and the officer chose to make good the default or the fraud, or whatever the cause of the loss was.

The facts, after a careful and thorough investigation by the inspector general's department, are summarized in the report by the Secretary of War in these few paragraphs, which I believe tell the whole story adequately. Secretary of War Dern reports as follows:

A thorough survey of this case reveals that repeatedly Captain Shearman was made aware that conditions in the commissary were not satisfactory. Errors were revealed to him, shortages were brought to light, and the question of the reliability of his chief assistant, Sergeant Graff, was officially brought to his attention. Improper, unbusinesslike, and unsafe methods and practices not in accord with the regulations, which should have been detected by proper supervision, were revealed by the investigation. When given timely warning of irregularities Captain Shearman did not take definite steps to determine their cause or to prevent recurrence. Finally, it was determined that relatively large losses to the Government occurred when the finance officer made payments for supplies presumably received by the commissary from local dealers, on approved receiving reports signed by Captain Shearman, which supplies have never been accounted for or located.

For your information a copy of the report of this case, prepared by the Inspector General of the Army, is enclosed herewith.

Prior to taking final action in this case the War Department gave careful consideration to all phases of it. As a result of this consideration the recommendation of the Inspector General, to assess the entire loss to Captain Shearman, was approved. Accordingly, up to June 1935, $525 of the total of $890.49 has been repaid to the United States by a stoppage of $25 per month against the pay of Captain Shearman.

In view of the final opinion arrived at in this case, that the unbusinesslike administration of the commissary by Captain Shearman contributed directly to the loss in question, the War Department does not recommend the enactment of the bill.

The defense of Captain Shearman is that he had too many duties to perform and that therefore he could not perform properly his duty as officer in charge of the commissary. I notice the favorable report of the committee is based pretty largely on the fact that Captain Shearman acted as post quartermaster, subsistence officer, police and prison officer, salvage officer, utilities officer, fire marshal, summary court officer, transportation officer, and agent finance officer.

This sounds like a very formidable list of duties, but we who have served in the Army know that actually, many of these duties do not involve much time. I, myself, have been a summary court officer, and I believe my duties did not consume an hour a month. The post of transportation officer when a military outfit is in camp involves no duties and takes no time. I should think the duty of fire marshal would involve practically no expenditure of time or effort after the officer once perfected his organization.

The only question is whether this Congress wishes to sustain the Army in its effort to safeguard the accounts of the United States. There is no attempt to punish this man. He has been found guilty of neglect of duty. He failed to correct defects after they were called to his attention, and he was rightfully assessed the amount of the shortage, $890.49.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, this matter came before the Committee on Claims and after careful consideration received its approval. I shall read from the report of the committee, which gives sufficient reasons, to my mind, why the position of the Committee on Claims should be sustained. The report states:

The War Department, having made Captain Shearman account for the shortage involved, is naturally against his being reimbursed. After careful consideration, however, your committee feels that the claimant has been held accountable for something beyond his control, and should be reimbursed.

The commissary was in charge of Technical Sgt. Harry W. Graff, and in view of the fact that Captain Shearman was assigned the following duties—post quartermaster, subsistence officer, police and prison officer, salvage officer, utilities officer, fire marshal, summary court officer, transportation officer (rail and motor), agent finance officer—it seems that there is no doubt that he was overtaxed and could not possibly personally check each man's activities.

The captain did not take any of this money. He was overseer of the whole operation. The sergeant who took the money or misappropriated the funds, had been a sergeant for a number of years and had held responsible positions under the Government and was working under the captain. If the Government's position is to be sustained, then it would have been necessary for Captain Shearman to be in the supply department every day checking every account and receipting for every account that came before that operation. He had a sergeant to do that, a man who had stood the test of time and of whom he had received excellent reports and who had had an excellent character record up until this time. Naturally, having a man of that type he relied upon him. After having relied upon him, he found out, after the sergeant died, that these discrepancies had taken place. In view of the fact that the Government was going to charge them to his account or cashier him, naturally, the man would pay up rather than be cashiered.

As I have stated, the Committee on Claims has given this matter careful consideration, and after hearing all the witnesses, believes that the captain should be reimbursed, and I submit that the Congress should sustain the committee in its findings.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I call attention to the fact that on page 117 of the report it is shown that in March 1931, recommendations were made that the captain be relieved of some of the various duties that he had to perform.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. That is correct.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. Is it not true that Captain Shearman had been warned of the irregularities of Sergeant Graff and that he failed to take any action toward removing him?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I do not think the evidence sustains that position at all.

Mr. HANCOCK. That is in the report of the inspector made to Captain Shearman along in February of the year that the defalcations took place, and Captain Shearman took no action.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Would the gentleman expect that the captain should stay there in the supply department every day and check over all the meat lists and other orders, and so forth, coming in?

Mr. HANCOCK. No; but when he was warned that he had an incompetent sergeant in charge, he should have done something about it.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. As a matter of fact, the report shows that the captain was advised of the excellent reputation of the technical sergeant in a report submitted to him. Is not that correct?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. That is correct, and that is why he kept him in that position.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

Title XVI—(H. R. 4031. To confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim or claims of the Recording and Computing Machines Co., of Dayton, Ohio.) By Mr. RUTZORN

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim or claims of the Recording and Computing Machines Co., of Dayton, Ohio, arising out of a series of transactions, contracts, and provisional adjustments between said Recording and Computing Machines Co., of Dayton, Ohio, and the War Department for the manufacture of ordnance materials, equipment, instruments, and so forth, between the years 1916 and 1920, inclusive.

Sec. 2. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the date of enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claim, and appeals from and payment of any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the case of claims over which said court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 20, line 6, after the word "inclusive", insert "and suit on such claims shall be instituted within 1 year from the date of approval of this act"; and strike out all of section 2 from lines 9 to 16, inclusive.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Beginning on page 19, line 18, strike out all of title XVI.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, this amendment would strike out this title, which provides that the Recording and Computing Machines Co., of Dayton, Ohio, may be entitled to go to the Court of Claims and press an action which they contend they have against the War Department.

During the World War the Army entered into approximately 20 contracts with claimant company for the manufacture of various munitions on a fixed-price basis. In August of 1918, due to lack of capital, it became apparent that the claimant company could not perform, and so because of the big need for munitions, the Government entered into new contracts with the claimant, which provided, among other things, that all then uncompleted articles were to be paid for on a cost-plus 10 percent basis, and that there would be no amortization or depreciation charged against the Government. Subsequent to November 11, 1918, the Government entered into a final settlement contract, whereby the claimant company was awarded $3,751,682.75 in full settlement of all contracts. This agreement was formally accepted by the claimant company. However, against this allowance the War Department deducted $3,747,203.12, which made the net payment to claimant $4,479.63, in full settlement of all claims between this company and the Government.

A reaudit by the War Department was made in 1923 and 1924, which disclosed that in the final settlement the depreciation provision of the original contract had been disregarded, and the claimant company had actually been overpaid approximately $300,000. However, the Attorney General did not press this claim, in view of the fact that the claimant company was in receivership and apparently had assets of only approximately $13. Altogether the War Department did business with this concern to the extent of $9,000,000 during the war. The Government, under the contract, was entitled to have supervision of the plant and its operations. Claimant is now contending that the Government took over the entire plant and that the claimant did not have any right to control the operations of the business. They also contend that since the audit of the Government it was finally developed that the Government owed to the claimant some $800,000.

I want to call the attention of the Members to some of the items that go to make up that claim of $800,000. One item is $500,000 for the goodwill of the business of the company. Another item of $67,500 is as a bonus to the manager of the works, and $20,000 is for attorneys' fees and various other items of a similar character.

I call attention to the fact that the claimant accepted final settlement without protest and in full satisfaction of the claims, and therefore constructively ratified the signing of the settlement contract by the secretary of the company. However, they are attempting to assert that the agreement was entered into without their knowledge or without their real consent. The secretary of this company, who was the direct agent of the claimant and not of the Government, did accept this final agreement.

As a result, I feel that claimant is estopped from going beyond that agreement in attempting to assert further rights. I call attention to the fact that the last order was completed in the factory on June 26, 1919, and that the Government removed its officers and other personnel who had been acting in a supervisory capacity from the factory in October 1919. So that subsequent to October 1919 up to 1924 this company had control of the factory, and at the time the Government made its audit of 1923-24 the books and affairs of the company were under the direct management of the claimant.

I do not believe the claimant is therefore entitled to go to the Court of Claims in order to press this action.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I notice on page 122 of the committee report that the Government had already made a settlement of $3,751,682.75. Now, what is the approximate amount of the claim which is embodied in this pending bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. I understand the amount of the claim is approximately $800,000.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This report seems to indicate that the company which has the claim has gone through bankruptcy proceedings, and if this claim is allowed, who is going to get the money?

Mr. COSTELLO. I presume that any benefit that might come out of this action that would be pursued in the Court of Claims would redound to the benefit of the old recording and computing machines company. I believe Mr. Ohmer, who was the owner at the time, is the sole owner of the concern, and any benefit out of this bill would go directly to him.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I notice in large claims the committee has not carried the limitation insofar as attorneys' fees is concerned.

Mr. COSTELLO. Apparently that has not been inserted in this bill.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. If this claim is successfully prosecuted, will not the beneficiaries be the creditors on this claimant?

Mr. COSTELLO. I do not know whether the creditors would be able to come in or not.

Mr. HANCOCK. The award, if any, will have to go to the receiver and trustee of this bankrupt company; is that not true?

Mr. COSTELLO. I do not know what the actual legal situation is with regard to this particular company. The assets of the company were sold and the company which purchased them finally went into bankruptcy likewise. So who the legal beneficiaries actually would be in this particular instance I am not in a position to say.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. For how much was this settlement made?

Mr. COSTELLO. The original agreement was that the Government owed to the company over three and three-quarter million dollars, but had offsets of approximately the same amount, so that the final settlement in actual cash was $4,479.63. Altogether, during the World War, over $9,000,000 was paid to this company for business that was done with the company.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. And this amount was accepted and paid?

Mr. COSTELLO. This amount was accepted and paid.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this amendment to strike out title 16 for the reason that I was a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Claims which considered this bill, and upon the basis of the subcommittee's recommendation, the favorable report of the committee was made.

The bill simply confers upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to hear, determine, and render judgment upon this claim. I call particular attention to the fact that there is no waiver in the bill of any defense that may be available to the Government. The facts that have led up to this claim, as I understand them, and as they were adduced at the committee hearing, are these:

The claimant was a large manufacturer of precision instruments, holding contracts for the Allied forces during the World War in excess of $20,000,000. Upon the date of the entrance of this country into that war, by virtue of the emergency powers granted to the War Department, the War Department entered into various contracts with the claimant, all of which were consolidated into one contract under date of September 1, 1918. Under the terms of the consolidated contract the War Department reserved absolute supervision and control over the internal affairs of the company. The War Department placed its own general manager in the plant, and on the cessation of hostilities the War Department sought to exercise its right, under the consolidated contract, to cancel the then existing orders. They did so, and the question of any right or claim on the part of the company arose. The then general manager, who was the employee of the Ordnance Division of the War Department, selected an accountant who, some time in 1919, prepared what purported to be a settlement of the rights of the respective parties. He allowed certain amounts to the company and certain amounts to the Government. The net difference was somewhere in the neighborhood of $4,000, notwithstanding the fact that during the period of that audit an interim payment of $500,000 was made by the War Department to the company.

I mention these figures not to becloud your mind at the moment, because in this bill there is no question of amount. All that is sought by the terms of the bill is to give to the owners of the equity in that company a day in court. They have been denied that, notwithstanding the fact that the War Department 6 years after it made its alleged settlement, of its own volition, made a readjust. They have been denied their day in court further by the fact that under the terms of that consolidated agreement they had no recourse to a court of law unless and until the Secretary of War made a final determination. The Secretary of War made no such final determination.

We have the War Department acting in the capacity of trial judge, jury, and prosecutor. In this case the stockholders of the company have never had an opportunity to gain access to their own records to make an independent audit.

All this bill seeks to do is to refer this claim to an independent, impartial, duly constituted tribunal of this Government to the end that both parties may establish such claims, if any they have, and that justice be done.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEOGH. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that the Court of Claims is simply an agency established by the Congress for the purpose of passing upon the legality of just such matters as these?

Mr. KEOGH. Exactly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And is it not further a fact that the percentage of recoveries before the Court of Claims is very, very low? As a matter of fact, I think it is 2 or 3 percent of the amount of the claims that have been submitted to this agency created by Congress for this very purpose.

Mr. KEOGH. I have no knowledge of that, but I may say to the gentleman that I am confident this matter will receive the careful, impartial, fair deliberation of the Court of Claims, and I am certain that right will prevail. Up to this moment this claimant has never had the opportunity of presenting its case in such a forum.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER in the chair). The Chair regrets that the Chair cannot under the rules recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 23, noes 28.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-three Members are present, not a quorum. The call is automatic. The Doorkeeper will close the door, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 48, nays 254, not voting 121, as follows:

Title XVII—(H. R. 4256. For the relief of the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased.) By Mr. Eaton of New Jersey

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased, the sum of $5,616.29, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said sum to be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for all loss sustained by said Spearin by reason of failure, until April 11, 1917, of his attorney to file with the Treasury Department, in compliance with the provisions of the act of September 30, 1890 (26 Stat. L. 537), transcript of judgment of the Court of Claims in the case of Spearin against the United States: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out, beginning after the word "Provided," in line 5, down to and including line 17, and insert: "That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Beginning on page 20, line 17, strike out all of title XVII.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the present bill provides for payment of $5,616.29 to the estate of George B. Spearin. The purpose of this bill is to pay an amount which he would otherwise have received had his attorney been a little more diligent in looking after his interests in an action against the United States Government.

It appears that in the case of George B. Spearin against the United States, the Court of Claims awarded judgment in favor of said Spearin the sum of $141,180.86 on April 13, 1916. The United States Government filed application for appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States of June 10, 1916. The appeal was allowed on September 12, 1916. A transcript of judgment of the Court of Claims was not filed with the Treasury Department until April 11, 1917, practically 1 year after the date on which it might have been filed; hence when the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the judgment of the Court of Claims on December 9, 1918, the mandate of affirmance issuing January 4, 1919, the amount of interest allowed on the judgment was $9,948.42, which was 4 percent upon the award from April 11, 1917, until June 14, 1919.

Had the transcript of judgment of the Court of Claims been filed in the Treasury Department 1 year earlier, namely, on April 13, 1916, the interest would have been included in the judgment, and as a result the claimant would have received an additional $5,616.29.

This particular claim has been before Congress for a long time. The only reason the claimant was not given additional interest was because of a failure on the part of his own attorney. It appears to me that the Government should not be liable for the payment of this additional interest in view of the fact that the failure to receive it was due entirely to the attorney for the claimant. I do not think the Federal Government can be held responsible for the failure on the part of attorneys to perform their duty. We have had any number of similar cases where an attorney may have fallen down on some particular item and as a result the claimant has been unsuccessful in obtaining either the full amount of the judgment or any judgment at all. If we are going to assume the attitude that the Federal Government is responsible where an attorney is at fault and as a result the claimant suffers some loss, then we are going to put the Federal Government in a position where it will be responsible for any number of claims of this character. It is very hard to attempt to forecast what the final cost to the Government will be in these cases.

In view of this fact and since it was purely the attorney's fault, I do not believe this claim has merit and the House should strike it from the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has been passed by the Senate six times and it has been favorably reported an equal number of times by able committees of this House, including the present committee.

The gentleman who has just spoken has stated the external facts of the case practically as they are, except with reference to the attorney. The whole trouble arises from the fact that we are confronted by a most unusual phenomenon—the unfortunate and unexpected intellectual incapacity of a lawyer.

This case was decided in favor of Mr. Spearin by the Court of Claims in 1916 and was then appealed by the United States Government to the Supreme Court of the United States. Two years and nine months later the Supreme Court sustained the judgment of the Court of Claims. Under the law it was necessary for the lawyer in the case to deposit with the Treasury Department a transcript of the judgment of the Court of Claims immediately if he was to draw interest on the sum during the period between the judgment of the lower court and the decision of the Supreme Court. This was not done for 1 year. It was then done and the plaintiff drew interest at the rate of 4 percent.

The reason this transcript was not deposited was because a very distinguished attorney who had this case in charge became afflicted with senile decay. I have here an affidavit by Dr. Sterling Ruffin, one of the leading surgeons of this city, in which he states:

In the spring of 1921 I examined Mr. Frank W. Hackett and found that he was in a condition of senile dementia which profoundly affected his memory and his faculties in regard to all current and recent events. Mr. Hackett is said to be and appears to be 80 years old. In the year 1916 I attended Mr. Hackett on several occasions, and to the best of my knowledge and belief, based upon medical examination of Mr. Hackett and the history of his case, Mr. Frank W. Hackett's mental failure had begun several years prior to the year 1916, and had slowly but surely progressed up to the time of my examination in the spring of 1921.

Mr. Speaker, the claimant in this case did not live here. He trusted his attorney, as litigants have to do, and he did not know that this distinguished lawyer was afflicted with the infirmities of age. When he found this out he immediately secured competent legal advice, carried his case to the Supreme Court, and won it. The heirs of Mr. Spearin are asking for this relief, and I feel, under the circumstances, they are entitled to it. My opinion is supported by the wisdom of the Senate and by the wisdom of our committee.

I sincerely hope the Members of this House will defeat the pending amendment and grant this relief to these people.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

LXXXVI—48

Title XVIII—(H. R. 4456. For the relief of William O'Connell.)
By Mr. HEALEY

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William O'Connell, Somerville, Mass., the sum of $750, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by him as a result of being struck and injured by a United States mail truck in Somerville, Mass., on January 13, 1934: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HALLECK: On page 22, strike out all of title XVIII.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to provide for the payment of $750 to a Mr. William O'Connell, 55 years of age, of Somerville, Mass. It is contended that the claimant was injured by being struck by a mail truck of the Post Office Department on Somerville Avenue in Somerville, Mass., on January 13, 1934. The time of the accident was something after 6 o'clock in the evening. The evidence is that it was a dark and stormy night and the visibility was very poor. There were no witnesses to the accident other than the driver of the mail truck and the claimant himself.

According to what seems to me to be the preponderance of the evidence, the claimant started across Somerville Avenue in the middle of the block—that is, he started across the street at a point some 100 feet from the crosswalk. The driver of the mail truck was proceeding in a careful manner and at a slow rate of speed in keeping with the poor visibility and the condition of the traffic at the time. The driver of the mail truck states that he noticed three vehicles approaching him, the first one driving at a rather fast rate of speed. He slowed his truck to give that vehicle a chance to turn in front of him, and then, as he started to pick up speed again, he noticed a man, who later turned out to be the claimant, on the right front fender of his truck. He immediately put on his brakes and stopped within about the length of the truck, got out of the truck, walked around, and discovered the claimant lying on the ground beside the rear wheel of the truck. He quoted the claimant as saying, "I had just dodged the other fellow." The driver of the truck states that he did not see the man crossing in the middle of the street.

The claimant says that he noticed some other vehicles coming at a distance of 300 feet, and he moved into the center of the street, then noticed that a vehicle was coming at a distance of about 100 feet, and then started across and was struck by the truck. That is the story, as far as I can get it, as to what happened. The claimant was crossing in the middle of the street, not at a crosswalk. As far as I can discover, the driver of the truck was operating the truck in a very careful manner.

I believe the best deduction from the evidence is that the claimant carelessly and negligently walked into the side of the truck and thereby either caused the injury which he sustained or at least was guilty of contributory negligence in causing that injury.

There is another point or two to which I wish to call your attention. I have discovered in the papers on this case a letter addressed to the Attorney General asking whether or not a civil action for damages filed by the claimant against the driver of the truck had ever been disposed of. The Attorney General recites in his letter of March 3, 1937, that such an action was filed in 1934, but that nothing had been done with it. Can the chairman of the committee tell me whether or not anything further has been done with that case?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. No; I do not believe any disposition has been made of that matter at all.

Mr. HALLECK. I think that point is worthy of consideration. I do not know whether or not the driver of the truck is financially responsible, but, certainly, at some time the claimant thought he had some collectible claim against the driver of the truck. That he has not pursued that claim may indicate a lack of confidence in the proof of negligence.

It also appears from the records in this case that the claimant was employed by the Civil Works Administration at the time of the injury. He filed a claim with the United States Employees' Compensation Commission. It was found that he was acting in line of duty at the time of the accident and his claim was allowed. I read from the report of Mr. C. M. Nelson, inspector, with regard to the amount of money that was allowed by the Employees' Compensation Commission, in these words:

As a result of the accident, Mr. O'Connell actually lost wages amounting to a total of $135 for the period from January 15 to March 31, 1934. If he receives compensation in the amount of $46, in addition to the compensation of $20.70 already paid to him, the net loss of wages would amount to $68.30.

The Commission also paid the doctor bill.

The evidence shows that Mr. O'Connell was found able to go back to work as a watchman, which had been his job previously, on April 2, but there was no work for him until May 2, when he did go back to work with the Civil Works Administration. He pursued that line of recovery against the Government. Should he also be permitted to pursue this one?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the argument made by the gentleman who just preceded me centers on the proposition that this man should not be allowed to recover in this case, because he failed to exercise due care in not using a cross walk to cross the street on which this accident occurred.

In answer to this proposition, let me say that if this case ever came to trial before a tribunal in the jurisdiction where the accident took place, no such rigid degree of care would be required of the plaintiff in order for him to make out a case. The law of Massachusetts regarding the use of the highways prescribes that a pedestrian and a person traveling by vehicle have an equal right to the use of the portion of the highway concerned, the degree of care required being that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would exercise for the rights of the other.

The evidence in this case, which is undisputed, is that the claimant attempted to cross the highway 100 feet away from a cross walk. I certainly do not believe this body any more than a court would require that man in order to cross the street go a hundred feet along on the sidewalk and there cross on the cross walk. The fact that he did not use a cross walk would not bar his recovery in a court of law, and in the exercise of due care he was not necessarily required by the laws of the State of Massachusetts to use the cross walk.

Let us see from this man's statement—and his statement is undisputed; there being no other witnesses to the accident—what degree of care he exercised that night:

The claimant contends that on January 13, 1934, he was attempting to cross Somerville Avenue, at Union Square, Somerville, Mass., at about 6:35 p. m., there being no cross walk, and he apparently being about 100 feet west of the intersection.

And there is no evidence in the case that there was a cross walk at the intersection.

He states that there was traffic going both east and west on Somerville Avenue, with no officer or traffic light to regulate same. He waited until there was a lull in the traffic and looked both ways, the nearest automobile being approximately 300 feet away.

Now, at that juncture I submit to you, as reasonable men, would you expect this man to wait for a vehicle that was 300 feet away?

Upon starting across the street he again looked to his right and left, and states that he saw an automobile 100 to 150 feet away. Judging that he could then cross in safety he proceeded across the street, and when about halfway across he was struck by a United States mail truck approaching from his left.

Now, I ask you, on all the facts, whether that is not pretty potent evidence that this man did exercise a high degree of care for himself in looking up and down the street and taking another look to make sure when he was out on the street, and then walking halfway across the street before he was struck?

Now, as to the defendant's care on this particular night, let me just read this language to you. The driver of the automobile said that he was proceeding along Somerville Avenue, in the city of Boston—

That he was traveling to the right of the streetcar rails; that when adjacent to a parking area located between Washington Street and Somerville Avenue, he saw three automobiles approaching the intersection in a westerly direction, and reduced the speed of the truck to allow one of these vehicles to pass in front of the truck, the other two having turned into an intersecting street; that as soon as the automobile had passed in front of the truck, he placed his foot on the accelerator to increase his speed, when he suddenly saw the claimant lying on the right front fender of the truck.

There is evidence there that at some time after this claimant looked to assure his safety and, relying on that look, started across the street, the speed of the mail truck was increased, and I say to you that a jury would be justified in inferring that this accident was caused by the increase in the speed of the truck after the claimant had started to cross the street in a reliance on a reasonable judgment that he could do so safely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Brown of Georgia). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I challenge the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 86, nays 197, not voting 140, as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XIX—(H. R. 4843. To confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of John L. Alcock.) By Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland

That (1) jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim of John L. Alcock, of Baltimore, Md., for loss and/or damage, if any, sustained by him by reason of the action of officers of the Signal Corps and/or the Spruce Production Division of the War Department in promulgating the order refusing to permit further shipments under his contract and foreign orders for the shipment and delivery from February to December 1918 of 6,000,000 feet of spruce and fir lumber for the use of the British Army in the prosecution of the World War, and by reason of their action in directing the canceling of his contracts with the American mills for the production and shipment of said 6,000,000 feet of lumber. The Court of Claims shall hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim notwithstanding the executory character of such contracts and that there had been no delivery of title to claimant under his contracts with the American mills, and shall measure the losses and/or damages, if any, by the difference between what claimant would have received from the foreign purchasers on delivery of the lumber, free on board cars at the mills, and the amount he had agreed to pay the American mills free on board cars at mills.

(2) The Court of Claims in the adjudication of the said claim is authorized in its discretion to use, in addition to any evidence that may be offered in any suit which may be brought under this act, the pleadings and evidence in the case of John L. Alcock & Co. v. The United States (61 Ct. Cls. 312), and in the case of John L. Alcock & Co. v. The United States (No. J-567), decided April 4, 1932.

(3) Suit hereunder may be instituted at any time within 4 months after the approval of this act, notwithstanding lapse of time or any statute of limitations, and proceedings therein shall be had as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Beginning on page 22, line 19, strike out all of title XIX.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have followed this claim for a number of years and I know something about it. During the World War the Government was required, in order to protect itself and to protect its Allies, to take over the production of certain kinds of lumber in the Northwest. The claimant, Mr. Alcock, was a lumber broker in Baltimore. Time will not permit me to go into the case in detail which I would like to do. Suit was filed in the Court of Claims in 1923 and judgment was rendered in favor of the Government. Then the Congress, May 28, 1928, passed a resolution certifying the case to the Court of Claims. In the second case the plaintiff also made claim for $195,230.62, based on anticipated profits, in addition to his original claim which was $163,247.17. The Court of Claims rendered a decision in favor of the plaintiff for the $163,247.17 claim with interest from 1918 to 1932, and Mr. Alcock collected that money. On the $195,230.62 claim, which is involved in this resolution, the Court of Claims denied his right to that amount. Mr. Alcock won one claim and lost the other.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. In just a minute if I have time.

Now, mind you, this claim is based on anticipated profits; what he might have made had the Government not taken over the control of lumber which was absolutely necessary for the construction of airplanes. Without this lumber we could not have manufactured airplanes, nor could Great Britain and France.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I regret I cannot. I only have 5 minutes and I have something more to say.

The War Department has gone into this matter very, very fully. Let me read what the War Department says would happen if this resolution passed and judgment were given against the Government:

If the relief proposed in H. R. 7568 be granted, it is believed such action would constitute a precedent too dangerous to even contemplate, as it would open up untold tens of thousands of claims of a like nature, for the reason that during the war the Government not only requisitioned ships which were under contract and charter at the time of their requisition but undertook the control of wheat, sugar, coal, and other commodities of almost every nature, thereby rendering impossible the execution of previous contracts respecting these commodities, and took over steel mills, railroads, shipyards, telephone and telegraph lines, the capacity output of factories and other producing activities. If this bill should be enacted into law it is the opinion of this Department that it will inevitably result in a stampede and gold rush in the nature of claims upon the Government in comparison with which the Klondike gold rush would appear as a solo affair. If this bill should be passed it is difficult to understand why, in principle, every soldier who was drafted into the military service would not have an equally meritorious claim against the Government for a special act of Congress for relief to compensate him for the difference between his meager Army pay and the pay, salary, or earnings he was receiving in civil life. The consequences of such claims as that embodied in H. R. 7568 were stressed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Omnia Commercial Co., Inc., v. United States, supra. On page 513 of the opinion the language is as follows:

"The Government took over during the war, railroads, steel mills, shipyards, telephone and telegraph lines, the capacity output of factories and other producing activities. If appellant's contention is sound the Government thereby took and became liable to pay for an appalling number of existing contracts for future service or delivery, the performance of which its action made impossible. This is inadmissible. Frustration and appropriation are essentially different things."

The War Department does not believe that Congress intends such legislation and therefore because of its unusual character, far-reaching effect, and inevitable consequences, it is recommended that the bill be not reported favorably.

Anticipated profits. Think of it. How about the enlisted man who had a good going business and was forced to go to France and while he was in France his business did not function because there was no one to operate it? How about his right to go before the Court of Claims on anticipated profits for what he might have made if he had not been required to go to France? In my opinion the soldier should have the prior right.

I say that this is a claim that does not deserve the consideration of this body because the court has already passed on it. The claimant has received over $163,000 with interest on that amount from 1918 to 1932.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. This is the gentleman's bill. He will get 5 minutes and he can answer my argument then. I need what little time I have remaining. If you will look at the report from the War Department you will see this resolution is so worded the Government will practically be divested of the right to properly present its case. Why should you tie the Government's hands as this resolution provides?

I appeal to this House to vote "aye" on my amendment. I know there are a number of Members in this House who think they have been supporting amendments by voting "nay," when the vote should have been "aye." If you want to defeat this claim, the vote is "aye." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Of course, if the facts were as stated by my friend from Missouri, I would not have been the author of this bill, but the true facts are that while Alcock went into court, he went in for the sum of $358,477.79. The court awarded him the sum of $163,247.17. However, the court did not deny him the sum of $195,230.62 on the basis of any facts or evidence produced in court. It was simply the ruling of the court that the court had no jurisdiction over that part of the claim which the $195,230.62 represented, and for that reason they ruled that he was not entitled to relief under that bill. It is an entirely different case than stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. It is not "anticipated profits" as such, notwithstanding the fact that the language in the court's findings says "anticipated profits." This man was engaged in the sale and exporting of spruce, fir, and other hardwoods from the United States to the United Kingdom and continental Europe. He secured a permit from the proper Government officials to enter into contracts and he did execute part of them. Before he could finish, however, the Government stepped in and commandeered this lumber that he had contracted sales for; so, instead of their being anticipated profits, they are actual profits, on contracts entered into with these people with whom he had dealt for many years in London and Europe, although he has never realized same. I contend, therefore, that this is purely a jurisdictional bill, only authorizing this plaintiff to go into court and establish his claim, if any, by evidence produced before the court.

Reference to war profits, or to our boys' being sacrificed overseas, or being denied their rights to earn, has no bearing whatever in this case. In my judgment, we should permit this man to go into court and there present the evidence he has to establish his case. It may be that he does not have a case; I am not prepared to say, I am not in position to render judgment, nor do I believe any other Member in this House is.

The decision of the Supreme Court cited by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is one that would appear to work against this claim, but the existing law as established by the Supreme Court in the case of the International Paper Co., Inc., is just as strongly in favor of this claimant. I say, therefore, that it is unfair to permit someone in the War Department to write an opinion and to render a decision that the courts of the land should render. This is a matter that ought to be brought before the court and there thrashed out on its merits. We have sufficient confidence in the court to believe that if there is no merit in the case, no judgment will be awarded.

All that is being asked in this bill is to give this claimant his day in court. It is on all fours with a bill passed a short while ago this very day, to permit a claimant to go into court and have his case there heard on its merits in a fair and just manner.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is a very great difference, a distinct difference, between this jurisdictional bill and the one just passed. In the former case the court was directed to hear and determine the issues. In this bill the Government is stripped of every possible defense. In this case the Court of Claims, in effect, is directed to bring in a judgment against the United States for $163,247 with interest for 22 years on a contract which the Court of Claims has found to be entirely invalid and nonexistent.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. May I interrupt the gentleman to ask him to point out to me where the bill strips the Government of all defense?

Mr. HANCOCK. Page 23, line 11:

The Court of Claims shall hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim notwithstanding the executory character of such contracts and that there had been no delivery of title to claimant under his contracts with the American Mills, and shall measure the losses and/or damages, if any, by the difference between what claimant would have received from the foreign purchasers on delivery of the lumber.

The foreign purchasers had paid him nothing; he had paid the American Mills nothing. The lumber had not been cut; it was not in being. This amount is not an out-of-pocket amount. We are being asked now to direct the Court of Claims to pay an amount that he possibly could have made had everything gone well.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I disagree with the gentleman, of course, and I say that the language of the bill reads: "Loss, if any." From this we must infer that he would have to prove his loss first, if he had any loss at all. I may say to the gentleman that the evidence shows conclusively that the lumber was in being and would have been sawed and delivered to claimant except for the cancellation of his contracts by the War Department and the appropriation of such lumber to use of the Government. This merely goes to prove that we cannot here in 5 minutes determine these questions; that they ought to be sent to a court for consideration and examination.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were—ayes 70, noes 45.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 184, nays 87, not voting 152, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XX—(H. R. 5089. Conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment on the claim of the legal representative of the estate of Rexford M. Smith.) By Mr. SASSCER

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the statute of limitations, to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment under the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., ch. 423, p. 851), as amended July 1, 1918, or any other enabling statute of the United States, on the claim of Charles A. M. Wells, as executor cum testamento annexo, under the last will and testament of Rexford M. Smith, deceased, or his successor, as the legal representative of the estate of said decedent, for the use of or the manufacture by or for the United States within the period of 6 years immediately preceding January 4, 1933, without license of the owner thereof or the lawful right to use or manufacture the same, of a certain invention of said Rexford M. Smith, deceased, described in or covered by Letters Patent No. 1,166,488, for aeroplane, issued by the Patent Office of the United States on January 4, 1916.

SEC. 2. That from any decision in any suit prosecuted under the authority of this act an appeal may be taken by either party as is provided for by law in other cases.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Beginning on page 24, line 10, strike out all of title XX.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the present bill is based upon the question of a patent right. The inventor of this patent has died and whatever benefit might accrue goes to his estate. The purpose of the section is to waive the statute of limitations for the benefit of this claimant. Under the law a person is entitled to recover under a patent for a period of 6 years prior to the date of filing suit. The action on this particular patent was filed on July 27, 1937; however, the patent expired on January 4, 1933, and under existing law the claimant would be entitled to recover on his patent for infringement during a period of 18 months from July 27, 1931, 6 years before the filing of the suit, up to January 4, 1933. The purpose of this bill is to waive the statute of limitations for the benefit of this one claimant and to allow the claimant to recover for a period of 6 years prior to the expiration of the patent.

No particular reason is offered to explain why this one claimant should be singled out and given preferential treatment. If the law is at fault, then the bill ought to provide for a change in the patent law, but as long as the patent laws provide for the period during which one can recover in connection with an infringement, then this claimant, like all others, should be treated in the same manner and we should not be called upon to change existing law.

The claimant alleges that she did not know of the infringement of the patent until this late date, but her failure to know about it is not the fault of the Government. If the Government was infringing on the patent it was the duty of the owner of that patent to be watchful and see whether the patent was being infringed, which the Navy Department disputes. We should not effect a waiver of the existing statute of limitations dealing with patent law unless there is some real justification. By so doing we will break down the laws that the Congress has established and for this reason I believe the title should be stricken from the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, the undisputed facts in reference to this claim are as follows: Mr. Rexford Smith, who formerly lived at College Park, in Prince Georges County, Md., was a pioneer in the aviation field and invented what is known as an invisible chassis or undercarriage, the purpose of which is to draw up the wheels during the flight of an airplane, thereby making for greater speed and less air resistance.

He patented this device, and shortly after it was patented he entered into negotiations with the Government of the United States for the purchase of his patent rights. These negotiations went on for several years. Mr. Smith died and his wife, the claimant here, after taking out letters of administration, again started negotiations with the Government. All of this is uncontroverted. The Government advised her that the matter had been referred to some appropriate commission, the name of which I do not now recall, for further investigation. While these negotiations were going on and while she was of the opinion that an instrumentality of the Government was investigating these patent rights for the purpose of determining whether or not the Government would purchase them, some years went on. While this was pending, the Government did use the patent rights, which is borne out by the report filed by the Senate committee which investigated this matter some years ago. I think the exact words used by that committee were that "This patent was of great value and importance to the Government," both in connection with its armed forces and also in connection with its postal service.

Mrs. Smith more or less dispelled the matter from her mind while the Government was keeping her patent in a suspended state of animation and time went on. The next thing she knew the patent had been infringed upon. A suit was filed and under her claim the Court of Claims, if it finds the facts justify it, can adjudicate the claim for a period of 18 months, as stated by the gentleman from California. The usual period is 6 years. This section, without in any way directing the Court of Claims in the matter, without in any way tying its hands, merely permits that court, if it finds that Mrs. Smith is entitled to relief, to adjudicate the matter for 6 years, as permitted by the statute, rather than for 18 months as permitted under the present circumstances.

The gentleman from California said that there is no particular reason for the passage of this legislation, and that seems to be the only objection made in all of the reports, in which it is stated there is no reason to make an exception. The justification is that Mrs. Smith, a widow, did not sleep on her rights but was unintentionally misled by the Government telling her that the use of the patent would be investigated and that she would be advised later. While she was waiting, the Government started using the patent, and I respectfully urge under this state of facts the bill should be passed.

Mr. COSTELLO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SASSCER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COSTELLO. Is it not a fact that the Navy Department denies it ever infringed on the patent and that actually there will have to be proof offered that there was infringement? The Navy Department states that it did not infringe on the patent and that in itself would be one of the questions to be determined by the Court of Claims.

Mr. SASSCER. I think that is correct to a certain degree. The Navy, as I recall the report, admits that it was using a device somewhat similar to this, but does not admit it infringed this particular patent. The Court of Claims would be called upon to determine whether or not it did infringe.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XXI—(S. 323. For the relief of E. C. Beaver, who suffered loss on account of the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,502 to E. C. Beaver, as compensation in full for loss of property destroyed by the fire on September 24, 1917, in the city of Lawton, Okla., such loss having been the result of the inability of the fire department of the city of Lawton to control said fire because of lack of water, all available water for fire-fighting purposes having been appropriated and being used by the War Department in connection with the training of soldiers at Fort Sill and Camp Doniphan: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 25, line 16, after "C.", strike out "Beaver, as compensation in full" and insert "Beaver, of Tulsa, Okla., in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States."

Amend the title.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: On page 25, beginning in line 10, strike out all of title XXI.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the claimant under this title, E. C. Beaver, of Lawton, Okla., was the owner of a meat market or a grocery store in that city in 1918 that was destroyed by fire. He now asks the Congress to reimburse him for his loss.

His claim is that the city of Lawton was unable to obtain enough water to fight the fire when it broke out because of the fact that a large part of the water supply of that city had been diverted to Camp Doniphan, which was located a few miles outside the city. The claimant contends that the Government was guilty of negligence in not having a water guard at that point to turn back promptly the camp supply into the city mains when fire broke out in the city of Lawton.

I have read this report very carefully, and the only evidence I can find as to the agreement between the city and the War Department is in the report of the Judge Advocate General, and in a letter from General Wright, in command of Camp Doniphan, to the City Council of the City of Lawton. The agreement under which they were working is summarized in the letter of General Wright. It is very brief, and I wish you would pay attention to it, because this is the heart of the whole controversy:

CITY COUNCIL,
City of Lawton, Okla.

GENTLEMEN: The following arrangements with respect to the water supply at Camp Doniphan and the city of Lawton has this day been agreed upon by the committee of the city council and the commanding general, Camp Doniphan:

The entire water supply of the present 16-inch pipe line is to be used for Camp Doniphan supply between the hours of 4 a. m. and 11 p. m.

The 16-inch pipe line is to be used by the city of Lawton between the hours of 11 p. m. and 4 a. m.

This arrangement is temporary and contingent upon the above water supply for Camp Doniphan being sufficient. Otherwise the entire capacity of the pipe line is to be at the service of Camp Doniphan exclusively.

This is the point I wish to emphasize:

In case of a fire in the city of Lawton the city water guard is to have authority to divert the entire capacity to the city during the emergency. In case of a fire in Camp Doniphan the water guard of the camp will have authority to divert the entire supply to the camp. This without reference to the hours at which the fire occurs.

W. M. WRIGHT,
Major General Commanding.

The letter states the understanding under which the people of the city of Lawton and the War Department were working. The original contract made no reference to the possibility of a fire or the establishment of water guards or anything of the sort. It merely provided that the city of Lawton should supply water to Camp Doniphan in adequate quantities, for certain compensation. General Wright's letter supplements and clarifies the original agreement.

I cannot see that the Federal Government is guilty of any misconduct or any neglect of duty whatever. The city of Lawton, under the agreement, had the authority to establish a water guard at the point where the city main and the main to Camp Doniphan came together, and to divert that entire supply to the city of Lawton in case of an emergency. The responsibility rested with the city and not with the Army.

It is claimed that three-quarters of an hour elapsed from the time the fire broke out until the fire chief of the city of Lawton could make contact with an officer at Camp Doniphan with authority to order the camp supply of water diverted to the city mains, but my contention is that the city was at fault, in the first place, for not having a water guard at that junction point, and, in the second place, in not sending the guard there immediately to turn that water back to the city when the fire broke out.

The Government did nothing whatever that was in the least bit lacking in its full duty toward the city of Lawton. The entire responsibility for the lack of water seems to me to be on the officials of the city of Lawton.

There is not very much involved in this case. I believe $1,500. The man had a $1,000 fire-insurance policy, on which he has recovered, and the balance of his loss he claims is $1,500.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I notice on page 161 of the report that the bill was originally introduced in the amount of $75,000 and many beneficiaries other than Mr. Beaver were involved.

Mr. HANCOCK. I ought to add that Congress a number of years ago passed a bill awarding similar claims to other claimants. This man was not included among the beneficiaries of that bill. I believe it was a mistake to pass that bill originally, and I would have opposed it had I been here performing this very unpleasant duty at that time. However, I do not believe that because we made a mistake at one time we have to repeat it, and I think Congress made a mistake when that bill was passed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

As the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] said a moment ago, this bill relates to the one man who was damaged who has not been paid. Many years ago $75,000 was appropriated by this Congress to pay the other claimants.

If you will turn to page 65 of the report, you will find that the committee report makes reference to the matter of insurance. It states:

Because such buildings were of frame construction the insurance rates were exceptionally high, which explains the absence of insurance and also the damage done in so short a time.

Mr. Speaker, this is just another case of bureaucratic refusal to take responsibility, and this time it occurred in the War Department. The city did make this contract. The water came down from the mountains by gravity. No other serious fire ever happened at Lawton, because the amount of water and the gravity pressure was sufficient to take care of the situation.

Between the city and the mountains where the lake was located was a cut-off to the camp. On page 64 the committee report states:

The city of Lawton was to keep a water guard at a cut-off on said pipe line at the edge of said city to control the water in case of fire at Fort Sill, and the military authorities were to keep a water guard at the junction point where the water was diverted from the main pipe line to said Camp Doniphan to control the water supply in case of fire at Lawton, and as in such agreement provided.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. Where can I find that agreement in the Record?

Mr. DISNEY. It is in the committee report, and that has always been my understanding; but let me now proceed. I did not interrupt the gentleman. I do not want to be discourteous, but my time is limited.

There was a cut-off between the city and the lake where the water supply came from, and that cut-off went to the camp. As I understand it, there was a cut-off at the city, and there was to be a guard at each place. Where the authority for that is I cannot turn to immediately, but that was the practical situation.

When the fire broke out, as you will see if you will turn to page 72 of the report, the people of the city put in three-quarters of an hour trying to get somebody out at the camp to assume authority for turning the cut-off to let all the water go to the city of Lawton. It was one of those circumstances where nobody at Camp Doniphan would assume the authority to do the thing that was necessary, and it seems undisputed about the amount of time that was put in on that effort. The committee concluded that in the event that much time had not been consumed in that way, the full pressure of that 16-inch main would have averted the damage done by the fire, and the fire could have been put out. Somebody out at Camp Doniphan headquarters simply refused to accept the responsibility for going out there and turning on the cut-off to give all the water to the city.

This is all that is involved here, and every honest effort was made by the people in Lawton by telephone and otherwise. They even dispatched a messenger to go out to the camp to try to get something done, but, still, the Army moving slowly, in the case of this fire, after its own written contract had been entered into with the city, took 45 minutes to turn the water into the regular main.

I do not know of anything more that I can say. I do not see any reason for punishing this particular man by having him sustain a loss of $1,500, just because nobody at Camp Doniphan would assume the responsibility of turning this cut-off. The city did all it could while the Army did not do all it properly should have done.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say that I am familiar with this entire situation. I introduced the first bill with respect to the Lawton fire. I do not know this particular claimant, and I do not know whether there was any delay in the matter or not—

Mr. DISNEY. Let me interrupt there to say that this man was away for 10 or 12 years and did not know what had been done. He filed his claim originally, but it was left out because they could not locate him at the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That answers that part of the inquiry. I do know that it is a very just claim. I have never seen a worthier claim than the Lawton fire claim. I am thoroughly familiar with the entire history of the matter and this House passed a bill a few years ago, without a dissenting vote, to give the other claimants their just relief.

Mr. DISNEY. This bill has passed the Senate twice.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XXII—(S. 766. For the relief of the Missoula Brewing Co.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to the Missoula Brewing Co., of Missoula, Mont., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,250, representing the amount paid for 10 fermented malt liquor stamps of the 25-barrel denomination which were lost in the mail prior to their receipt by the said company: Provided, That the Missoula Brewing Co. shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in a penal sum of double the amount paid for such stamps, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the stamps herein described: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 26, line 11, after the word "Treasury", strike out the word "is" and insert "be, and he is hereby"; and in line 14, after "$1,250", strike out the words "representing the amount paid" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States because of payments of said amount."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Costello: Beginning on page 26, line 9, strike out all of title XXII.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the payment of $1,250 to the Missoula Brewing Co. The company alleges a loss of 10 malt-liquor stamps through the mails.

The Members will observe that the committee report sets forth the postal regulations regarding the purchase of stamps through the mails, and it reads as follows:

Orders for stamps must be accompanied by cash, post-office money order, or certified check, and such stamps will be transmitted by ordinary mail, unless otherwise directed. If ordered to be forwarded by registered mail, money or postage stamps to pay the registry fee must also accompany the order. Stamps may also be forwarded by express at the expense of the taxpayer, but when transmitted by express, or by mail in any manner, it will be at the risk of the party ordering them. Government officers shall not be permitted to carry stamps from the collector's office to the brewer, nor shall Government officers at any other time have custody of uncanceled stamps.

The report states:

It appears, therefore, that the Missoula Brewing Co. had two direct and clear warnings that if the stamps were sent by ordinary mail it would be at its own risk. Notwithstanding those warnings, the company allowed the stamps to be sent to it by ordinary mail, with the result that stamps valued at $1,250 have been lost.

The company sent in their request for the stamps. They failed to enclose any money to cover the cost of registration for the return of those stamps to the brewing company. It appears that the claimant company had two direct and clear warnings that if the stamps were sent by ordinary mail it would be at its own risk.

These stamps have no identifying mark and the fact that these stamps are used by someone else can never be determined, and therefore it would be of no value for the brewing company to put up a bond to indemnify the Government in the event the stamps should make their appearance. The stamps could not be identified if they did appear.

I also wish to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that less than 2 weeks ago we received a veto message, on a very similar bill, providing for reimbursement for stamps in the sum of $2,500, and the President made this statement:

Unused documentary stamps in circulation, even though temporarily lost or misplaced, may, if found, be used to satisfy a stamp-tax liability; therefore, to refund money paid to collectors for temporarily lost or misplaced stamps would open the door to frauds upon the revenue. A knowledge of the denomination and serial number of such stamp would in itself afford no guaranty that they would not be later used by the finder or by some innocent purchaser.

In this case the stamps had the serial numbers on them. In the bill before us there were no identifying marks of any kind.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, as I understand the facts delineated by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] with reference to the veto message of the President, it had to do with stamps that were lost or misplaced in the office. I do not understand it had to do with stamps that had been placed in the United States mail by the Government to transport them to the place of intended use.

The gentleman from Montana, Congressman THORKELOSON, has given me a very clear statement of the facts. This bill has passed the Senate and received very careful consideration from the Committee on Claims, and that committee has reported the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, with the committee amendments which have already been adopted.

The bill, as has been suggested, is for an amount to recompense the Missoula Brewing Co., which is engaged in the brewing business, in the sum of $1,250. The company ordered the stamps from the Helena revenue office at Helena, Mont., in the sum of $1,250, 10 stamps of $125 each. They sent their check in payment thereof. There is not any question, there is not a scintilla of evidence to the contrary but what the United States Government received $1,250 from the Missoula Brewing Co.

Then it is claimed by the United States Treasury Department these stamps were placed in the mail to be sent to Missoula to be used for the purpose of purchase. En route somehow these stamps were lost. In other words, the Missoula Brewing Co. never received the stamps, and as the revenue laws do not provide any method by which the company may be reimbursed, this bill is the only remedy that the brewing company has to recover the $1,250 that it paid for the stamps.

There is not a scintilla of evidence in the record to show that these stamps were ever found or that they will ever be found or ever have been used. In addition to that, the United States Government is protected by a surety bond in the penal sum of double the amount claimed, namely, $2,500, in the event the stamps are ever found and used to the Government's disadvantage.

Mr. ROBSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. ROBSON of Kentucky. How would the Government know whether or not those stamps had been found and used?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am glad the gentleman brought that point out. There is a check-up in the manner in which the business is conducted by the Missoula Brewing Co., and, in fact, all breweries.

First, the stamps are ordered from the deputy internal-revenue collector at Helena, Mont. The law requires that all Montana brewers, for instance, purchase tax-paid stamps from that office.

When the stamps are received by the breweries, entry must be immediately made on the books, describing the number and denomination of each stamp received, and those book entries must at all times correspond with a similar sales record kept by the deputy collector regarding sales to the breweries.

Third, monthly reports on all beer brewed, as well as all beer sold, are made.

Fourth, the beer run off from tanks to bottles passes through a Government meter, which is locked and sealed by the Government inspector, and the barrelage must correspond with the book entries of stamps purchased and with the deputy collector's record of stamp sales to us.

In other words, it would be utterly impossible for that brewery or any other brewery to receive those stamps and use them without the United States Government being apprised.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. But my point is, if they got out and somebody else got them in some other State, could they be used?

Mr. O'CONNOR. They have a record of the sale of these stamps. They have serial numbers. If those stamps were used by any other brewery, to the detriment of the United States Government, the Government is protected in this bond that I spoke of in the penal sum of $2,500, which was filed pursuant to the terms of the bill.

Fifth, Form 139, Internal Revenue Service, revised June 1935, must be made and filed on transfer of beer from brewery to bottling rooms, and actual stamps canceled, attached thereto, are taken up by Government inspectors at frequent intervals, usually once or twice a month, and these reports must likewise correspond with our records of stamps purchased and the collector's record of stamp sales to us.

I hope the amendment will be rejected.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment. The Clerk read, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: On page 26, line 18, after the words "denomination which", strike out the word "were" and insert in lieu thereof "are alleged to have been."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in offering this amendment is simply to clarify some language. The bill states that the stamps were lost in the mail. I am simply making it an allegation that they are alleged to have been lost in the mail, in view of the fact that they might not have been lost in the mail.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I suggest, in opposition to the amendment—and it is really not important—that these stamps were lost in the mail, and there is no evidence to the contrary. I think that the language of the bill is sufficiently explicit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

For the relief of the legal guardian of Roy D. Cook, a minor. The Clerk read as follows:

Title XXIII—(S. 1157. For the relief of the legal guardian of Roy D. Cook, a minor)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal guardian of Roy D. Cook, a minor, the sum of $2,500, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for injuries suffered in an accident caused by the falling of a large United States mail box at Thirty-ninth and Hazelfern Place, in Portland, Oreg., on or about January 12, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding.

Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 27, line 20, strike out "the sum of $2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "of Portland, Oreg., the sum of $1,000."

Page 28, beginning in line 5, after the word "Provided", strike out all down to and including the figure "$1,000", in line 17, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: Page 25, line 15, strike out all of title XXIII.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I think the House is weary of the Private Calendar; I know I am. This is the last item, and I will be very brief in explaining why I object to it. I think I can best do this by reading a paragraph from the report of the Postmaster General on this case:

The evidence disclosed in the investigation of this case showed that the injured boy was roller skating down an incline and going at a rapid speed as he approached a corner. As the boy got to the corner he noticed a car coming, and he deliberately steered into a storage mail box in order to break his speed. As he grasped hold of the box his feet shot out from under him and he pulled the box over on top of him. The investigation further disclosed that roller skating on the sidewalks of Portland is prohibited by local law. Mr. Floyd D. Cook, father of the injured boy, presented a claim against the Department under the provisions of 5 United States Code 392, as amended, which, after careful consideration, it was found necessary to disallow on the ground that the evidence did not establish that responsibility rested with the Government.

That is the whole story. This 8-year-old boy was roller skating on a sidewalk down hill when he saw an automobile coming into the intersecting street. He had either to fall down, crash into a tree, hit the automobile, or grab this mail box. He chose to run into the mail box. It fell over, and he was injured. The poor little fellow was in a tight spot, and he was bound to get hurt; but I cannot see that the Government is at fault in any way.

The only alleged neglect or failure is that the Government should have anchored that mail box to the ground or bolted it to the sidewalk and failed to do so. If that had been done the little boy would have been even more grievously injured than he was, he might have had his skull cracked. As it was, the impact of his little body knocked the box over and he was injured, but there was no way of escaping an injury in his predicament.

I am not going to take any more time on this—you are the jury. The question is, Was the Government negligent in having the mail box at that point, at the intersection of two streets, and failing to anchor it to the sidewalk?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield.

Mr. COSTELLO. I merely wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that while the amount of this particular individual claim amounts to only $1,000, actually the total amount involved in this one omnibus bill is $2,417,311.25. Two bills, however, have been stricken from this omnibus bill and as a result the amount of $1,395,230.62 has been stricken from the bill. There still remains, however, a minimum of $1,022,080.63. I mention these figures merely to bring to the attention of the House how these bills climb up to sizable figures when a few of them are added together, even though some of the individual bills may be as small as $1,000.

Mr. HANCOCK. Many small items added together make a substantial total. The gentleman from California and those of us who watch this Private Calendar do our utmost to hold the totals down. We are usually defeated, but we accept that with good grace. We are merely trying to call attention to what we think are the weaknesses of these private bills. We leave the decision, of course, entirely to your good judgment.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, this boy was 8 years old, and of course this heavy mail box in a tilting position ready to fall was an attractive nuisance. It was a large mail box, not one of these small mail boxes, but one of the type that weighs between 120 and 300 pounds. It was provided with four legs and provision was made in the bottom of the legs for bolting it down so it could be made stationary and not slide or tip over. It was placed in a residential district of the city of Portland. This little lad 8 years old was playing on the sidewalk, not in the street. Accidentally he bumped into this mail box and it tipped over on top of him. Because it was resting on sloping ground, not level, it did not take very much to tip it over. It was so unstable that when his little body was pushed against it it fell over, fell on top of him, and very nearly killed him. Here is what the committee found his injuries were:

1. Broke out four upper teeth.
2. Remainder of teeth in upper jaw loosened.
3. Fractured right upper jaw.
4. Dislocated right jaw.
5. Fractured chin.
6. Cut in chin requiring five stitches.
7. Cut in lower lip on right side, requiring five additional stitches.
8. Fractured lower jaw on left side.
9. Many other bruises about head, face, and body.

The committee also found that the doctors' and hospital bills amounted to practically $1,000, which is the amount our committee is recommending, although the bill passed the Senate twice for $2,500.

Unquestionably a lawyer will recognize that the Government was liable in placing a large, heavy box of that sort in such an unstable position in a residential district, where children played on the sidewalk. It was placed in a leaning position with two legs on the cement sidewalk and two legs in soft ground in the parking strip, so that it took very little to tip it over.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. In the State of Oregon, where this accident occurred, this boy would not be guilty of contributory negligence, would he?

Mr. ANGELL. No; not in the least. He would be allowed to recover if this were a private individual and not the Government, who was negligent, in my judgment.

Mr. HANCOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK. The gentleman stated the box was tilted in a dangerous position. I would like to call attention to the extent it was tilted. The top of the box was 1½ inches farther toward the curbstone than the base of the box, which is not a very severe angle.

Mr. ANGELL. In answer to the gentleman's statement, may I say that the Post Office Department itself acknowledged the fact that the box was in a tilting position. Here is what the only eyewitness to the accident testified:

That said storage mail box was so placed that it was standing in a tilting and sloping position toward Thirty-ninth Avenue and was imminently dangerous in itself. That said storage mail box was not fastened, notwithstanding the fact that screw holes are provided in each of the four legs. * * * That said Roy D. Cook was not "going at a rapid speed as he approached the corner," but was going at an ordinary and/or slow rate of speed. That said Roy D. Cook did not deliberately steer into the storage mail box in order to avoid a car. That said Roy D. Cook did not grasp hold of the storage mail box deliberately but accidentally. That the said mail box was placed in a place imminently dangerous and on uneven terrain. That said storage mail box is exceedingly heavy and weighs from 120 to 300 pounds. That said Roy D. Cook was 8 years of age and was not old enough to appreciate the danger of said attractive nuisance.

If the Federal Government wants to take the position that notwithstanding through its negligence this boy all but lost his life and is permanently disfigured, it can escape responsibility, good and well. I hope my Government is more just than that.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I notice on page 178 the Acting Postmaster General states that when the boy grasped hold of the box his feet shot out from under him and he pulled the box over on top of him. That is absolutely contrary to the statement of the opposition, because if the box had been anchored as it should have been, when the boy grabbed hold of it, instead of the box going over on top of him, the boy would not have been injured at all.

Mr. ANGELL. There was only one adult eyewitness to the accident and he has stated the facts as I have already stated them. The Post Office Department admits the heavy box was in a tilting position and ready to tip over, which it did when the boy bumped against it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the various titles to the bill, as amended, will be amended.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to insert an address delivered by ex-Congressman Leiber.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the membership of the House for their consideration of the various items in the omnibus claims bill just passed. I call the attention of the Members to the fact that these bills are carefully scrutinized by the Committee on Claims. We go into these matters very carefully and every Member of that Committee has the interest of the Government at heart just as well as any other Member of the House. It is unfortunate indeed that after the committee labors many, many hours on these bills, reading through voluminous files and written evidence, and then brings them in for consideration, some Member who goes over the report very casually, picks out some specific sentence and makes that the basis of an objection. To show how misleading these statements can be, the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] just called attention to the fact that this bill originally carried some $2,000,000, and that a little over a million dollars was stricken from the bill. This bill as actually passed carries an appropriation of less than $50,000. Of course, if you include in the bill the contemplated amounts involved in jurisdictional matters, it will result in a different amount. One of these bills has in it an amount of approximately $800,000. However, that is a matter for the Court of Claims to determine. It has to find whether that is the correct amount to which the claimant is entitled, if anything. It is misleading to point out to the Members that the House has just passed a bill providing for appropriations of over a million dollars when, as a matter of fact, the actual amount of money appropriated in the 20 items favorably acted upon totals $47,796.05. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to insert in connection therewith a letter from Vilhjalmur Stefansson on the superiority of the clothing worn by the Finns over that worn by the Russians.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from a Philadelphia paper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow at the close of the legislative program in order for the day I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein speeches made by Messrs. Warden and Hagie with reference to the sugar problem.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL]?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs or any subcommittee thereof may be permitted to sit during sessions of the House throughout the balance of the week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

MEETING OF WAR VETERANS IN CONGRESS

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 seconds in order to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock in the room of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation will be held a meeting of all veterans in Congress of any war. It is quite important that all of you be there for the election of officers.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, in my remarks this morning commemorating the birth of William McKinley, I obtained permission to insert certain material. I find this matter may consume a little more than the permissible space in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding this fact I may be permitted to include this material in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHIFFLER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein some information received from the Public Works Administration pertaining to hospitals.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein an address delivered by my constituent, The Assistant Secretary of War, Hon. Louis Johnson, on Lessons From Finland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday evening I spoke at the Olympia before the Detroit Committee for Law and Order, and had the pleasure of introducing my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, NOAH M. MASON. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein the address of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

STEAMSHIP "CITY OF FLINT"

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD by including a statement by Captain Gainard, of the City of Flint, appearing in yesterday's Washington Evening Star.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, for more than 300 years the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has had reason to be proud of her seafaring men and of the masters who have commanded vessels in the merchant marine and Navy.

Today the old Bay State can point with pride again to the accomplishments of her sailors. On Saturday, at Baltimore, the City of Flint ended a voyage which may well be termed a "saga of the seas." The events experienced by the master and the crew of this freighter read like a best-selling adventure story worthy the pen of a Joseph Conrad.

I am especially proud of the fine record made by the ship because two of its officers are residents of my congressional district. Capt. Joseph A. Gainard, the master of the ship, lives in the city of Melrose, Mass., while Assistant Engineer Harry Thistle is a resident of Lowell.

We all owe these men a tremendous debt of gratitude for the manner in which they conducted themselves during dramatic and trying days, thousands of miles away from home, when decisions had to be made upon one's own responsibility—and they were decisions upon which depended to a greater extent than most of us realize the national safety of our Government.

To Captain Gainard should go especial thanks for the manner in which he conducted himself, for the control he exercised over his crew, and for the good old Yankee common sense he used in dealing with situations fraught with danger not only to himself and his crew but to the diplomatic safety of his country, danger which many perhaps cannot imagine.

No master of recent years has had to face such trying difficulties as he; none has been called upon to make such tremendous decisions without outside aid or advice, and I think you will agree with me that no one could have done it better.

I shall not attempt to recite the adventures of the master and the crew of the City of Flint. The story is known to most of you. However, Captain Gainard has told me some of the trying details, and in telling of them he is loud in praise of his officers and crew for the manner in which they performed their duties and for their courage in the face of adversity and danger. There were times when it was exceedingly difficult for them to restrain themselves, to keep from retaking the ship from the Germans. As Captain Gainard said:

There would have been real trouble at any time I wanted it. My crew was ready to go or to stop, as I gave the word.

He knew that resistance would give the Germans the right to keep the ship and the crew, and that such an act would peril every other American ship the Germans might encounter in the future. He impressed upon his men the necessity of conducting themselves so as to stay within the rules and let the United States Government take care of things later.

In speaking of his experiences in Norway, after the ship had been released from its German captors, Captain Gainard gave high praise to the United States Minister, Florence Jaffray Harriman, saying that she had demonstrated fully her ability in a diplomatic post.

Through all of his dangerous and trying experiences Captain Gainard had the full support and encouragement of his wife, who at the moment hears my words of appreciation of her husband. She came from their Melrose home to Baltimore on Saturday to greet him. She is justly proud of the Captain's fine record. She is a charming, unassuming gentlewoman and teacher who must be very proud of her husband's splendid accomplishment. We all join her in gratitude and thanksgiving that her gallant husband is back on American soil and spared to the United States we hope for many years of distinguished service for his country.

What a wonderful, fine example of service Captain Gainard has set for the youth of the country. He is especially fond of boys and is a tremendous inspiration to them. I thank God for men of the caliber of Captain Gainard. [Applause.]

1326. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting two supplemental estimates of appropriation for the Panama Canal, for the fiscal year 1940, to remain available until expended, amounting to $233,500, as supplemental and in addition to the amounts contained under the same heads in the Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940 (H. Doc. No. 587); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1327. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting five supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of State, for the fiscal year 1940, amounting to $617,690, and a draft of a proposed provision pertaining to the appropriation "Salaries, Ambassadors, and Ministers," of that Department (H. Doc. No. 600); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1328. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of State, for the fiscal year 1940, amounting to $500,000 (H. Doc. No. 601); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1329. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 11, 1940, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and illustration, on a preliminary examination and survey of Beresford Creek, S. C., from Cooper River to Bridge Farm wharves, authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 26, 1937 (H. Doc. No. 602); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

1330. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 11, 1940, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and illustrations, on reexamination of St. Johns River, Fla., from Jacksonville to Lake Harney, requested by resolutions of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted March 6, 1939, and the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, adopted March 20, 1926 (H. Doc. No. 603); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with three illustrations.
